THE province of the historian is to gather the threads of the past, ere they elude forever his grasp, and weave them into a harmonious web, to which the art preservative may give immortality. Therefore he who would rescue from fast-gathering oblivion the deeds of a community, and send them on to futurity in an imperishable record, should deliver "a plain, unvarnished tale,"

"Nothing extenuate, Nor set down aught in malice."

In such a spirit have the compilers of the following pages approached the work of detailing the history of the territory embodied herein, and trust they have been fairly faithful to the task imposed.

It has been their honest endeavor to trace the history of the development of this section from that period when it was in the undisputed possession of the red man to the present, and to place before the reader an authentic narrative of its rise and progress to the prominent position it now occupies among the counties of New England.

That such an undertaking is attended with no little difficulty and vexation none will deny. The aged pioneer relates events of the early settlements, while his neighbor sketches the same events with totally different outlines. Man's memory is ever at fault, while time paints a different picture upon every mind. With these the historian has to contend; and while it has been our aim to compile an accurate history, were it devoid of all inaccuracies, that perfection would have been attained which the writer had not the faintest conception of, and which Lord Macaulay once said never could be reached.

From colonial and other documents in the State archives, from county, town, and village records, family manuscripts, printed publications, and innumerable private sources of information, we have endeavored to produce a history which should prove accurate, instructive, and in every respect worthy of the counties represented. How well we have succeeded in our task a generous public, jealous of its reputation and honor, of its traditions and memories, of its defeats and triumphs, must now be the judge.

We desire to acknowledge our sincere thanks to the editorial fraternity generally for much valuable information, which has greatly lessened our labor in the preparation of this work; to each and every one who has assisted us in the compilation, and would cheerfully make personal mention of each, but it is impracticable, as the number reaches nearly a thousand.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10, 1882.

ROCKINGHAM COUNTY, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CHAPTER I.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

ROCKINGHAM COUNTY lies in the southeastern part of New Hampshire, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Strafford County; on the east by the Atlantic Ocean; on the south by Essex County, Mass.; and on the west by Hillsborough and Merrimac Counties, N. H.

Rockingham is the only county in this State that borders on the Atlantic, its coast being about seventeen miles in extent.

Incorporation.—It was incorporated March 19, 1771, and named in honor of Charles Watson Wentworth, Marquis of Rockingham, by Governor Benning Wentworth.

There are thirty-eight towns in the county, of which two were incorporated in the reign of Charles I., one in the reign of Charles II., two in the reign of William and Mary, two in the reign of Queen Anne, George I. seven, George II. thirteen, George III. eight, and three by New Hampshire.

The present civil sub-divisions are as follows: Atkinson, Auburn, Brentwood, Candia, Chester, Danville, Deerfield, Derry, East Kingston, Epping, Exeter, Freemont, Gosport, Greenland, Hampstead, Hampton, Hampton Falls, Kensington, Kingston, Londonderry, New Castle, Newington, New Market, Newton, North Hampton, Northwood, Nottingham, Plaistow, Portsmouth, Raymond, Rye, Salem, Sandown, Seabrook, South Hampton, South Newmarket, Stratham, and Windham.

Rockingham is a shire county, courts being held alternately at Exeter and Portsmouth.

The principal rivers are the Piscataqua, Lamprey, Squamscot, Pantuckaway, and Spiggot. The principal elevations are Pantuckaway Mountain in Deerfield and Nottingham, and Saddleback in Deerfield and Northwood.

CHAPTER II.

CIVIL LIST.

The following is a list of the judges of the highest judicial court of New Hampshire, which by various changes of the laws has been known at different periods as the "Superior," the "Supreme Judicial," and the "Supreme Court," and at present bears the last of these designations:

JUSTICES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT.

JUSTICES OF THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Until 1680, Exeter and Kingston were annexed to the old county of Norfolk, and their courts were holden at Salisbury, Mass. Of course the justices of the Norfolk court are not included in the following list, although some of them may have been from the towns now in Rockingham County. Until 1680 the Common Pleas, a county court, was held by some one or more of the Council and by persons in the province appointed for this purpose as judges. The names of the latter only are given in the list. The counselors who attended at different times were Thomas Danforth, Humphrey Atherton, Capt. Tyng, Maj. Lu-her, Capt. Pike, Maj. Hathorne, Daniel Gookin, Mr. Symonds, Fr. Willoughby, Maj.-Gen. Leverett, Mr. Stoughton, Maj. Thomas Clark, Maj. Willard, Worshipful and Joseph Dudley.

SHERIFFS.

The list of sheriffs prior to 1741 is necessarily incomplete. The following list is from 1683 to 1883, covering a period of two hundred years:

Richard Jose, 1683; Thomas Phips, Theodore Atkinson, 1729; Richard Wilbur, 1722; Eleazer Russell, 1735; Thomas Packer, 1741-71; John Packer, 1771-91; George Bissell, 1791-1805; Oliver Peabody, 1805-10; Josiah Barthol, 1810-13; Silas Botton, 1815-18; Clement Storer, 1818-23; John Bell, 1824-28; Clement Storer, 1828-30; Benjamin Jenness, 1830-33; Joseph Towle, 1833-49; Samuel Marshall, 1840-45; Stephen W. Odlin, 1872; Samuel Rowe, 1874; J. Horace Kent, 1876-83.

JUDGES OF PROBATE.

For many years after the settlement of the province the county court was the court of probate; an appeal lying to the court of assessments. Subsequently the Governors of the province exercised the powers of judges of probate either personally or by substitute. In 1693, Lieutenant-Governor Usher acted as judge of probate, as did Lieutenant-Governor Partridge in 1699. Prior to 1703, Thomas Packer and Nathaniel Fryer had at different times appeared as judges of probate. After 1703 no Governor appears to have acted directly in that capacity.

The following is the list prior to 1693 to 1883:

Thomas Packer, 1693-97; Nathaniel Fryer, 1697-99; Joseph Smith, 1703-8; Richard Waldron, 1708-30; Benjamin Gambling, 1737; Richard Waldron, 1737-42; Andrew Wiggan, 1742-56; Richard Wilbur, 1756-95; John Wentworth, 1763-74; John Sherburne, 1774-76; Phillips White, 1776-90; Oliver Peabody, 1790-93; Samuel Penney, 1793-80; Jerehiah Smith, 1800-22; Nathaniel Rogers, 1802-15; Daniel Gookin, 1815-20; John Harvey, 1826-36; John Sullivan, 1838-48; Ira St. Clair, 1848-57; William W. Stickney, 1857-72; Joseph F. Wiggan, 1872-76; Thomas Leavitt, 1876-83.

REGISTERS OF PROBATE.

The following is a list of registers of probate from 1693 to 1883:

William Redford, 1693-97; Francis Tucker, 1697-99; Charles Store, 1699-1716; Richard Gerrish, 1716-17; Richard Gambling, 1718-30; Richard Waldron, 1730-31; John Penhallow, 1731-35; William Parker, 1735-83; William Parker, 1751-1813; John J. Small, 1876-79; Walter C. Harriman, 1879.

CHAPTER III.

MILITARY HISTORY.

The Second Regiment—The Third Regiment—The Fourth Regiment—The Fifth Regiment—The Sixth Regiment—The Seventh Regiment—The Eighth Regiment—The Ninth Regiment—The Tenth Regiment.

The lightning had scarcely flashed the intelligence to the expectant North that Maj. Anderson and his gallant band had surrendered as prisoners of war to the Southern Confederacy, ere the patriotic sons of Rockingham and Strafford were rallying to the support of their imperiled country. Men and money were promptly raised, and the record of these counties during the whole struggle is one in which their citizens may justly feel a patriotic pride:

The Second Regiment was recruited under the first call for seventy-five thousand troops. The men were enlisted for three months, but before the organization of the regiment was completed the call came for three hundred thousand three-years' troops, and a large majority of the men re-enlisted for the full term. The regiment went into camp at Portsmouth, with Thomas P. Pierce, Esq., of Manchester, as colonel. Upon the re-enlistment of the men as three-years' troops, Col. Pierce resigned, and Hon. Gilman Marston, of Exeter, was appointed colonel, with Frank S. Fiske, of Keene, as lieutenant-colonel, and Josiah Stevens, Jr., of Concord, as major.

The regiment left Portsmouth June 20, 1861, and arrived at Washington on the 23d, and went into camp on Seventh Street. While here the regiment was brigaded with the First and Second Rhode Island, the Seventy-first New York, and the Second Rhode Island Battery, the whole under command of Gen. A. E. Burnside.

July 16th the regiment started on its first campaign, and received its baptism of fire on the disastrous battle-field of Bull Run. Here Col. Marston was wounded in the shoulder by a rifle-ball. In this sanguinary struggle the Second fought nobly, and was acknowledged to be one of the best regiments on the field. Its loss was seven killed, fifty-six wounded, and forty-six prisoners. Of the latter, however, many doubtless died on the field.

Early in August the camp was removed to Bladensburg, and the Second formed the first of a brigade to be commanded by Gen. Hooker.

We next find the regiment on the Peninsula, and in the battle of Williamsburg, where it lost eighteen killed, sixty-six wounded, and twenty-three missing. It soon after participated in the battles of Fair Oaks, Mechanicsville, and Gaines' Mill.

At the close of the Peninsula campaign, in which the Second had ever borne an active part, the regiment returned to Alexandria, and was immediately ordered to Warrenton Junction to reinforce Gen. Pope.

The second battle of Bull Run soon followed, and here the gallant Second added fresh laurels to those already won on many a hard-contested field. The regiment entered the battle with three hundred and thirty-two. Of these sixteen were killed, eighty-seven wounded, and twenty-nine missing. Ten out of twenty-one commissioned officers were killed or wounded.

Passing over many details in the history of the regiment, our record comes to the 1st of July, 1863, and the ever memorable battle of Gettysburg. In this terrible contest, which has gone down in history as one of the most sanguinary struggles of the war, the Second New Hampshire played an important part and suffered greater loss than in any of the numerous fights in which it was engaged.

The carnage of those July days is too well known to need especial mention in this connection. The thin and decimated ranks of the Second at the close of the contest showed only too well the fierceness of the struggle. Before the battle twenty-four officers and three hundred and thirty men had responded to roll-call. Of this number nineteen had been shot dead, one hundred and thirty-six wounded, and thirty-eight missing. That battle clothed many a home in mourning in the old "Granite State." All the field-officers were wounded; Capts. Metcalf and Roberts were killed, and Lieuts. Ballard, Dascomb, Vickery, and Patch died of their wounds. Capt. Hubbard was mortally wounded, and was found within the enemy's lines, where he had been buried by brother Masons. Lieuts. Perkins and Converse each lost an arm, and eight other officers were wounded. Maj. Sayles was also wounded. The total loss of the regiment was one hundred and ninety-three out of three hundred and fifty-four.

We next find this battle-scarred regiment in the memorable battle of Cold Harbor, where it lost seventy either killed or wounded. This was the last battle of the original Second New Hampshire, and it was fierce and bloody enough to fity crown three years of active service.

Dec. 19, 1865, the regiment was mustered out of the service, and on the 23d reached Concord. On the 25th a reception was given the battle-scarred organization, speeches being made by Governor Smyth, ex-Governor Gilmore, Adjt.-Gen. Nath. Head, Col. Herrman, and Col. Peter Sanborn. On Tuesday, the 26th, the regiment was paid off, and the Second New Hampshire passed into history.

The Second furnished many officers for other commands, and as many of these as could be learned are here given:

- Col. Gilman Marston was promoted to brig. gen., and served with distinction in various commands during the war.

- Sergt. Thomas E. Marshall, 1st lieut. 1st U. S. V.
- Capt. John F. Holman 1st lieut. Vet. Res. Corps.

Besides the above the following served on various staff details:

- Capt. Hubbard, Young, J. N. Patterson, G. E. Siles, Carter, Le Go, Locke, Bean, Bohannon, Lieuts. Titus, Wilkinson, Durbin, Frazer M. G. Converse, Surg. Metron, and Adjt. Plafsted.

Besides these many served on staff duty in departments, to which they were afterwards promoted, who are not mentioned here.

The Second saw severe service, and its history is a record of many of the hardest fought battles of the war.

The Third Regiment.—The Third Regiment was the second regiment raised in the State under the call for three-years' troops. It was organized in 1861, and mustered into the United States service between the 22d and 26th of August, by Maj. Seth Eastman, of the regular army. It rendezvoused at Camp Berry, Concord.

The regimental officers were as follows: Colonel, Hawkes Fearing, Jr. He however resigned, and Enoch Q. Fellows was appointed his successor.

- Lieutenant-Colonel, John H. Jackson.
- Major, John Bebell.
- Adjutant, Alfred J. Hill.
- Quartermaster, Arthur S. Nesmeth.
- Surgeon, Albert A. Moulton.
- Assistant Surgeon, B. F. Eaton.
- Chaplain, Henry Hill.

The regiment consisted of one thousand and forty-seven officers and men, raised throughout the State generally, Rockingham County furnishing a few, but no entire company. September 3d the regiment left the Granite Hills and proceeded to Long Island, where they went into camp. Here they remained until September 14th, when they were ordered to Washington, and went into camp near the Congressional burying-ground. On the 4th of October the regiment moved to Annapolis, Md., and on the 18th of the same month embarked on board Gen. Sherman's flag-ship "Atlantic" for Fortress Monroe, where they arrived on the 20th, and Adjt. of the following month found them at Port Royal. On the 9th the regiment landed and went into camp in a cotton-field. From this time until the close of its term of service the history of this regiment is a history of many of the severest battles of the war. It participated in the following engagements: Port Royal, Nov. 7, 1861; Edha Island, March 7, 1862; Bluffton, March 16, 1862; Jehosse, April 10, 14, and 17, 1862; James Island, June 8, 1862; Secessionville, June 16, 1862; Pocolatigo, Oct. 22, 1862; May River, Jan. 7, 1863; Stone Inlet, April 7, 1863; Morris Island, July 10, 1863; Fort Wagner, July 18, 1863; siege of Wagner, July 18 to Sept. 7, 1863; Siege of Sumter, Sept. 7, 1863, to March 1, 1864; Pilatka, April 3, 1864; Chester Station, May 9, 1864; Drury's Bluff, May 13 to 16, 1864; Bermuda Hundred, May 18, 1864; Wier Bottom Church, June 2, 1864; Petersburg, June 9, 1864; Hatcher's Run, June 16, 1864; Flusnell's Mills, Aug. 16, 1864; siege of Petersburg, Aug. 16, 1864; New Market Heights, Sept. 29, 1864; demonstration towards Richmond, Sept. 29 and Oct. 1, 1864; New Market Road, Oct. 7, 1864; Darbytown Road, Oct. 13, 1864; Charles City Road, Oct. 27, 1864; Fort Fisher, Jan. 15, 1865; Sugar-Loaf Hill, Feb. 11, 1865; Wilmington, Smith's Creek, and Northeast Ferry.

During its term of service the regiment had on its rolls eighteen hundred and eighteen men. One hundred and ninety were killed in battle or died of wounds, one hundred and thirty-seven died of disease. Mustered out July 20, 1865.

The Fourth Regiment.—This regiment was mustered into the service Sept. 18, 1861, with Thomas J. Whipple, of Laconia, as colonel; Louis Bell, of Farmington, lieutenant-colonel; and Jeremiah D. Drew, of Salem, as major. Company A was enlisted at Dover, Company F at Great Falls, and Company H at Salem. Col. Whipple resigned in 1862, and May 16, 1862, Lieut.-Col. Bell was commissioned colonel, and was killed at Fort Fisher, Jan. 15, 1865. Jeremiah D. Drew, of Salem, was commissioned lieutenant-colonel Dec. 1, 1863. Charles W. Sawyer, of Dover, was made major in 1863, and died of wounds June 22, 1864. George F. Towle, of Portsmouth, was commissioned major Jan. 3, 1865. Henry F. Wiggin, of Dover, was commissioned adjutant Sept. 12, 1864.

The Fourth left Manchester for Washington on the 27th of September, under command of Col. Whipple, and on Monday, the 30th, they arrived at the Federal capital, and encamped on the Bladensburg road about a mile and a half from the city, where they were armed with Belgian rifles, and at once put to drilling.

Here the regiment remained until October 9th, when it proceeded to Annapolis, and after ten days' sojourn at that place they embarked on board the steamer "Baltic," and on the morning of the 7th of November landed at Hilton Head. Here the regiment remained about three months.

Early in January, 1862, the chaplain, M. W. Willis, was discharged on account of ill health. On the 21st of the same month the Fourth with other regiments sailed from Hilton Head on an expedition down the coast. The Fourth embarked on the steamer "Delaware," and on the 26th came to an anchorage in Warsaw Sound, Ga. The troops were landed on Warsaw Island, a marshy, unhealthy spot, and remained on shore and on board awaiting the arrival of the navy until the 28th of February, when the expedition started again, and the next day arrived within twelve miles of Fernandina, Fla. Sunday, the 2d of March, it was learned that the rebels had evacuated the place, and Fernandina and Brunswick were occupied by our troops, and the Fourth was encamped in the town.

Companies E and F, under Capt. Towle, were left as provost-guard at Fernandina.

We next find the regiment in the battle of Pocolatigo, where it lost three killed and twenty-five wounded. The expedition, of which this battle seemed to be the culminating point, having failed, the regiment went into winter-quarters at Beaufort, S. C. April 4th the regiment embarked for Hilton Head, and on the 29th encamped on Morris Island, within two miles of the enemy's works.

On the night of the 17th of June, Company B of the Fourth commenced the first works in the last long siege of Charleston. One man was killed by a piece of shell. For twenty-one nights and nearly as many days the regiment constructed masked batteries, working in silence, no one being allowed to speak above a whisper. On the morning of the 8th of July the work was completed. Forty-four guns and mortars were in position, the magazines filled, and the embrasures cleared. Severe labor and want of sleep had so exhausted the men that they were obliged to relinquish the completion of the works they had so faithfully commenced to fresh troops drilled for the purpose. The Fourth joined Gen. Terry's command, and participated in a diversion upon James Island. On the morning of the 10th the batteries opened simultaneously upon the enemy, who were taken completely by surprise. A rebel officer, while surveying our pickets through a glass, suddenly exclaimed, "By —, the Yanks have mounted a gun over there!" At that moment forty-four "peace-makers" rained iron around him. The chivalrous Southerner doubtless left for safer quarters, as he lived to tell the story. The advance was halted by the guns of Fort Wagner, and after two desperate and bloody charges it was determined to take that formidable work by regular approaches. On the same day the Fourth Regiment returned from James Island, and a lodgment having been effected by our forces on Morris Island, the Fourth was selected for its coolness in working under fire to report to Maj. Brooks, of Gen. Gillmore's staff, and in charge of siege-works, for engineer duty.

The regiment subsequently participated in the bat-ties of Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, the battle of the Mine, and its last memorable battle, which has gone down in history as the attack of Fort Fisher.

The second expedition against Fort Fisher was commanded by Gen. Terry, while Gen. Ames, with forces selected from his old division, was to do the hard fighting. The regiments chosen were among the best in the army, of large experience and unchallenged bravery, prepared for the work by such battles and assaults as Wagner, Morris Island, Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, and the battle of the Mine. Every man of the Fourth capable of doing duty was brought into the ranks, and the regiment was commanded by Capt. John H. Roberts. It embarked on the good steamer "Baltic," a sad remnant of the full regiment which had filled the spacious saloons and cabins of the same vessel on the expedition to Port Royal. Once more the transports floated before the long line of sandy mounds known as Fort Fisher. On Friday, the 13th of January, 1865, the fleet moved into line and opened fire. The troops were landed through a heavy surf on a hard beach, about five miles north of the fort. Gen. Paine's division and Gen. Abbott's brigade were sent to prevent an advance from the enemy above. Gen. Ames formed his division across the narrow tongue of land which separates Cape Fear River from the ocean, and moved forward about two miles toward the fort, where he threw up a hasty line of works and made a careful reconnoissance. The bombardment, scarcely paralleled in history, which paved Fort Fisher with iron, continued without cessation till three o'clock on the afternoon of the 15th. The time had now come when it was to be decided whether this, perhaps the strongest of the rebel works, on which the wealth of England and the best engineering skill of West Point had been expended, could be taken; and this little veteran division, consisting of men from New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, and Indiana, led by Gen. Ames, had this momentous question intrusted to their hands. Well may the cheeks of that little band blanch and their teeth set firmly together as slowly they move over the sand-hills, with their eyes fixed upon the deadly work before them. A force of marines at first charged the sea-face of the fort, and were repulsed after a gallant fight. Just at the instant when the rebel garrison were crowding to the sea-face exultant with their victory, and pouring their fire into the retreating marines, Gen. Curtis' brigade dashed forward upon the angle near Cape Fear River, closely followed by Pennypacker's and Bell's brigades. The movement was successful. The gate and one mound were gained, though the road to the former lay over a broken bridge, enfiladed and crossed by a murderous fire. Gallantly leading his brigade, Col. Bell had almost gained the bridge, when a shot struck him and he fell mortally wounded. A moment later and the colors of his own regiment, which he had loved so long and so well, were planted on the first mound of the fort. Thus fell the colonel of the Fourth New Hampshire, dearly beloved and deeply mourned by his brigade. Dignified yet genial, brave yet cautious, never sacrificing lives uselessly, ever ready to share danger and hardship with his men, no influence or peril could deter him from doing his duty, or shake a resolution once formed.

The one weak point in the Malakoff was the gate. The foremost men now gained this, and were speedily reinforced by the remainder of the division, who crept hastily through the stockade while the engineers were at work hewing it down. The great strength of the fort was in its long succession of huge sand mounds or traverses, thirty feet high, each forming a redoubt in itself, with magazines and bomb-proofs, accessible only over the top or through a narrow entrance. The gate and captured mound formed the base of operations against the rest of the fort, though to any but iron-nerved men it would have proved but a slender foothold, for the rebels still had the advantage of superior numbers, twelve mounds to one, and Fort Buchanan below to rake the inside of the work. Admiral Porter kept up a continued and harassing fire. Now came the tug of war. The dash and first excitement of the assault were over; dogged obstinacy and persistent effort to advance in the face of death were the soldierly qualities now called into play. In the narrow limits where the whole division was now compelled to operate, identity of company, regiment, or brigade was impossible. Each man must and did act as though success depended on his own right arm. The fire of the enemy was well directed and incessant. A hundred dashes to the next traverse would fail, and the next succeed. This desperate contest continued till after ten o'clock in the evening, and nine of the traverses were taken. The men were by this time almost exhausted, and the ranks were fearfully decimated. The enemy's fire had almost ceased, when Gen. Abbott's brigade entered the fort, and the remainder of the rebels soon after surrendered. The fierce, prolonged struggle was over, and victory was proclaimed by a blaze of rockets from the fleet and the triumphant cheers of the men on shore. The joy of the Fourth was mingled with sadness at the loss of their beloved commander and a number of tried comrades. The regiment was mustered out, and arrived home Aug. 27, 1865.

Fifth Regiment.—This regiment was organized in 1861, and had one company, D, from Strafford County. Edward E. Cross, of Lancaster, was colonel; Samuel G. Langley, lieutenant-colonel; Wm. W. Cook, of Derry, major; Charles Dodd, adjutant; E. M. Webber, of Somersworth, quartermaster; Dr. L. M. Knight, surgeon; Dr. J. W. Buckham, assistant surgeon; Rev. E. R. Wilkins, chaplain. The regiment rendezvoused at Concord, and October 29th left for the seat of war. The regiment saw severe service, and participated in the following engagements: Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Charleston, Va., Snicker's Gap, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Brandy Station, Gettysburg, Cold Harbor, Deep Bottom, Hatcher's Run, Five Forks, and Farnville. The regiment was mustered out July 8, 1865. No regiment in the service from any State fought better, and few, if any, fought oftener.

The Sixth Regiment.—This regiment was organized at Keene, and mustered into the service on the 27th, 28th, and 30th of November, 1861. Company C was from Rockingham County, and Company H from Strafford. December 25th the regiment left for the seat of war, and upon arrival at Washington was assigned to Burnside's expedition. The history of the Sixth is the history of many of the severest battles of the war.

No regiment from the State and none in the army won a prouder name or made a more honorable record than the gallant old veteran Sixth. No regiment saw more severe campaigning, did more or better service, or was oftener under fire. Few regiments went through the war with so little internal dissension and so much harmony among officers. Few regiments endured the hardships of the service with so much fortitude and so little grumbling, for they were men whose hearts were in the work of crushing out the Rebellion. When at various times calls were made for the names of men to whom medals should be awarded for gallant conduct upon the field, few names were ever given, for the reason that so many had done well it was hard to designate a small number. Captains would repeat that almost every one of their men might be recommended, but it would be invidious to name a few.

The following is a list of battles in which it was actively engaged: Camden, N. C., April 19, 1862; Second Bull Run, Va., Aug. 29, 1862; Chantilly, Va., Sept. 1, 1862; South Mountain, Md., Sept. 13, 1862; Antietam, Md., Sept. 17, 1862; Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862; siege of Vicksburg, Miss.; Jackson, Miss.; Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864; Spottsylvania Court-House, Va., May 12, 1864; Spottsylvania Court-House, Va., May 18, 1864; North Anna River, Va., May 24, 1864; Topotomoy Creek, Va., May 31, 1864; Bethesda Church, Va., June 2, 1864; Cold Harbor, Va., June 3, 1864; Petersburg, Va., June 16, 1864; Petersburg, Va., June 17, 1864; Petersburg, Va., June 18, 1864; Weldon Railroad, Va., July 30, 1864; Poplar Spring Church, Va., Sept. 30, 1864; Hatcher's Run, Va., Oct. 27, 1864; Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.

Besides these the regiment was present at many skirmishes and reconnaissances, which are not mentioned as it suffered no loss. In addition to these there were many days during the campaign in the Wilderness and for nine weeks before Petersburg when the regiment was constantly under fire, and suffered heavy losses in the aggregate. The regiment was mustered out in July, 1865.

The Seventh Regiment.—This regiment was raised by Joseph C. Abbot in the fall of 1861, and December 14th same year was mustered into the service with the following officers:

Colonel, H. S. Putnam, regular army.

Lieutenant-Colonel, Joseph C. Abbot, of Manchester.

Major, Daniel Smith, of Dover.

Quartermaster, Andrew H. Young, of Dover.

Adjutant, Thomas A. Henderson, of Dover.

Surgeon, W. W. Brown, of Manchester.

Chaplain, J. C. Emerson, of Fisherville.

The Seventh rendezvoused at "Curry's Hall," Manchester, and Jan. 14, 1862, left for the front. They remained at White Street Barracks, in New York, about one month, when they embarked for the Dry Tortugas to perform general duty. June 16th the regiment left Tortugas and embarked for Port Royal, arriving on the 22d, and was soon ordered into camp at Beaufort. While here Maj. Smith died of disease. They left Beaufort September 1st for St. Augustine, Fla., where it remained until May 10th. In the mean time, however, Col. Putnam and five companies of the regiment had joined the expedition against Charleston, which proved a failure, and after two weeks returned to the regiment.

The first engagement in which the Seventh participated was the unsuccessful assault on Fort Wagner. This was one of the memorable assaults of the war, and during the hour and a half the engagement lasted the gallant Seventh lost two hundred and eighteen killed, wounded, and missing, with Col. Putnam and four line-officers among the killed. The regiment subsequently participated in the battles of Olustee, Lempster Hill, Drury's Bluff, Petersburg, Deep Bottom (where Lieut.-Col. Henderson was killed), New Market Heights, Laurel Hill, Darbytown Road, Fort Fisher.

The Eighth Regiment.—There were a few men from Rockingham and Strafford Counties in this regiment, but no organization. The regiment was mustered into the service Dec. 23, 1861, in Manchester. The regiment participated in various engagements, the most memorable of which was the attack on Port Hudson, where it suffered more than any other regiment in the army. In December, 1863, the Eighth was changed to "Second New Hampshire Cavalry." It was mustered out in December, 1864.

Ninth Regiment.—There were a few men from Strafford County in this regiment, which was recruited in 1862, with E. Q. Fellows, of Sandwich, as colonel. The regiment participated in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Spottsylvania, the "Mine," Poplar Grove Church. The Ninth saw hard service, and suffered severely.

Tenth Regiment.—This regiment was raised during the dark hours of 1862, when the glamour of military life had passed away, and grim-visaged war stood out before the people in all its horrors. It was commanded by Col. Michael P. Donohoe, who was subsequently breveted brigadier-general, Rockingham County had one company, "G," in this regiment, which was raised in Portsmouth and Greenland. George W. Towle was captain.

The history of the Tenth Regiment contains nothing which need cause any of its members to be ashamed of the organization in which they served, while it is a record of brave deeds and heroic sacrifices of which any soldier might well feel proud. Other regiments from the State may have been through more battles and lost more men, but none ever fought more gallantly or discharged whatever duty devolved upon them more faithfully. With the Army of the Potomac at Fredericksburg and Cold Harbor, and the Army of the James at Drury's Bluff, Fort Harrison, and all the bloody campaign of 1864, its history is inseparably connected, and as long as the war for the Union and its heroes shall be gratefully remembered by the people in whose behalf so much was risked, the story of the Tenth New Hampshire will never cease to be of interest.

The regiment was mustered out June 21, 1865.

CHAPTER IV.

The Eleventh Regiment—The Thirteenth Regiment—The Fourteenth Regiment—The Fifteenth Regiment—The Sixteenth Regiment—The Eighteenth Regiment.

The Eleventh Regiment.—The Eleventh Regiment was recruited and mustered into the service in August, 1862, with the following officers: Colonel, Walter Harriman, of Warner; Major, Moses A. Collins, of Exeter; Adjutant, Charles R. Morrison, of Nashua; Quartermaster, James F. Briggs, of Hillsborough; Surgeon, Jonathan S. Ross, of Somersworth; Assistant Surgeon, John A. Hayes, of Concord; and Chaplain, Frank K. Stratton, of Hampton.

There were three companies recruited from Rockingham County for the regiment, A, B, and I, and one company, K, from Strafford County.

The Eleventh Regiment left Concord on the 11th of September, 1862, and arrived at Washington on the 14th, and was brigaded with the Twenty-first Connecticut and Thirty-seventh Massachusetts, under command of Brig.-Gen. Henry S. Briggs, of Massachusetts, and constituted a part of Casey's reserved corps. Early in October the regiment marched to Pleasant Valley, Md., and was brigaded with the Thirty-fifth and Twenty-first Massachusetts, Fifty-first New York, and Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and was the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, the brigade commander being Acting Brig.-Gen. E. Ferrero. On the 27th of October the Army of the Potomac started in pursuit of Gen. Lee's retreating army, the division to which the Eleventh belonged being in the advance. The enemy was closely pursued and driven from point to point, occasionally skirmishing, without any serious engagement or the loss of any men to the regiment. They reached Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, on the 19th of November, and went into camp, where they remained, drilling and performing ordinary camp and picket duty, until they engaged in the battle of Fredericksburg. The Eleventh Regiment crossed the Rappahannock on the morning of the 12th of December. It was not put into the fight until about twelve o'clock on the 13th, when it was ordered to the Railroad, and thence advanced to the bottom of a slope across an open plain swept by the enemy's fire of infantry and artillery, with nothing to divert that fire, and two or three fences to impede the progress of the regiment and add to its exposure. The order to advance, given by Col. Harriman on the right and Maj. Farr on the left, was promptly obeyed, and they proceeded upon the double-quick to the point indicated, which was not more than twenty rods from the rebel intrenchments. The position was held by a few companies that had preceded the regiment. For nearly two hours they sustained a tremendous fire from the enemy's strongholds, nearly alone. The enemy were well protected by their intrenchments, while the regiment was considerably below them, and only partially protected when flat upon the ground by the character of the slope. The men were ordered to lie down and load, and then stand up, take aim, and fire. Some, however, were so eager for the fray and reckless of consequences that they persisted in standing bolt upright all the while. The enemy rushed down the slope several times as if to make a charge, but were met with terrific volleys from the Eleventh and repulsed. Every man stood firm and would not yield an inch. After the ammunition was nearly exhausted, only a few rounds being reserved for an emergency, and when there were indications that they might be called upon to make or meet a charge, Col. Harriman gave orders to fix bayonets. Some of the men, by procuring ammunition from other regiments which had come up and from the cartridge-boxes of the dead, kept up a continuous fire. Regiment after regiment came up, and so the battle raged, the fire of the enemy's musketry and artillery being most murderous and terrific, until after dark, when the regiment was withdrawn. On a single acre, embracing the ground held by the New Hampshire Eleventh, as measured by those who afterwards went over to bury the dead, there were six hundred and twenty dead men. The conduct of the regiment on that day was the subject of universal commendation. The general in command in an address said, 'To the new troops who fought so nobly on the 13th, on their first battle-field, thanks are especially due; they have every way proved themselves worthy to stand side by side with the veterans of the Second Brigade.'

The New Hampshire Eleventh were the only 'new troops' in that brigade, and of course appropriated this high and well-deserved compliment. In this battle the regiment had fourteen men killed, one hundred and fifty-six wounded, and twenty-four missing. Of the latter some afterwards came in, some are supposed to have been killed, others were wounded or prisoners. Many died of wounds not supposed at the time to be fatal. Among these was Capt. Amos B. Shattuck, an excellent officer and much esteemed man.

"The Eleventh Regiment remained at the heights of Strafford until the 11th of February, 1863, when, with the rest of the corps, they were at Newport News until the 26th of March, and then went to Covington, Ky., to protect the people from guerrillas and drive out the rebel forces. They remained in the State at different places until the 4th of June, when they were removed to Vicksburg. Here Col. Harriman resigned, and Lieut.-Col. Collins assumed command of the regiment.

"After the surrender of Vicksburg, on the 4th of July, the Eleventh with other troops started in pursuit of Johnston, the details of which movement are given in the history of the Sixth Regiment. The regiment returned to Milldale, where it remained until the 6th of August, suffering like the other regiments from the unhealthiness of the location. From there it proceeded to Cincinnati, where it arrived on the 14th, sadly reduced in numbers and strength by exposure to the malaria of the swamps in the vicinity of Vicksburg. The regiment marched over to Covington, Ky., and remained there until the 26th of August, when they were successively at Nicholasville, Camp Parke, Crab Orchard, and London, Ky., and were then engaged in the siege of Knoxville.

"After a very tedious march the Eleventh arrived at Knoxville on the 29th of October, and on the 17th of November were joined by Gen. Burnside and his gallant little army of thirteen thousand men, who were closely followed by Longstreet with his excellent force, thirty thousand strong, and the siege of Knoxville commenced. Trenches were thrown up; trees were felled; forts were built; dams were erected on the small creek separating the city proper from North Knoxville, and other preparations made for a defense of the city. The Eleventh shared all the hardships of the siege, short rations, etc., until the night of the 28th of November, when the rebels made an attack along the whole line, and skirmishing continued through the night. At five o'clock in the morning the enemy opened with renewed vigor on the whole front, the object being to capture Fort Sanders, at the west part of the town. Against this Longstreet hurled five thousand of his best troops, who were mowed down like grass by the Union battery. The enemy charged bravely, but it was only to meet sudden death. At seven o'clock the enemy, repulsed at every point, withdrew from the contest, leaving a thousand dead and wounded along the lines, while only ten or twelve men had been killed or wounded on the Union side. In a day or two news came of the victory at Chattanooga, and ringing cheers ran along the whole line. On the 5th of December the enemy commenced a retreat, and troops were sent in all directions in pursuit, who brought in a large number of prisoners. On the 7th an advance was made up the valley to force Longstreet inside the Clinch Mountains, and keep him from Cumberland Gap. After considerable skirmishing the Eleventh went into camp at Lee's Springs, and remained there three weeks. Rations had become very short, some days only a single ear of corn being issued to the men. The Eleventh had drawn very little of any kind of clothing for the five months that they had been in Tennessee, and they could be tracked by the marks of bloody feet while marching. In lieu of shoes, green hides were issued to the men, of which they made moccasins.

"The last of February, 1864, Col. Harriman rejoined the regiment, and was received with much enthusiasm. He had been re-commissioned as colonel of the Eleventh, and had marched over the mountains, a distance of two hundred and forty miles, in command of a detachment of six hundred recruits for that and other regiments.

"On the 18th of March orders were received to proceed to Annapolis, and the troops, after long and tedious marching and railroad transportation, arrived there on the 7th of April and went into camp. The Ninth Corps, under its favorite commander, Gen. Burnside, was reorganized, enlarged, and made to embrace four heavy divisions. Here they remained, drilling, clothing, arming, and organizing, until the 23d of April, when it began another march to the front.

"At the battle of the Wilderness, on the 6th of May, the regiment was under fire nearly all day. At one o'clock the brigade advanced through the Wilderness in good order, in the face of a terrific fire. It passed one line of Union troops lying close to the ground not engaged; came to another similar line and passed that also, when about three hundred Western men from that line sprang to their feet and rallied under the flag of the Eleventh and joined their fortunes with them. They pressed forward with spirit and carried two successive lines of the enemy's works at the point of the bayonet, driving the rebels from their last intrenchments in their front, and nearly out of the Wilderness. In this bloody engagement the regiment lost severely in both officers and men. Col. Harriman was captured, Lieut.-Col. Collins was killed, Capt. J. B. Clark and Lieut. J. C. Currier were wounded severely, and Capt. H. O. Dudley slightly. Lieut. Arthur E. Hutchins, serving on Gen. Griffin's staff, was killed. The command of the regiment devolved on Capt. Tilton.

"On the 12th of May occurred the battle of Spottsylvania. The advance was commenced before daylight. The enemy's pickets were soon encountered. The Eleventh discovered a regiment of the enemy dressed in Union blue, detected their character, and at once attacked them. The fighting was terrific all along the lines, in which hundreds of pieces of artillery and thousands of muskets dealt death on every hand. Among the wounded in this fight were Adjt. Morrison and Lieut. John E. Cram, who at the time had the colors in his hand. The position of the Eleventh was just to the left of where the Second Corps captured the rebel general, Bushrod Johnson, and about five thousand prisoners.

"On the 16th, in a skirmish with the enemy, the regiment lost several men killed and wounded. On the 24th the regiment was under fire at North Anna River. On the 25th and 26th, in picket and skirmish firing, several of the men were wounded.

"At Cold Harbor, notwithstanding the regiment was not used in the offensive movement, the battle being fought mainly by the other troops, it was under fire and a number of its men were killed and wounded, Captain Shepard, of Company I, being among the latter. On the 16th and 17th of June, in an engagement with the enemy before Petersburg, the regiment lost several prisoners, among them Lieut. Dimick. On the 21st Lieut. Little was mortally wounded while on the picket line.

"The months of June and July were spent by the regiment in the trenches before Petersburg, and on the 30th of July took an active part in the celebrated battle of the 'Mine.' Capt. Tilton, who had been in command of the regiment from the 17th of June, was wounded early in the morning, and the command devolved upon Capt. Locke. The result of the attack was a repulse of the Union troops. The Eleventh occupied the 'crater' most of the day, and lost heavily. The colors were twice lost and twice retaken, and were finally torn in two, the enemy retaining half while the remaining half was retained by the regiment.

"In September the regiment took part in the movements on the Weldon Railroad. On the 30th it moved to Poplar Grove Church, and was actively engaged at Pegram's Farm, where it lost heavily in killed and wounded. Among the wounded were Capts. Locke, commanding the regiment, Carrier, and Bell, and Lieuts. Davis, Brown, and Bean, the latter mortally. Capt. Shepard succeeded to the command of the regiment, which he held until the 1st of October, when Capt. Dudley returned from leave of absence and succeeded him. On the 27th the regiment took part in the engagement at Hatcher's Run, where it lost two men wounded and the sergeant-major captured. On the 31st, by order of the commanding general, Capt. Shepard again took command of the regiment.

"On the 21st of November, Col. Harriman returned to the regiment from his imprisonment, and was cordially welcomed. On the 29th the regiment, with the Ninth Corps, moved to the front of Petersburg, where it went into camp near Hancock Station, on the military railroad, and remained there until the 2d of April, 1865, engaged in picket duty, skirmishing, and preparing for the last great struggle. On the 25th of March the enemy made a vigorous assault upon the lines of the Ninth Corps at Fort Steadman at daylight. They took the fort, but an hour later were driven back with great slaughter and a loss of two thousand prisoners.

"On Sunday morning, April 2d, at three o'clock, the grand charge all along the lines, from the Appomattox River to Hatcher's Run, was made. It was a great day and a great battle. The division commander having been wounded during the day, Gen. Griffin assumed command, and Col. Harriman took charge of the brigade, while the command of the Eleventh Regiment devolved on Capt. Dudley. About midnight it became evident that the rebels were evacuating Petersburg. The city was on fire at three different points. Half an hour before day on the 3d an advance was ordered. The troops moved cautiously at first, but hurriedly very soon, and sprang over the rebel breastworks with a shout of triumph. The brigade commanded by Col. Harriman, consisting of the Sixth, Ninth, and Eleventh, and six other regiments, marched through Petersburg with bands playing and banners flying. The common people, and especially the colored population, received the troops with demonstrations of joy, while most of the rich, aristocratic, original rebels were sour and glum. Secession was dead, and this latter class distinctly saw and keenly felt it. The army closely pursued Lee to Appomattox Court-House, where, on the 9th, he surrendered the great Army of Northern Virginia to Gen. Grant, and the four years' war of the Rebellion was virtually ended.

"The Eleventh Regiment joined in the grand review of the Second, Fifth, and Ninth Corps, Sherman's entire army, and some other troops at Washington on the 23d and 24th of May. It was the grandest spectacle of the kind ever witnessed in this country. Two hundred thousand armed veterans passed the whole length of Pennsylvania Avenue, the reviewing officers being stationed in front of the President's house. It has been confidently claimed that, in soldier-like bearing and general appearance, no corps eclipsed the Ninth, no division the Second of that corps, no brigade the Second of that division, and no troops those of that brigade from New Hampshire.

"The Eleventh was mustered out of the United States service on the 4th of June, and immediately started for home, arriving at Concord on the afternoon of the 7th, meeting with a hearty reception in the State-House yard. On the 10th the regiment was paid off and formally discharged. By order of the commanding general of the army, for meritorious conduct in battle, the Eleventh Regiment inscribed upon its banner "Fredericksburg, Vicksburg, Jackson, East Tennessee, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Grove Church, Hatcher's Run, Petersburg."

Thirteenth Infantry.—This was the fifth regiment raised by the State, in the fall of 1862, under the call of the President for six hundred thousand troops.

In its organization of ten companies seven companies were represented: Rockingham, Hillborough, and Stratford each furnishing two, and Merrimack, Grafton, Carroll, and Coos one each. The first company went into camp at Concord on the 11th of September. The whole were mustered into the United States service on the 18th, 19th, and 20th of the same month, and on the 23d the field-officers were also mustered.

Aaron F. Stevens, Esq., of Nashua, who had served as major of the First New Hampshire, was commissioned colonel; George Bowers, of the same city, who had served in Mexico, was lieutenant-colonel; and Jacob I. Storer, of Portsmouth, was major.

On the 5th of October, in the presence of a great assembly, the Thirteenth received its colors, at the State-House, from the hand of Hon. Allen Tenny, Secretary of State, and on the following day left the Capitol for Washington, fully armed and equipped.

Mr. Waite, in "New Hampshire in the Rebellion," says, "It went into camp near Fort Albany, on the south side of the Potomac, where it remained several weeks, engaged mostly in drill. The regiment arrived at Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, Va., on the 9th of December, and was assigned to the First Brigade, commanded by Col. Hawkins, Third Division, Gen. Getty, of the Ninth Army Corps, then commanded by Gen. O. B. Wilcox.

The Thirteenth crossed the Rappahannock River with its brigade on the 11th, and held the lower part of the city. During the greater part of the battle on the 13th the regiment was protected from the guns of the enemy by a bluff under which it was stationed. About five o'clock in the afternoon Gen. Getty was ordered to attempt with his division what two corps had failed to accomplish and had been repulsed with terrible slaughter. He was to carry the batteries on Marye's Heights, the most formidable position in the enemy's line. The division consisted of but two brigades, Hawkins' and Harland's. The former posted his brigade in two lines. The Thirteenth was on the right of the second line. The order to advance was obeyed promptly. The troops moved across the railroad under a considerable fire from both musketry and artillery, and charged up the steep bank, hoping to carry the works which crowned its crest. It was so dark that the line was considerably confused, and receiving a terrific volley when within a few rods from the enemy and the point aimed at, the regiments were broken up and retreated in disorder. The lines of the Tenth and Thirteenth New Hampshire were immediately reformed by their commanders, expecting to renew the attack, but the whole command was soon ordered to retire to the city. The troops recrossed the river on the night of the 15th, and the regiment returned to its old encampment. During the evacuation of the city, and while the remainder of the division retired across the river, the Thirteenth held the Union picket line along the railroad and on both sides of Hazel Run. Lively firing was kept up during the night with the enemy's pickets. It was a position of responsibility and peril, and was held by the regiment until three o'clock on the morning of the 16th, when it was relieved and again joined its brigade. In this battle the Thirteenth lost three officers and thirty-nine men killed, wounded, and prisoners. Capt. Carter and Lieuts. Durell and Shaw were slightly wounded. This was the first time the regiment had met the enemy or been under fire, but it proved the coolness and gallantry of the officers and the bravery of the men.

The Thirteenth shared with the army the cold and snow, the mud and exposure of Falmouth, and suffered severely from sickness of officers and men. It moved with the Ninth Corps to Newport News in February, 1863, and on the 13th of March with the division to Suffolk, where it was actively engaged in the defense of that place against the siege which soon followed, and was under fire most of the time for four weeks.

On the 3d of May a reconnoissance was ordered, and the Thirteenth and three other regiments, with some artillery and cavalry, crossed the Nansensmond on the Providence Church road, and in their advance drove in the skirmishers of the enemy, who retired to their rifle-pits in the edge of the woods, where they occupied a line more than half a mile long. Upon this the Thirteenth, with a part of the Eighty-ninth New York, charged, under command of Col. Stevens, and carried the works at the point of the bayonet, the killed and wounded of the enemy falling into the hands of the Union troops. The enemy were driven through the woods, and a strong line of intrenchments, heavily garrisoned, unmasked. The artillery opened a sharp fire upon the works, which was briskly replied to, the fight lasting until dark. The same night the enemy withdrew from his position, raised the siege of Suffolk, and retreated towards Blackwater, closely followed by the Union troops, who captured a large number of prisoners. The regiment was particularly complimented for its conduct in this affair. Its loss in killed and wounded was about thirty. Capt. Buzzell was killed, and Lieut. Murray severely and Capt. Stoodley slightly wounded.

“During the ensuing summer and fall the regiment was engaged upon the fortifications in the vicinity of Portsmouth, doing an immense amount of labor. It participated in Gen. Dix’s expedition to Hanover Junction in June, suffering much from the exposure and hardship of the march, which was followed after its return to camp by extraordinary sickness and mortality. Companies B and D were soon after placed in Fort Tillinghast, in the line of defenses, where they remained until the following winter, instructed and exercised in heavy artillery. . . The regiment passed the winter in comfortable quarters erected by the men, doing but little severe duty. During the fall and winter the regiment received an accession of two hundred and forty recruits, many of whom were substitutes.

“For the campaign of 1864 the regiment was organized with the Second Brigade and First Division of the Eighteenth Army Corps. The brigade was composed of the Tenth and Thirteenth New Hampshire, Eighth Connecticut, and Hundred and Eighteenth New York, under command of Brig.-Gen. Hiram Burnham, formerly colonel of the Sixth Maine. The Eighteenth Corps was under command of Maj.-Gen. W. F. Smith. From Yorktown the corps moved up the James River, landed at Bermuda Hundred, and on the 7th of May the Thirteenth was engaged with the enemy on the Waltham Railroad, and on the 9th and 10th fought them at Swit Creek, near Petersburg, driving them across the creek, and losing in these operations several men killed and wounded. On the 12th it again met the enemy on the Richmond and Petersburg turnpike, drove them towards Richmond, capturing several prisoners; on the 13th and 14th drove them across Kingsland Creek from their rifle-pits and intrenchments, and capturing their outer line of works at Drury’s Bluff. The regiment was constantly under fire, a portion of it being night and day on the skirmish line, with the remainder in support. The position in the captured works assigned to the Thirteenth, being on the extreme left of the brigade, with the Tenth New Hampshire joining it on the right, was held until the morning of the 16th, when Beauregard with thirty thousand troops in the dense fog attacked Gen. Butler’s line, and surprised and routed Gen. Heckman’s command on the right, forcing it back. The attack commenced about four o’clock, but the Tenth and Thirteenth were under arms and prepared to receive the enemy. The day previous Gen. Burnham had caused wires to be stretched along the front of his command, fastened to stumps, and about a foot from the ground. The rebels made a fierce attack on the skirmishers in front of the two New Hampshire regiments, and forced them to retire, but they were soon rallied, and their line reformed and held until the enemy, being reinforced, massed his troops directly in front of the Thirteenth, and advanced to the assault of its position in three lines, forcing the skirmishers to retire to the main body. The enemy emerged from the woods and moved forward evenly under a hot and deliberate fire. When the enemy reached the wire his lines were entirely broken, when some fled and others threw down their arms. Each successive line was broken as soon as it reached the wire, and met the same fate as the first. The attack was handsomely repulsed by the Thirteenth, aided by the oblique fire of the Tenth. The enemy made two like attempts to carry the position, but were each time repulsed with heavy loss. The Thirteenth took fifty-nine prisoners, principally from the Forty-fourth Tennessee and North Carolina regiments, including the adjutant-general of Bushrod Johnson. About nine o’clock peremptory orders were received from the division commander to retire, the right and left of the line having fallen back, and they were reluctantly obeyed. The loss of the regiment in these operations towards Petersburg and Richmond was thirty-one killed, wounded, and prisoners. Lieut. R. R. Thompson was wounded severely while on the picket line.

“The regiment with its corps arrived at Cold Harbor on the 1st of June, and on the afternoon of that day engaged the enemy, advancing under a terrific fire of artillery and musketry, gaining and holding an advanced position commanding the enemy’s works. The Thirteenth was in front of its brigade, and lost heavily, sixty officers and men having fallen in less than five minutes. Col. Stevens and Capt. Goss were slightly, and Capt. Farr and Lieut. Daniels severely, wounded. On the 3d, the day of the main battle at Cold Harbor, the regiment was in front of and near the enemy’s lines and under fire, suffering severely, but was not ordered to attack. Lieut. George H. Taggard was severely wounded, and Lieut. J. M. Durell received a slight wound in the neck. In subsequent operations at Cold Harbor the regiment was constantly on duty at the front, losing several men, among whom was Capt. Julian, slightly wounded. The total casualties of the regiment at Cold Harbor were: officers wounded, six; men killed, fourteen; wounded and prisoners, sixty-four; total, eighty-four.

“On the 15th of June, in an attack upon Petersburg, the Thirteenth, under Col. Stevens, covered the front of its whole division, and behaved so bravely as to call forth, in the reports of the generals commanding the brigade and division, especial commendation. Gen. Burnham, in his report, said, ‘I threw my skirmishers forward, and assaulted their line, advancing on the double-quick, under a severe musketry and artillery fire. My line dashed across the open field to the enemy’s ‘French rifle-pits,’ which they captured with the entire force that occupied them. Nearly a hundred prisoners were captured here and were hastily sent to the rear, a portion of them guarded by men from the Thirteenth New Hampshire, while others were probably driven to the rear without any guard whatever. Col. Stevens then moved the line forward, and still encountering a severe fire, they dashed across the open plain, through the ravine, and up to the enemy's formidable works, assaulting and capturing Battery No. 5 in a gallant manner. Capts. E. W. Goss, George N. Julian, and N. D. Stoodley, of the Thirteenth New Hampshire, were among the first to enter the battery, and to tempt the officers commanding it surrendered. Lieut.-Col. Council, of the Twenty-sixth Virginia Regiment, Maj. Beatty, and another major, name unknown, surrendered their swords to Capt. Julian, while Capt. Sturtevant, commanding the field battery which was captured, surrendered his sword to Capt. Stoodley. The Thirteenth captured in this work one color, five pieces of artillery, and about one hundred prisoners. The number of prisoners captured in the whole affair could not have been less than two hundred. Immediately after the fort was entered by the Thirteenth, the captured guns were, by order of Col. Stevens, turned and fired on the retreating enemy. The loss of the regiment was heavy. Capt. E. E. Dodge, a gallant officer, fell mortally wounded before the works were reached, and died in hospital seven days after. Adj. Boutwell and Lieut. Gafney were dangerously wounded in front of and near the works, while gallantly pressing forward in the assault. The whole number of killed and wounded in the operations of the day was forty-nine, the regiment going into action with fifteen officers and one hundred and eighty-nine muskets. Two rebel flags, one taken by Sergt. James R. Morrison, of Company K, the other by Corp. Peter Mitchell, of the same company, were sent by Col. Stevens to the Governor of New Hampshire.

"The Thirteenth remained in front of Petersburg until the 27th of August. At the explosion of the "Mine," on the 30th of July, the brigade held the outer position of the Union works in front of the "crater" for two days after the other troops had retired. On the 25th of July the regiment was transferred to the First Brigade of the division, and Col. Stevens was assigned to its command, which he retained until the assault on Fort Harrison, on the 29th of September. This was a formidable work in the enemy's line at Chapin's Farm, half a mile from the north bank of the James River, and about six miles from Richmond. To the First Division, commanded by Brig.-Gen. Stannard, of Vermont, was assigned the duty of assaulting and capturing this work. The division came upon the enemy's pickets at daylight on the morning of the 29th, and skirmishing at once commenced.

"On the next day, the 30th, the enemy attempted to retake the fort, making four assaults upon the lines established by the Union troops, but was each time repulsed with terrible slaughter. In these assaults the Thirteenth received the enemy in open ground. Of their part in these operations the official report of

Lieut.-Col. Smith gives the following account: 'On the morning of the 30th the regiment was again moved into the fort and placed at work on the left, where we were when it was found the enemy were massing on the right, when we were moved to the extreme right of the fort, our right resting on the intrenchments. About twenty minutes afterwards the enemy made the attack. The regiment was almost entirely unprotected during the engagement, but never flinched, and kept up a destructive fire upon the advancing enemy, who were repulsed in every attempt to recapture the fort. After the repulse of the enemy, Capt. Goss, Company I, commanding sharpshooters, captured the colors of three regiments of Clingman's brigade, with several prisoners.'

"The conduct of the officers and men of the Thirteenth on these two days was superb. But again its loss was severe. More than one-half the command which left camp on the night of the 28th had melted away under the fire of the enemy. Two officers and thirteen men were killed, and seven officers and fifty-nine men wounded. Capt. Forbush and Lieut. R. R. Thompson, both brave officers, were killed in the assault and capture of the fort. Col. Stevens fell severely wounded in the assault while at the head of his regiment and brigade, and within a few yards of the fort. Lieut.-Col. Smith, Capts. Saunders and Bruce, and Lieuts. Ladd, Hall, and Wheeler were wounded.

"The Thirteenth was assigned as a part of the garrison of Fort Harrison, now called Fort Burnham, in honor of Gen. Burnham, who lost his life in its capture. It participated with its division in the movement to the Williamsburg road on the 27th of October, but was held in reserve, and its list of casualties was small. It returned to Fort Harrison the next day. In the reorganization of the Army of the James in December the Thirteenth was assigned to the First Brigade of the Third Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, with which it served until its muster out of the service. During the winter furlough prizes were offered to the best soldier in each division. Sergt. Shattuck, of Company B, Thirteenth New Hampshire, received the first furlough granted in a division of over six thousand men, and during the winter the regiment carried off a very large portion of the furlough prizes.

"The Thirteenth Regiment participated in the final movement upon Richmond, on the 3d of April, 1865. Gen. Devens, commanding the division, in a complimentary letter to Governor Smyth, of this State, dated at Richmond, June 22, 1865, speaking of the Tenth, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Regiments, says, 'On the formation of the Twenty-fourth Corps, all these regiments formed a part of the Third Division, to which they have until now belonged, and were of the first column that entered Richmond on the morning of April 3, 1865, the Thirteenth New Hampshire being the first regiment of the army whose colors were brought into the city.' The Thirteenth was mustered out of the United States service on the 23d of June, and came home with the Tenth and Twelfth, under command of Brevet Brig.-Gen. Donohoe. Arrived at Nashua, the officers of the brigade assembled at the Indian Head House, and Capt. George A. Bruce, of the Thirteenth, upon the staff of Gen. Donohoe, in their behalf, presented Gen. Aaron F. Stevens, their old and esteemed commander, a sabre, sash, and belt, suitable to his rank. The general accepted the gift in a handsome and feeling speech, after which he reviewed the brigade, and it appeared so well as to receive the warmest encomiums of thousands of spectators who witnessed it.

"Authority was received from the general commanding the army for the Thirteenth Regiment to inscribe upon its colors the names and dates of the following engagements: Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862; siege of Suffolk, April and May, 1863; Waltham Road, May 7, 1864; Swift Creek, May 9 and 10, 1864; Kingsland Creek, May 12 and 13, 1864; Drury's Bluff, May 14 and 16, 1864; Cold Harbor, June 1 and 3, 1864; Battery 5, Petersburg, June 15, 1864; Battery Harrison, Sept. 29 and 30, 1864.

"The regiment was paid off and finally discharged at Concord on the 1st of July, 1865. Its record while in the service is a better commendation than words.

The Fourteenth Regiment.—This was recruited principally from the western part of the State, although a few were furnished by Rockingham County. It was mustered into the service in September, 1862, with Robert Wilson, of Keene, as colonel. It participated in the battles of Winchester, Cedar Creek, etc. It lost by death over two hundred men and officers, seventy of whom fell in battle or died of their wounds.

The Fifteenth Regiment.—This was the first regiment raised in New Hampshire under the President's call for three hundred thousand nine-months' troops. There were a few men from Rockingham and Stratford Counties, and John W. Kingman, of Durham, was colonel, George W. Frost, of New Market, lieutenant-colonel, Ira A. Moody, of Dover, quartermaster, B. N. Towle, of New Market, assistant surgeon, Edwin M. Wheelock, of Dover, chaplain, and John O. Wallingford, of Dover, sergeant-major.

The regiment was mustered into the service Nov. 12, 1862, and upon arriving at the front was assigned to the division commanded by Gen. Sherman. Their first engagement was the assault on Port Hudson, which is thus described by Mr. Otis F. R. Waite:

"On the 27th an assault was ordered along the whole line. The four companies under Maj. Aldrich, thrown out on the flanks as sharpshooters and skirmishers, did good execution in picking off the rebel artillerymen. The other six companies formed a part of the assaulting column of the brigade, commanded by Gen. Dow, and led by Gens. Sherman and Dow. The brigade covered the south end of the eastern portion of the enemy's works, and lay in line of battle about three-fourths of a mile from the enemy. The intervening distance was level. Just in front was a long dense belt of woods, some sixty rods in depth; then an opening about forty rods wide and one hundred and fifty long, from right to left; then woods again, between this opening and the enemy. There was a gap in the woods about forty rods wide, leading direct from this cleared ground to a broad level space, on the farther side of which was the earth bank of the enemy. The distance from the line of trees nearest the rebels to their works was about a quarter of a mile. On the right of this front was a deep ravine, with steep, irregular sides, running direct to the enemy's works, forming a right angle at the point of intersection. At one o'clock P.M. the brigade was drawn up in the first clearing in front of its position. On the extreme left were several batteries of artillery, which played through the gap in the woods upon the rebel works. The forenoon had been passed in sharp skirmishing along the whole length of the lines; the light troops, covering themselves with stumps, bushes, and everything that afforded shelter, had pushed in many places nearly up to the rebel works. For two days the enemy had not shown himself outside his defenses. The air was filled with Minié-balls, cannon shot and shell, which, however, did but little damage to either side. The artillery opened at one o'clock in earnest, and for half an hour thundered upon the enemy. The fire was tremendous, and the enemy replied with an incessant shower of every conceivable missile. Soon a long train of wagons, loaded with bags of cotton, boards, and long poles, for bridging the ditch, and escorted by three hundred negroes, burst through the smoke and hurried to the front. The brigade was awaiting the order to advance. It was soon given, and they went forward at the double-quick, and met a terribly deadly fire from the enemy. As they pressed on over fences and through scattering trees the men fell in fearful numbers. An attempt was made to correct the alignment, which had become broken, but it was found impossible, and the confusion soon became inextricable, so murderous was the fire of the enemy. The bravest hurried to the front, the cowards to the rear; the whole knew not what to do; to retreat was unthought of, and finally the whole brigade was swept away to the right, and went into the ravine. Those in the extreme advance—and the Fifteenth was largely represented there—seeing their support disappear, leaped into the gorge themselves, while their officers hurried back to arouse the middle and rear. Gen. Dow had been wounded and carried from the field. There was no possibility of reforming the brigade; nothing could be done but push on, surmount the parapet, if possible, and attack the enemy in his teeth. A second advance was made, at double-quick, and when in perfect range the enemy opened his fire, concentrated from more than a mile of his works, direct upon the column, but they did not falter. Lieut.-Col. Blair was in command of the advance. As he started the second time he asked Gen. Sherman for instructions. ‘Lead them ahead, straight ahead, dead on the enemy’s works,’ were the orders he received. The advance was unsuccessful, and the troops were obliged to fall back to the ravine in order to reform. Gen. Sherman, having been severely wounded, was taken from the field by men of the Fifteenth. The command devolved upon Col. Cowles, of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth New York, who rallied the men and attempted another advance, which was also unsuccessful. Col. Cowles ordered a retreat, and fell, mortally wounded, about forty rods outside the enemy’s works. There was one more attempt to gain the works. A common soldier came marching along alone, leading a white horse with his right hand, waving the stars and stripes with his left, and calling upon his comrades to rally, and rally they did. The bank of the ravine was instantly alive with soldiers, the parapet was ablaze again, and the men fell fearfully fast; still they pressed on. The centre and rear of the column did not waver. The advance hurried forward, was nearing the parapet; it was not ten rods off; here Lieut.-Col. Blair fell, severely wounded in the arm. The brave fellow with the white horse pressed forward a few steps beyond, and fell, blood streaming from his mouth. The men who rushed forward had nearly all fallen, and with this ended the fight. At night the troops were withdrawn. The loss was very heavy, one-fourth of the fighting men of the corps.<sup>27</sup>

On the 13th of June fifty men from the Fifteenth, under Lieuts. Seavey and Perkins, of Company H, with the same number from the Twenty-sixth Connecticut, all commanded by Lieut. Seavey, made a demonstration against the enemy’s works. Before advancing they were addressed by Col. Clark, commanding the brigade, who told them if there was a man among them who feared to die, he then had an opportunity to honorably retire, but that they must choose then or not at all. Not a man of the Fifteenth left the ranks, and but one of the Twenty-sixth Connecticut. They were then deployed as skirmishers and ordered to advance across the scene of the late battle, coolly and steadily, towards the rebel parapet, up to it, and over it. They obeyed their instructions until many of them had fallen, when, not being supported, they lay down, and covering themselves as they could, they fought away until dark. There never was a braver act than the charge of that line of skirmishers. The rebels were struck with admiration, and, after they were well up, issued orders to kill no more such brave fellows, but by a sally to endeavor to capture them. But for this forbearance of the enemy probably not a man could have escaped. The loss of the regiment in this affair was thirteen killed and wounded, or more than one-fourth of the number engaged.

The next day another attack was made upon the enemy’s works. Soon after sunrise the Fifteenth, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Blair, followed by the Twenty-sixth Connecticut, marched up the road from a position near the river, which had been reached by a circuitous route of six miles, to within seven hundred yards of the rebel works. Here they formed in line of battle and advanced about four hundred yards, under a heavy artillery fire, and came upon a concealed ravine, filled with fallen timber, underbrush, and brier-vines, which was impassable. There was no path to the right or the left, and after some hesitation the regiments plunged into the gorge. Some struggled through and came up on the other side, but to no purpose. The division remained there during the day, intensely tortured by heat, hunger, and thirst, under the fire of the enemy, but the men were so well protected by the underbrush that but few were harmed. At night the command was withdrawn. The loss in the Fifteenth was two officers and twenty-four men wounded. Lieut.-Col. Blair was hit by a Minié-ball on the arm previously wounded. Capt. J. H. Johnson, of Company D, was prostrated by exertion and heat, and died at his home at Deerfield on the 14th of October. Col. Clark, who commanded the brigade on the 14th of June, in his report of the engagement said of the Fifteenth New Hampshire Regiment, “Both officers and men conducted themselves in a manner worthy of American soldiers. The nine-months’ men have demonstrated by their gallant conduct that they can be relied on in any emergency.”

The siege of Port Hudson continued, both armies erecting batteries and strengthening their works, for several days, without either molesting the other. At length fire was opened simultaneously from each side, and continued for several days; the rebel guns were dismounted and the rebel flag shot away several times, and finally not raised again, though no breach was made sufficient to warrant an attempt to take the works by storm. After the receipt of the news of the fall of Vicksburg, Gen. Gardner unconditionally surrendered Port Hudson to Gen. Banks.

On the 26th of July the regiment turned over its camp and ordnance stores and started on its way home. It reached Concord on the 8th of August, and was mustered out, paid, and discharged on the 13th. When the regiment was mustered out of service, though there were thirty-nine officers and seven hundred and two enlisted men whose names were borne upon the rolls, less than thirty officers and not four hundred and fifty enlisted men were fit for duty. The siege of Fort Hudson and the climate of Louisiana had thus sadly thinned the ranks.

The Sixteenth Regiment.—This regiment was mustered into the service in November, 1862, with James Pike, of Sauborniton, as colonel. One company (K) was recruited in Rockingham County. Though this regiment saw but little hard fighting, it suffered as much from disease, induced by exposure and the malaria of Southern swamps, as any from New Hampshire had done from all causes combined in the same length of time. It was mustered out in August, 1863.

The Eighteenth Regiment.—On the 19th of July, 1864, the War Department issued an order calling for five hundred thousand volunteers, and under this call the State authorities commenced recruiting the Eighteenth Regiment. Charles H. Bell, of Exeter, was commissioned colonel, and James W. Carr, of Manchester, lieutenant-colonel, both of whom resigned before being mustered into the United States service, and their places were filled by the appointment of Thomas L. Livermore, of Milford, and Joseph M. Clough, of New London. Company K was principally from Rockingham County. The regiment participated in the following engagements: Fort Steadman, March 25, 1865; attack on Petersburg, April 2, 1865; and capture of Petersburg, April 3, 1865. It was mustered out in July, 1865.

The First Heavy Artillery was raised in August, 1864, and was mustered into the service with Charles H. Long, of Claremont, as colonel, and Ira McL. Barton as lieutenant-colonel. Company D was recruited in Dover. The following is a list of the officers of this company: Captain, George W. Colbath, of Dover. First Lieutenants, William S. Pillsbury, of Londonderry, William F. Thayer, of Dover. Second Lieutenants, William F. Thayer, of Dover, promoted to first lieutenant Sept. 12, 1864; Joseph T. S. Libby, of Dover; Moses P. Moulton, of Dover, honorably discharged Feb. 15, 1865; Joseph H. Flagg, of Kingston.

On the 21st of November, 1864, Col. Long was assigned to the command of Hardin's division, Twenty-second Army Corps, and the command of the regiment devolved upon Lieut.-Col. Barton. On the 25th Battery A was ordered to Portsmouth Harbor, and in February, 1865, Battery B was ordered for duty at the same place. During the winter and until the muster out of the regiment it garrisoned a line of works ten miles in extent and gained considerable proficiency in artillery drill.

On the 15th of June, 1865, the regiment was mustered out of service, and arrived at Concord on the 19th, where it received final pay and discharge.

Our military history is closed. We have faithfully traced the history of the various regiments, and it has been our honest endeavor to place before the people of Rockingham and Strafford Counties a truthful record of their gallant sons who risked their lives in the defense of their country. We have sought to deal justly with all, and give deserving credit to each and every regiment.

While the history is a record of many of the severest battles of the war, it is not in any particular overdrawn; it is a "plain, unvarnished tale." It has been impossible to sketch many individual acts of heroism, but these were not wanting.

Rockingham and Strafford Counties may justly feel proud of their soldiery, as no section of our country acted a more prominent or honorable role in the great tragedy.

Eighteen years have now elapsed since the close of the Rebellion, and we find our country a united and prosperous people. Sectional strife is rapidly passing away, and the same hand strews flowers alike on the graves of the Blue and the Gray.

"No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laud the graves of our dead,
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray."

CHAPTER V.

BENCH AND BAR.

AMONG the prominent agencies which give shape and order in the early development of the civil and social condition of society, the pulpit, press, and bar are perhaps the most potential in moulding the institutions of a new community; and where these are early planted, the school, academy, and college are not long in assuming their legitimate position, and the maintenance of these institutions secures at the start a social and moral foundation upon which we may safely rest the superstructure of the county, the State, and the nation.

The establishment of courts and judicial tribunals, where society is protected in all its civil rights under the sanction of law, and wrong finds a ready redress in an enlightened and prompt administration of justice, is the first necessity of every civilized community, and without which the forces and press of society, in its changeable developments, even under the teachings of the pulpit, the directions of the press, and the culture of the schools, are exposed to peril and disaster from the turbulence of passion and conflicts of interest; and hence the best and surest security that even the press, the school, or the pulpit can find for the peaceful performance of its highest functions is when protected by and entrenched behind the bulwarks of law, administered by a pure, independent, and uncorrupted judiciary.

The Rockingham County bar has from its beginning numbered among its members able jurists, talented advocates, and safe counselors. Here many have lived, flourished, and died, while others still are upon the stage of action who have been prominent in the advancement of the interests of the county and figured conspicuously in the councils of the State.

PORTSMOUTH.

for so many years the important town of the State, and noted for the extent of its commerce, wealth, and political importance, naturally maintained an able and influential bar, whose members had a large practice, and some of whom were known throughout the country from their political as well as their legal celebrity.

MATTHEW LIVERMORE (son of Samuel) was born in Watertown, Mass., Jan. 14, 1763; graduated at Harvard College, 1722, and went to Portsmouth to keep school and study law. He was admitted to the bar in 1731, at which time there was no regularly educated lawyer in Portsmouth. He practiced extensively in Maine and New Hampshire. He was attorney-general of the province and king's advocate in the Admiralty Court. He was afterwards judge of the Superior Court of New Hampshire, and died Aug. 11, 1762.

WILLIAM PARKER was born in Portsmouth, Dec. 9, 1703, and, after being for a while at school, was apprenticed by his father to a tanner, but on attaining his majority became master of one of the public schools. He then studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1732. He was clerk to the commissioners selected to settle the boundary line between New Hampshire and Massachusetts; was register of probate, surrogate, and judge of admiralty. He was a representative in the Assembly for several years from 1765 to 1774. In August, 1771, he was appointed justice of the Supreme Court, and held this office until the Revolutionary war. He was not only a well-read lawyer, but an excellent scholar. He died April 21, 1781.

WYSEMAN CLAGGETT was born in Bristol, England, in 1721, and came to Portsmouth to serve as the king's attorney-general in 1758. He married in Portsmouth, 1759, Miss Warner, and died at Litchfield in 1784. As king's attorney he was faithful in the discharge of his "duties," but when the "Stamp Act" was promulgated he was one of the earliest to remonstrate. His father was Wyseman Claggett, a barrister-at-law in Bristol. Mr. Claggett was renowned as a classical scholar. In Alden's "Collections" there is a copy of an inscription on an elegant marble baptismal vase in Portsmouth, which is said to have been written by Mr. Claggett. In the war of the Revolution he took sides with the people at the risk of very much of his property, then within the power of the British government.

SAMUEL LIVERMORE was born in Waltham, Mass., May 11, 1702 (O. S.). He taught school in Chelsea in 1750-51, and during the latter year entered Nassau Hall College, N. J., graduating in September, 1752. After teaching for a while he studied law with Judge Trowbridge, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1756. Commencing practice at Waltham, he removed to Portsmouth in 1757; thence, in 1764, he removed to Londonderry, which town he represented in the Legislature in 1768. He was commissioned attorney-general in 1769, then again living at Portsmouth. In 1775 he removed to Holderness. In 1776 he was again made attorney-general. In 1779 he was a delegate to the Continental Congress, and also in 1781. June 21, 1782, he was appointed chief justice of the Supreme Court. In 1790 he resigned his judgeship. In 1789 he was representative to Congress. In 1793 he was chosen United States senator, and again in 1798. He resigned the latter office in 1801. He died May, 1803, aged seventy-one.

JOHN SAMUEL SHERBURNE, the son of John and Elizabeth (Moffat) Sherburne, was born in Portsmouth in 1757, and died in that town Aug. 2, 1830, aged seventy-three. After reading law he began practice in Portsmouth. He was a representative in Congress from 1793 to 1797; attorney for the United States for the district of New Hampshire from 1801 to 1804; judge of the District Court of the United States from May, 1804, to the date of his death. In the war of the Revolution he served with distinction, and lost a leg in battle. He married Submit, daughter of Hon. George Boyd, in October, 1791.

JOHN PICKERING was born in Newington in 1738; graduated at Harvard College in 1761; was chosen United States senator in 1789. In August of 1789 he was appointed justice of the Supreme Court, and chief justice in July following, serving until 1795. Was then appointed judge of the United States District Court, and served till 1804. He was noted for his strength of character, learning, and personal excellence. He died April 11, 1805.

CHARLES STORY was appointed judge of the Court of Admiralty for New Hampshire in the fall of 1696. He sailed from England for Portsmouth late in the same season, and reached that town in January, 1797. On the 19th of January he presented his commission to the President and Council, and it was read, approved, and recorded. In 1699 he was appointed register of probate, continuing in office till his death. His last record bears date Dec. 11, 1774. In 1712 he was attorney-general of the province, and was engaged in many prominent suits. His residence was at New Castle.

JONATHAN MITCHELL SEWALL was born in Salem,

Mass., in 1748, and read law with Judge John Pickering in Portsmouth. He began practice at Haverhill, N. H., and was register of probate for Grattan County in 1773. Previous to 1787 he removed to Portsmouth, where he was register of the Court of Admiralty. He was admitted to the bar of the Circuit Court of the United States, Nov. 20, 1790, and held high rank as a counselor in the courts of the States. His poetic writings have to some extent survived him. He wrote an address presented to President Washington on his visit to Portsmouth, and an oration delivered July 4, 1788. He was the author of the oft-quoted lines,—

"No pent-up Cities contract your powers,
But the whole boundless continent is yours."

Mr. Sewall died March 28, 1808, aged sixty years.

DANIEL HUMPHREYS was the son of Rev. David Humphreys, of Derby, Conn., and graduated at Yale College in 1757. He became a lawyer and a teacher of the Sandemanian doctrines. He came to Portsmouth in 1774, and was United States district attorney from 1804 to 1828, and was a member of the convention to frame a new Constitution in 1791-92. He was in considerable practice, and was a man of unblemished character.

JOSEPH BARTLETT was noted for his eccentricities and wit. He was born at Plymouth, Mass., June 10, 1762, and graduated at Harvard College in 1782 with a high rank in scholarship. He studied law first at Salem, Mass., then went to England. Returning, he was a captain of volunteers raised by Massachusetts to put down Shay's rebellion. After this he resumed his legal studies and was admitted to the bar. He practiced at Woburn and Cambridge. In 1803 he removed to Saco, Me., where he had a good practice. After losing his influence and a large share of his business in Saco by the prosecution of a protracted libel-suit, he for a while lived in Branch, and came to Portsmouth in 1810. He died in Berlin, Oct. 27, 1827. He published an edition of poems dedicated to John Quincy Adams, and while in Saco edited a paper called the Freeman's Friend. July 4, 1805, he delivered an oration at Biddeford. He was a fluent, and at times eloquent, speaker, abounded in wit, which was at ready command, but his habits of life and a lack of firmness of purpose prevented his attaining a position at the bar which he otherwise might have filled. He married Ann Witherell, of Kingston, Mass., but left no children.

EDWARD ST. LOE LIVERMORE was a son of Hon. Samuel Livermore, and born in Portsmouth in 1762. He studied law and practiced his profession in Portsmouth, and was United States district attorney for the District of New Hampshire from 1789 to 1797. Mr. Livermore was a member of the convention chosen to revise the Constitution of the State of New Hampshire, which assembled at Concord on the 7th of September, 1791. His father was president of the convention. He was justice of the Superior Court of

New Hampshire from 1797 to 1799, and subsequently removed to Massachusetts. He died September 22d, aged eighty years.

JEREMIAH MASON, one of the ablest members of the Rockingham County bar, was born at Lebanon, Conn., April 27, 1768. He was a descendant of John Mason, a captain in Oliver Cromwell's army; and who came from England in 1630, and settled at Dorchester, Mass. After graduating at Yale College, Mr. Mason studied law in Connecticut, and was admitted to the bar in New Hampshire in 1791. He began practice at Westmoreland, and removed thence to Walpole, from which place he removed to Portsmouth in 1797. He was appointed attorney-general in 1802, which office he resigned in three years. In June, 1803, he was chosen a senator of the United States, and served with distinction until his resignation in 1817. He also served in the Legislature of New Hampshire, and was president of the United States Branch Bank at Portsmouth. His law practice was extensive, and in his office were many students-at-law. Mr. Webster has said of Mr. Mason that "his great ability lay in the department of the common law. In his address to the court and jury he affected to despise all eloquence and certainly disdained all ornament, but his efforts, whether addressed to one tribunal or the other, were marked by a degree of clearness, directness, and force not easy to be equalled." He was the most adroit and successful in the cross-examination of witnesses of any lawyer ever seen at the bar of the State.

In 1822, Mr. Mason removed to Boston, in which city he died Oct. 14, 1848. While a resident of Portsmouth, Mr. Mason's practice extended throughout the State, and he was retained in the most important cases upon the dockets of the various counties of New Hampshire, and enjoyed a reputation as one of the leading lawyers of the country.

DANIEL WEBSTER, whose fame is world-wide, lived the earlier half of his life in New Hampshire. The son of a Revolutionary patriot Capt. Ebenezer Webster, and of New Hampshire descent for four generations, he was born in Salisbury, Jan. 18, 1782. A feeble constitution pointed him out as fitter for education than for the sturdy labors of the farm, and with self-denial on the part of his parents, and struggle on his own part, he accomplished his wishes, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1801 with honor. His legal studies he completed under the direction of Hon. T. W. Thompson, of Salisbury, and Hon. Christopher Gore, of Boston, where he was admitted an attorney in 1805. He took up his residence at once in Boscawen, and remained two years a close student of his profession and of general literature. In 1807 he made Portsmouth his place of abode, and lived there until 1816, when he removed to Boston. While a resident of New Hampshire he served two terms as representative in Congress.

Mr. Webster acquired a high reputation as a lawyer and a statesman (for he never was a politician) before he quitted his native State. When he went to Portsmouth, at the age of only twenty-five years, he was a mature man, armed at every point for the battle of life. Mr. Mason, then in the prime of his unrivaled powers, describes his first encounter with Webster. He had heard of him as a formidable antagonist, and found on trial that he was not over-estimated. Young and inexperienced as he was, Webster entered the arena with Mason and Sullivan and Bartlett, and bore away his full share of the honors. And before he quitted his New Hampshire home his reputation as a lawyer and as an advocate of eloquence and power ranked with the very highest in the land.

Those who heard his addresses to the jury in his early prime testify that none of his later great efforts surpassed them—if, indeed, they equaled them—as examples of earnest, impassioned forensic oratory. There was a youthful brilliancy and bloom about those earlier productions that is not found in the stately works of his maturer years.

In those days, when practitioners made reputations by special pleading and sharp practice, Mr. Webster relied little upon mere technicalities or adroit management. He tried his causes upon their merits, and with his logical power and eloquent tongue made short work of trumped-up claims and dishonest defenses. Many traditions attest his commanding influence over court and jury at this period of his career. Without being authentic in all particulars, they all concur in demonstrating that on no legal practitioner of his time was the popular confidence and admiration so universally bestowed as on Webster.

The events in the life of Mr. Webster from the time he re-entered Congress from Massachusetts are too familiar to require special repetition here. He continued in public life, with the exception of very brief intervals, up to the time of his decease in 1852. He was a senator in Congress for seventeen years. He was twice Secretary of State, and died in possession of that office. Every public position that he held he adorned and dignified by eminent, patriotic services.

Now that nearly a generation has passed since Mr. Webster's death, his character is beginning to be estimated more justly, and the value of the work he did for the country has been tested. We see that his sagacity and foresight were far beyond those of his time; that his apprehensions for the safety of the Union were well founded; that his exhortations to his countrymen to stand by the flag were honest, necessary, and vitalizing to the patriotism of the people.

The petty assaults that seemed temporarily to obscure his fame have had their brief day, and posterity will recognize the true grandeur of the man, and value at their just worth the great deeds of his lifetime. As a statesman and a diplomatist, as a vindicator of the Constitution, as a lawyer and an orator, and, most of all, as a patriot, the country will be fortunate if the future shall furnish his peer.

NATHANIEL A. HAVEN, JR., was born in Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 14, 1799, and was a son of Hon. Nathaniel A. Haven, and a grandson of Rev. Samuel Haven, D.D. He graduated at Harvard, and studied law in the office of that eminent jurist, Hon. Jeremiah Mason. He was admitted to the bar in 1814, and commenced practice in his native town. High as was Haven in his profession, he had not given to a single science a mind that could compass the circle of them. He had a decided taste for literature, and from 1821 to 1825 was connected editorially with the Portsmouth Journal. He also contributed articles for the North American Review. He was a member of the Legislature in 1823-24. He died June 3, 1826.

PEYTON RANDOLPH FREEMAN was the son of Hon. Jonathan Freeman, of Hanover, and born Nov. 14, 1775. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1796, and began the practice of the law in Hanover in 1801. Previous to this he was principal of an academy at Amherst, N. H. He came to Portsmouth and established himself in practice in 1803. He was Deputy Secretary of State in 1816-17, clerk of the United States Courts from March, 1817, to May, 1820. Mr. Freeman's strong point was his familiarity with the law concerning real property. He was of the old school, and any departure by the courts from the ancient rules of law concerning real estate was a horror to him. He was severely pain-taking and careful in all business he undertook, such as the investigation of titles, drafting of wills, creating trusts, life estates, etc. Indeed, he was so much absorbed in following the intricate phases of cases and titles that his clients after experience in this direction were apt to prefer a man of more practical turn of mind. He was never married. He died March 27, 1868, in the ninety-third year of his age.

EDWARD CUTTS, son of Edward Cutts, was born in Kelley, Me., and was a descendant of Judge Edward Cutts. He graduated at Harvard College in 1801. He studied law with Jeremiah Mason, and after his admission to the bar began practice in Portsmouth in 1807. At the May term, 1809, he was admitted as an attorney and counselor of the Circuit Court of the United States, at the same time with Daniel Webster, and continued in large practice in the State and Federal courts until his death, Aug. 22, 1844, at the age of sixty years.

Mr. Cutts neither sought nor attained political honors. He was a safe counselor, and devoted himself exclusively to the practice of his profession. He was at one time president of the United States Branch Bank in Portsmouth, and afterwards a director in the Rockingham Bank. He married Mary Hurke Sheafe, daughter of Jacob Sheafe, a prominent merchant of Portsmouth, but left no children. His widow is remembered for her munificent legacy left to improve Richards Avenue, a fine street leading to the South Cemetery in Portsmouth.

WILLIAM CLAGGETT was the son of Hon. Clifton

Claggett, and grandson of Wyseman Claggett. He was born at Litchfield, April 8, 1790; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1808; was admitted to the bar in Hill-borough County in 1811, and soon after began the practice of his profession in Portsmouth. He was representative in the State Legislature in 1811, and was several times re-elected to that office. He was clerk of the State Senate in 1820; senator from District No. 1 in 1825; clerk of the United States Circuit and District Courts from 1820 to his resignation March 5, 1825; and naval officer of the port of Portsmouth from 1820 to 1838. His first wife was Sarah F., daughter of George Plumer, who died in 1818. His second marriage was with Mary Thompson, daughter of Col. E. Thompson; she died in 1863.

Mr. Claggett at one time had a large practice in Portsmouth but when he too often became his own client his business diminished and finally disappeared. In 1812 he gave a Fourth of July oration in Portsmouth, Daniel Webster making one at the same time in another part of the town. He was for many years an ardent Democrat, and subsequently became a Free Soiler, and wrote extensively for the press in Portsmouth and Concord after that party's formation. He died on the 28th of December, 1879, at Portsmouth, leaving one son, William C. Claggett, then a merchant in New York City.

ICHABOD BARLETT was born in Salisbury. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1808, and studied law in the office of Moses Eastman in his native town. He practiced law after his admission to the bar at Salisbury and at Durham, and in 1818 removed to Portsmouth. The same year he was appointed solicitor for Rockingham County.

He was chosen clerk of the Senate for 1817 and 1818. He was a representative to the General Court from Portsmouth in 1820 and 1821 (being Speaker of the House of Representatives for 1821), and also served as representative in the years 1830, 1838, 1851, and 1852. He was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention in 1850, was representative in Congress in 1823, 1825, and 1827, and was for many years engaged in many of the most important lawsuits throughout the State. As a lawyer he had few equals; in ready wit and keen satire he was unsurpassed, as public speaker, as an advocate of the bar, and a legislator he maintained a prominent position for very many years. He died at Portsmouth, Oct. 17, 1853, aged seventy-seven, and was unmarried.

CHARLES W. CUTTER, son of Jacob Cutter, was born in Portsmouth, graduated at Harvard College in 1818, and studied law with Jeremiah Mason, and commenced practice in his native town. He was admitted to the bar of the Circuit Court of the United States in October, 1825, and appointed clerk of the Circuit and District Courts March 13, 1826, positions he held for fifteen years. In 1841 he was appointed naval storekeeper, and afterwards was navy agent at Portsmouth. He for several years edited the Port- mouth Journal, and was an effective public speaker in political campaigns, but never devoted himself with much zeal to the practice of his profession. He died Aug. 6, 1856, aged fifty-six years, and unmarried.

TIMOTHY FARRAR practiced law in Portsmouth from 1814 to 1822, and from 1834 to 1836. He was admitted to practice in the Circuit Court of the United States, October term, 1817, and subsequently removed to Exeter.

CHARLES B. GOODRICH. This eminent lawyer was born at Hanover, N. H., in 1812. He was graduated at Dartmouth College, and after a course of study, it is believed, in his native town, he was admitted to the bar. Coming to Portsmouth in 1826, he continued in practice for ten years, winning high reputation in his profession. His talents found a wider field of action at Boston, whither he removed, and where he at once took rank as a leader. Till his death, in the summer of 1878, Mr. Goodrich had few equals at the Suffolk bar in all that constitutes a learned and skilled practitioner. His duties called him not infrequently to Washington, where he was regarded as one of the ablest members of the bar from New England. In 1853 he published "The Science of Government as Exhibited in the Institutions of the United States of America,"—a course of lectures delivered at the Lowell Institute in Boston. In private life Mr. Goodrich was genial and warm-hearted. He married, March 11, 1827, Miss Harriet N. Shattuck, of Portsmouth, who survived him.

LEVI WOODBURY was the son of the Hon. Peter Woodbury, and born at Francistown, on the 22d of December, 1789. He was of the oldest Massachusetts stock, being descended from John Woodbury, who emigrated from Somersetshire in England in the year 1624, and was one of the original settlers of Beverly, Mass. Peter Woodbury removed from Beverly to Francistown in 1773. His son Levi entered Dartmouth College in October, 1805. After his graduation with honor in 1809, in September of that year he began the study of law at Litchfield, Conn., pursuing it at Boston, Exeter, and Francistown, and in September, 1812, commenced practice in his native village. He soon attained a high rank at the bar, with an extensive business. His first public service was upon his election as clerk of the Senate of New Hampshire in June, 1816. In December of the same year he received the appointment of judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and in the discharge of the duties of this position were seen the inherent force of his abilities, aided by his constant and never-ceasing habits of application.

In June, 1819, he married Elizabeth W. Clapp, of Portland, Me., and removing to Portsmouth soon after, except when absent on public duties resided in that city. In March, 1823, he was chosen Governor of New Hampshire, and re-elected in 1824.

In 1825 he was chosen one of the representatives from Portsmouth in the Legislature, and elected Speaker upon the assembling of the House of Representatives. This was his first seat in any deliberative assembly; but his knowledge of parliamentary law, aided by his dignity and urbanity of manner, served to enable him to fill the office in a commendable manner.

At the same session he was elected a senator in the Congress of the United States. His senatorial term was completed in March, 1831, and in that month he was chosen State senator from his district, but before the Legislature assembled he was, in May, 1831, appointed Secretary of the Navy, and resigned the senatorship June 4th of that year, and served till June 30, 1834, in the secretaryship.

In July, 1834, Governor Woodbury was appointed Secretary of the Treasury, and served until the election of Gen. Harrison to the presidency. He was again elected a senator in Congress for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1841. He served until November, 1845. During that year President Polk had tendered Governor Woodbury the embassy to the Court of St. James, but the appointment, for domestic reasons, was declined.

Upon the death of Mr. Justice Story, Mr. Woodbury was commissioned an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and after subsequently entering upon the duties of this high office continued therein until his death, which occurred Sept. 4, 1851.

Judge Woodbury, in the various public positions he was so constantly called to fill, showed himself abundantly capable for the discharge of their duties. As a legislator he was painstaking and industrious, as a judge studious and indefatigable in his labors, and as a cabinet minister comprehensive and yet exact in his knowledge of details. His life was one of uninterrupted work, and his death at the age of sixty-one deprived the country of an upright judge and an eminent public man. Of his children, his only son is Charles Levi Woodbury, a prominent lawyer in practice in Boston, who retains the family mansion at Portsmouth. One daughter is the wife of Hon. Montgomery Blair, who was postmaster-general under President Lincoln, and another is the wife of Capt. Gustavus V. Fox, formerly of the United States navy, who rendered to the country such signal service by his practical knowledge as assistant secretary during the late war.

WILLIAM HENRY YOUNG HACKETT.—One of the last survivors of a school of lawyers who were at the bar when Jeremiah Mason and Daniel Webster appeared of counsel in important causes was William Henry Young Hackett, who, at the ripe age of seventy-eight, died at Portsmouth, Aug. 9, 1878, after a continuous practice of more than fifty-two years in duration. Mr. Hackett was born at Gilmanton, N. H., Sept. 24, 1800. His ancestor was Capt. William Hackett, of Salisbury, Mass., probably the "Will Hackett" who had a grant in 1636, "touching Bel-lemie's bank freset" (now Dover). After receiving an education at Gilmanton Academy, Mr. Hackett studied law in his native town and at Sanbornton Square. In April, 1822, he came to Portsmouth, and entered the office of Ichabod Bartlett. He was admitted to the bar in January, 1826, and soon acquired a good practice, which he steadily maintained up to the time of his decease. He tried many cases to the jury, was retained of counsel by corporations, and later in life was largely employed in the management of trust estates. He had an instinctive knowledge of how to apply legal principles, and a knowledge, too, of human nature. As a counselor, though he warmly espoused the cause of his client, he was prudent and inclined to discourage litigation. He had an excellent memory, and knew what had been decided in the New Hampshire courts and in those of the New England States generally; but he is not to be termed a learned lawyer. He favored the extension of equity practice in New Hampshire, and he lived long enough to see some of his views in this regard adopted. In 1859 he declined a seat upon the bench of the Supreme Judicial Court.

Portsmouth sent him repeatedly to the Legislature, where he rendered important service as chairman of the judiciary and on other committees. In 1861 he was chosen president of the Senate, of which body he had been assistant clerk in 1824 and clerk in 1828. He was eminently successful in the management of a bank. As early as 1827 he was made director of the Piscataqua Bank. When the Piscataqua Exchange Bank was organized in 1845 he became president, and held that office till 1863, when the bank became the First National Bank of Portsmouth, the presidency of which he assumed and held till his death. He was also president of the Piscataqua Savings-Bank, as well as a director in railroad and other corporations.

Mr. Hackett had some literary accomplishments, and excelled in writing brief biographies. A memoir of Andrew Halliburton, and a sketch of Charles W. Brewster, author of "Rambles about Portsmouth" (the latter being prefixed to the second series of that work), are from his pen. All his life long Mr. Hackett was public-spirited and devoted to the interests of the town. His name has thus been identified with the history of Portsmouth for more than half a century. A memoir of Mr. Hackett (written by his son Frank W.) was privately printed in 1879, and a copy sent to various libraries in New England.

HON. ALBERT REYTER HATCH was born in Greenland on the 10th day of October, 1817. He entered Bowdoin College when quite young, and graduated in 1837. The late Governor John A. Andrew, of Massachusetts, was one of his classmates.

He immediately came to Portsmouth, and pursued the study of law with the late Ichabod Bartlett, who was then known all over the State as a great lawyer. Here Mr. Hatch, under the direct oversight of Col. Bartlett, saw a great deal of practice and hard work, and here he laid the foundation of those habits of industry and close attention to his chosen profession which for the past quarter of a century have made him one of the foremost lawyers of our State and a model practitioner.

In 1841 he was admitted to the bar, and was soon in active practice.

In 1847 and 1848 he was a member of the House of Representatives from Portsmouth, then a town, and in 1848 was appointed solicitor for the county of Rockingham, and also clerk of the United States Court for New Hampshire.

Mr. Hatch was in no sense a politician. He was a Democrat from principle, and could never yield his convictions of duty for the sake of policy or of temporary advantage. He preferred to be right rather than hold office. Had the Democratic party been in power in this State he would have been a Governor and a senator, but though his party was unable to bestow upon him the honors he deserved, it never ceased to respect and esteem him, and his advice and counsel were always heeded.

In 1864 he was a candidate for Presidential elector, and in 1868 he was a member of the Democratic National Convention.

In 1873 his extensive law practice, which had steadily increased, required all his attention, and he resigned his position as clerk of the United States Court, having held it for twenty-five years. He then began to devote himself wholly to his profession, to which he was so firmly attached, but his friends urged him to accept again an election to the Legislature, and against his own judgment he was induced to yield to them, and that year he was a member of the House, and being again a member in 1874 he was elected Speaker, which position he filled under very trying circumstances to the general acceptance of all. He was again a member in 1875 and also in 1876. At the same time he was a member of the Board of Aldermen and of the High School Committee of this city, and taking a deep interest in city and school affairs he was scarcely ever absent from their meetings. He was a hard worker everywhere he was placed. The various Masonic bodies of which he was a member also received a share of his time and attention, and he soon found himself overwhelmed under the accumulating burdens imposed upon him.

He was an active member of all the Masonic bodies, and to show the esteem in which he was held among them it is only necessary to say that he was elected and served as Commander of DeWitt Clinton Commandery of Knights Templar for twenty-five successive years.

He was a director of the Portsmouth and Dover Railroad, the Portsmouth Bridge Company, and the Athenæum, and was held in great esteem by his associate directors. He was a vestryman and prominent member of the Episcopal Church of this city, and one of the trustees of the new Christ's Church, in the erection of which he was greatly interested, and to which he gave much time.

In public life no man ever accused him of fraud, wrong, or dishonor. As a lawyer he was learned, ready, fortified at every point, quick to perceive and quick to apply, and of incomparable industry. He was ever true to his client, and no man employed him who did not receive the benefit of every faculty that he possessed as well as having every point in his case presented in the best shape.

As a scholar he was superior, and his knowledge of books and the best literature was remarkable. He had a large miscellaneous library of the choicest works, and his studious habits and retentive memory had made him familiar with its contents.

In social life he was a gentleman in the truest sense of the word. Dignified in his bearing, he may have appeared to those who did not know him well cold and indifferent, but to those who really knew him he was a delightful companion, a man to whom one could not fail to be attached, and from whom one always parted with reluctance. He had many friends, and those who could call him a friend had no need to go farther to find the truest friend that ever drew breath. He died March 3, 1882.

SAMUEL CUSHMAN was born in Hebron, Me., July 21, 1783. His father was Job Cushman, a descendant from Robert Cushman, who joined the Plymouth colony in 1612. After an academic education, he studied law under the tuition of John Holmes, of Alford, Me., and was admitted to the York County bar in 1807, and began practice of the law in Maine, where he was a postmaster during Madison's administration. In May, 1812, Mr. Cushman was married to Maria J., daughter of John Salter, of Portsmouth, and in 1816 he removed to that place, where he resided up to the time of his death, May 22, 1851. He filled numerous municipal positions in Portsmouth between the year 1824 and the time of his death. He was for five years county treasurer, and for two years a member of the Executive Council. He was a member of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Congresses from New Hampshire, in the years 1835 to 1839, was postmaster under the Van Buren administration, and navy agent from 1845 to 1849. In March, 1850, he was appointed police justice of the city of Portsmouth, being the first magistrate under the new city charter. This office he held up to the date of his death. Mr. Cushman was at one time associated in the practice of the law with the late Charles B. Goodrich. He was conscientious in his profession. He discouraged litigation, and oftentimes filled the position of pacificator rather than that of advocate. He was noted for his urbanity of manner, his kindness of heart, and his undeviating integrity. Of twelve children but two survive; one of these is Elizabeth S., widow of Hon. Samuel Tither, deceased, formerly of Sanburton, and at one time United States Marshal for the District of New Hampshire.

The foregoing are sketches of lawyers who have been prominent in profession or political position. There were many of them of perhaps less celebrity as lawyers, but of whom we can only make mention, of them were R. Cutts Shannon, clerk of the Federal Courts from May 1, 1804, to 1814; Leverett Hubbard, at one time judge, who died in 1793; Samuel Hale, Oliver Whipple, who at one time lived in Maine; George Pierce, who died after a short practice; John Hale; Henry S. Langdon, afterwards a bank cashier; George W. Prescott, clerk of the United States Courts from 1814 to March, 1817, and who died in 1817; Isaac Lyman, who also practiced in York; John P. Lord, in practice from 1809 to 1819; Thomas L. Elwyne, who practiced but little from 1813 to 1816; James Smith, Jr., who lived in Portsmouth and Newington, and was more or less in practice from 1820 to 1869; Erwich Evans; Hampden Cutts, who removed to Hanland, Vt.; Ichabod Bartlett Claggett, son of William Claggett, who graduated at Dartmouth College, read law with Ichabod Bartlett, and died March 12, 1861; Horace Webster, son of Hon. Samuel Webster, of Barnstead, who graduated at Dartmouth College, read law with Albert R. Hatch, and died Aug. 7, 1867; John Scribner Jenness, son of Richard Jenness, who graduated at Harvard College, was a student in the office of Ichabod Bartlett, practiced a few years in Portsmouth, removed to New York, and died in Portsmouth, Aug. 10, 1879.

ATKINSON.

Atkinson's only lawyer was JOHN KELLY. He was a native of the neighboring town of Plaistow, the son of Deacon Simeon Kelly, and was born July 22, 1796. He was educated at Atkinson and Exeter Academies, and at Amherst College, where he graduated in 1825. He began the practice of the law in Plaistow in 1829. In 1832 he took the charge of the Atkinson Academy, and retained it till 1838; thence he removed to Derry, and was principal of the Adams Female Academy for nearly four years. In 1841 he removed to Chester, and resumed the practice of his profession until 1845, when he returned to Atkinson, and there resided until his death, in January, 1877.

Mr. Kelly was a lawyer of good capacity, but had none of the enthusiasm for his profession that would have led him into the contests of the courts. He preferred teaching, and was a good deal employed, especially in later life, as a land surveyor, in which he greatly excelled. He was a genial man, fond of social intercourse, and possessed a fund of entertaining anecdotes. He was also passionately fond of music, and entered into the spirit of it with his whole soul. Honest and upright in all his dealings, he deserved and won the sincere respect and trust of the community.

CHESTER.

JOHN PORTER, a graduate of Dartmouth College in the class of 1787, practiced law in Chester from 1790 to 1793, and then removed to Canada.

ARTHUR LIVERMORE was the second lawyer of Chester. He was the son of Judge Samuel Livermore, and was born in Londonderry about the year 1766, came to Chester about 1793, and remained there not far from five years. He was a representative from Chester in the General Court in 1791 and 1795, and was appointed solicitor for the county of Rockingham in 1796. In the latter part of 1798 he was made a justice of the Superior Court, and about that time removed to Holderness, to which place his subsequent history belongs. He held other important offices, civil and judicial, and died July 1, 1853, at the age of eighty-seven.

Judge Livermore's mental endowments were of a high order, and must have been so regarded by his contemporaries to have placed him in the positions of trust and responsibility in which a large share of his active life was spent. And this is the more apparent from the fact that his manners were not of a popular character, and he took little pains to ingratiate himself with the people. He was a man of keen wit and quick temper, but he was honest, and endeavored to discharge his official duties acceptably. He belonged to a family which long took a distinguished part in public affairs in the State.

DANIEL FRENCH was born in Epping, Feb. 22, 1769, a son of Gould French, a farmer there. He received his education at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and after studying law with Hon. W. K. Atkinson commenced practice at Deerfield, but after two years removed to Chester, as successor to Arthur Livermore on his appointment to the bench. In June, 1808, he was appointed solicitor of the county, and in February, 1812, was commissioned attorney-general of the State, which office he resigned in 1815. He held the office of postmaster thirty-two years, from 1807 to 1839. In addition to his legal pursuits he took considerable interest in agriculture.

Mr. French was a man of talents and ample professional learning, and manifested no small share of skill and tact in the management of his business. He was faithful to the interest of his clients, even to the extent, as was the fashion of his time, of being sometimes pretty sharp to his adversaries. He was the father of a large and most respectable family of children.

AMOS KENT was born at Kent's Island, in Newbury, Mass., in October, 1774. He was fitted for college in part under the celebrated Master Moody, of Byfield Academy, and graduated at Harvard College in 1795. He read law with Hon. William Gordon, and was admitted to the bar in 1798. The next year he opened an office in Chester, where he continued to reside until his death in 1834.

Mr. Kent was gifted with a fine personal appearance and excellent powers of mind. He is said to have been a good counselor, but was not successful as an advocate. He was much fonder of active, outdoor employments than of the practice of his profession. A born athlete, he was much given to rough, boisterous sports, shooting matches, etc. He had some aptitude for political life, and was chosen to the State Senate in the years 1814 and 1815. But he gave much more time to his farm and to the promotion of agriculture than was good for his law business, or profitable to his pocket.

SAMUEL BELL was the son of Hon. John Bell, of Londonderry, where he was born Feb. 9, 1779. He was employed upon his father's farm until the age of eighteen, and then commenced his classical studies. Afterwards he attended the academy at New Ipswich, under the tuition of Hon. John Hubbard. From Dartmouth College he received his bachelor's degree in 1793, and then pursued his law studies under the direction of Hon. Samuel Dana, of Amherst, whose daughter he subsequently married. He rose early to distinction in his profession.

In 1796 he began practice in Franconstown, and in 1812 he removed to Chester, which afterwards was his home. A large part of his life he passed in public employment. In 1804 he became a representative in the State Legislature, and the two following years was Speaker of the House. In 1807 he received the appointment of attorney-general of the State, but the salary attached to the office at that time was so inadequate that he declined it. In 1807 and 1808 he was a member of the State Senate, and both years president of that body. In 1816 he was appointed a judge of the Superior Court, and so continued till 1819, when he resigned the place to accept the office of Governor of the State, which he held by successive elections until 1823. So fully were the people satisfied of his ability and integrity that on his fourth election to the gubernatorial chair he received in a vote of nearly twenty-four thousand all but about one thousand of the whole number of ballots cast. While he held the office of Governor, Bowdoin College conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

Upon quitting the office of Governor Mr. Bell was elected to the United States Senate for six years, and upon the expiration of that term re-elected for a like term. Upon leaving his seat in the Senate he retired from public life, and passed his remaining years upon his farm in Chester, where he died Dec. 23, 1850.

Mr. Bell was a man of good natural powers, cultivated with diligence, and accompanied by scrupulous integrity. The long-continued and honorable public positions conferred upon him are the best proof of the confidence reposed by his fellow-citizens in his honesty and capacity. He was a tall, erect, and slender man, of a naturally delicate constitution, which he fortified by exercise and temperance. His manners were dignified and impressive. His professional learning was ample, and his judgment in public affairs was regarded as peculiarly sound. It was he to whom Mr. Webster, just before he delivered his celebrated reply to Hayne, applied to know if the sentiments which he proposed to enunciate in that speech were in accord with the views of his party at the North. Senator Bell assured him that they were. "Then, by the blessing of God," replied Mr. Webster, "the country shall know my views of the Constitution before this day is over."

SAMUEL DANA BELL was the son of Hon. Samuel Bell, and was born Oct. 9, 1798. He graduated from Harvard College in the class of 1816, read law in the office of Hon. George Sullivan in Exeter, and commenced practice in 1820. He lived in Chester from 1820 to 1830, and thence removed to Exeter, where he held the office of cashier of the Exeter Bank till 1836, and in 1839 he established himself in the growing town of Manchester, and there remained until his decease, July 31, 1868.

While a resident in Chester he twice represented that town in the General Court, and in 1823 was appointed solicitor for Rockingham County, which office he filled until 1828. In 1830 he was appointed one of the commissioners to revise the statutes of the State, and afterwards received a similar appointment in 1842, and again in 1867. He was commissioned a judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1848, and justice of the Superior Court in 1849. He held the latter position till 1859, when he was elevated to the chief justiceship, which office he resigned in 1864. In 1854 he received from Dartmouth College the degree of Doctor of Laws.

Judge Bell possessed a sound understanding and unwearied patience and industry. He acquired not merely the learning of his profession in a degree rarely surpassed, but he made himself thoroughly conversant with every branch of useful knowledge. It was difficult to broach a subject of practical importance which he had not studied and had not at his tongue's end. It was a common remark of those who met with him that his information was inexhaustible.

He was notably instrumental in promoting education, good order, and good morals in Manchester, which he saw grow up from a village to a large and populous city. He was the professional counsel and adviser of the great companies that built up the place; his recommendations were always heeded by them, and were productive of much advantage.

Judge Bell was deeply interested in historical studies, and contributed some valuable papers on the early persons and events of New Hampshire. He was a constant and staunch supporter of the New Hampshire Historical Society, of which he held the office of president, and collected much material for a work upon the history of the courts and bar of the province and State.

DAVID PILLSBURY, son of Benjamin Pillsbury, was born at Raymond, Feb. 17, 1802, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1827, studied law with Hon. Henry Hubbard and Hon. Samuel D. Bell, and began practice in Chester in 1830, and remained there till 1854, when he removed to Concord, where he died May 25, 1862. He was representative two years from Chester in the Legislature of the State, and was police judge of Concord. He had a taste for military affairs, and rose to the rank of major-general of the militia.

He was a man of fair talents, of industry, and of considerable learning in his profession, but lacked acquaintance with human nature, and though he prepared his causes carefully, was very liable to be out-generated before a jury. He was a bachelor, and was sometimes made the butt of waggers, as is not unfrequently the case with those in like forlorn circumstances.

MOODY KENT was born in Newbury, Mass. in the year 1779, graduated at Harvard College in 1801, read law with Hon. William Gordon and Hon. C. H. Atherton, of Amherst, was admitted to the bar in 1804, and the same year settled in practice in Deerfield. He remained there until 1809, when he removed to Concord, in which place and in Pembroke he spent most of the remainder of his life. He died unmarried Feb. 1, 1866, leaving the bulk of his large fortune to the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane.

Mr. Kent acquired scholarship and great general information, and was industrious, methodical, and sagacious. He was a sound lawyer, but did not practice for many of the later years of his life, his time being occupied by the care of his large property.

DEERFIELD.

PHINEAS HOWE was a native of Hopkinton and the son of Deacon Jotham Howe. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College, in the class of 1798, and afterwards was a teacher in Deerfield for five years, studied law, and opened an office for a short time in Weare, but returned to Deerfield in 1805, and continued in the practice of his profession there until 1809, when he returned to Weare. He is believed to have lived afterwards in Maine, and in the State of New York, where he died. He is understood to have shown capacity and some literary taste.

JESSE MERRILL was a native of Atkinson and a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1806. He studied law and was admitted in 1812, and commenced practice in Deerfield immediately, but remained there but a short time. He lived afterwards in Bradford, Vt., and died there in 1864, at the age of seventy-five.

JOSIAH BUTLER was a son of Nehemiah Butler, of Pelham, and was born there Dec. 4, 1779. He graduated from Harvard College in 1803, and pursued the study of the law under the direction of Hon. Clifton Clagett, and afterwards in the State of Virginia, where he was admitted to practice in 1807. He then returned to his native town and pursued his profession there until 1809, when he removed to Deerfield. He began his political life the same year as representative in the State Legislature from Pelham. In 1810 he was appointed sheriff of Rockingham County, but in 1813, when the opposite political party attained the ascendancy, he was removed by address from the office. This loss was naturally well made up to him by his political friends when they afterwards came into power. He was appointed clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, in 1815 and 1816 he was chosen a representative from Deerfield to the State Legislature, and in 1817 he was elected a representative in the Congress of the United States, where he continued by successive re-elections until 1823. In 1825 he was appointed an associate justice of the State Court of Common Pleas, and held the office until 1833, when the courts were remodeled, and afterwards he received the commission of post-master of Deerfield, which he continued to hold until his death, Oct. 29, 1854.

Judge Butler was possessed of superior abilities and of honest purposes; he was true to his party, of unquestioned integrity and usefulness. As a lawyer he was attentive to his business, faithful, industrious, and persevering. As a citizen he is spoken of in terms of the highest commendation by those who knew him best.

FREDERIC H. DAVIS was a native of Boston, and was said to have been educated at the Roman Catholic College in Baltimore. He practiced in Salem in 1815, and came to Deerfield the next year, but remained only a year or two.

DAVID STEELE, JR., was a native of Peterborough, and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1815. After reading law with Hon. James Wilson, he commenced practice in Deerfield in 1818, but remained only a short time, removing to Goffstown, where he passed the residue of his life.

JOSIAH HOUGHTON studied law at the Connecticut Law School and in the office of Hon. Boswell Stevens, of Pembroke, and on being admitted to the bar in 1820 set up practice in Deerfield, where he died in 1833. He was a respectable practitioner and an estimable citizen. His death was the result of excitement and exposure, caused by the search for a child who had strayed away from his home.

IRA ST. CLAIR was born in New Hampton, Aug. 9, 1796, read law with Stephen Moody, Esq., of Gilmanton, and S. C. Lyford, Esq., of Gilford, and began practice in his native town in 1824. The next year he changed his residence to Deerfield, where he remained for the rest of his life. In 1848 he received the appointment of judge of probate for the county of Rockingham, and held it until 1857. He was a lawyer of competent learning, with a good deal of old-fashioned prudence and caution, and was in many ways well fitted for the responsible office which he held. His character was excellent, and he was much respected by the community. He died April 5, 1875.

HORATIO GATES CILLEY was a son of Hon. Horatio G. Cilley, of Deerfield, and was born Nov. 26, 1805. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1826, and pursued his law studies under the direction of Hon. George Sullivan, commencing his professional life in Deerfield in 1830. He was a lawyer of respectable learning and capacity, and was chosen a representative of Deerfield in the General Court for the years 1851 and 1852. Not long afterwards he left the State and removed to Lewiston, Me., where he passed the remainder of his life. His death occurred March 13, 1874.

DERRY.

JOHN PORTER was born in Bridgewater, Mass., Feb. 26, 1776. He completed his college course at Dartmouth in 1803, and studied law with Aaron Hutchinson, Esq., of Lebanon, and in 1806 began to practice in Derry (then Londonderry). He represented that town in the State Legislature for five years, and the town of Derry for ten years. He was also a member of one of the commissions to revise the statutes of the State.

Mr. Porter's education and capacity were quite above the average, and he was esteemed an able and learned counselor. He was engaged in many contested causes in the courts, though he lacked confidence in his powers as an advocate, and the most important of them were argued to the jury by other counsel. He gained the confidence of the community in an unusual degree, and there is no doubt that he conducted his legal business with prudence and uncommon skill, and was faithful to the interests of his clients.

He was a tall, impressive-looking man, deliberate in movement and speech, but with a thorough appreciation of all that was bright and humorous.

JAMES THOM was born in Londonderry, Aug. 14, 1784, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1805, studied his profession with Hon. George Sullivan, and was admitted an attorney in 1808, making Exeter his first residence. While there he edited a paper called The Constitutional, besides attending to his law business. In 1815 he changed his residence to his native town, and remained there till his death, Nov. 27, 1852. He was a representative in the Legislature for several years, and took a leading part therein. About 1828 he was instrumental in obtaining the charter of a bank in Derry, and became its cashier, after which he gave little time to his profession.

He was a bright, ready man, of popular manners, and sang a good song in the old-fashioned convivial assemblies of the bar. He was public-spirited and took much interest in every movement for the benefit of his town. Few men have passed through life with the more general esteem and regard of all parties than Mr. Thom.

DAVID AIKEN GREGG, a native of Londonderry, was born March 12, 1788, and died at Derry, May 15, 1866. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1811, and began the practice of law in Londonderry in 1814, removed to Salem in 1817, and returned to Londonderry in 1820. In 1832 he was representative in the State Legislature, and State senator in 1840 and 1841. He was also postmaster of Derry, and register of probate from 1842 to 1847, during which time he resided in Exeter.

Mr. Gregg manifested no little of the sagacity and wit which characterized his Scotch-Irish ancestors. He was never largely engaged in the courts, but conducted a quiet, useful business to the satisfaction of those who employed him.

THORNTON BETTON, a son of Hon. Silas Betton, was born in Salem in the year 1800, and died there Sept. 1, 1841. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1820, studied law with James Thom, Esq., and set up in his profession in Salem, from which town he was sent as representative to the General Court for two or three years. In 1830 he changed his residence to Derry, and that town also he represented in the Legislature.

Mr. Betton possessed talents, and during his rather brief career made something of a figure. It is believed, however, that his judgment and balance were not equal to his enterprise.

EDWARD PINKERTON PARKER, son of Rev. Edward L. Parker, was born in Londonderry, April 18, 1816. Graduating from Dartmouth College in 1836, he taught in the Pinkerton Academy and studied law for two years, and was admitted to practice in 1839, establishing himself in Derry. From 1843 to 1847 he was principal of the Adams Female Academy there, and then removed to Merrimac, where he formed a connection in business with Hon. James U. Parker. In 1853 he bade adieu to the law and engaged in manufacturing. He died in Merrimac.

JOSEPH A. GREGG was the son of Hon. David A. Gregg, of Derry. He studied law in his father's office, and commenced practice in Derry about 1842. In 1850 he was a member of the convention to revise the Constitution of the State, and the youngest of that body. He was a man of promising talents, and had he been spared gave every indication of rising to eminence. He died Sept. 9, 1854, at the early age of thirty-one. An obituary notice mentions the fact of his holding the office of postmaster, and being one of the prominent and enterprising citizens of his town.

JOHN PORTER, JR., was a son of John Porter, Esq., of Londonderry. He studied law under the direction of his father, and entered practice in 1837 at Bedford as the partner of Jonas B. Bowman, Esq. Two years afterwards they removed to Manchester. Mr. Porter at a later date entered into trade in Manchester. Afterwards, about 1858, he returned to Derry and resumed his law practice. He was irregular in his habits, and his law business dwindled, and at length, without notice to his friends, he went to Enfield and joined himself to the Society of Shakers there. He became a leading member of the sect, and was for several years engaged as their business agent, acquitting himself quite to their satisfaction. He died among them in 1875.

EPPING.

WILLIAM PLUMER filled no small space in the legal and political history of the State. His native

William Plumer

place was Newbury, Mass., where he was born June 25, 1859, but when he was but nine years of age his father, Samuel Plumer, became a citizen of Epping, in this State, where his son ever afterwards resided.

William attended the schools of the neighborhood while assisting his father on the farm until he was seventeen, after which he had no instructor except while acquiring his legal education. But he was a great reader, and had an active mind and a retentive memory. His first essay in life was as a preacher of the Baptist denomination when he was just reaching his majority; but before long his opinions changed, and he resolved to study law. His instructors were Hon. Joshua Atherton, of Amherst, and Hon. John Prentice, of Londonderry, though he gave little credit to the latter.

Mr. Plumer was admitted to practice in 1787, having previously served in the office of selectman of Epping and representative in the State Legislature. The latter office he held for eight years, and was Speaker in 1791 and 1797. In 1798 he received the commission of solicitor for Rockingham County. In June, 1802, he was chosen to fill the vacancy in the Senate of the United States caused by the resignation of James Sheafe, and held his seat until March, 1807.

He was chosen a State senator in 1810 and 1811, and presided over the Senate both of those years. He was elected Governor of the State in 1812, and again in 1816, 1817, and 1818. This was the end of his public service, though he survived until Dec. 23, 1850. For the remainder of his life he lived in retirement on his farm, surrounded by his family, and deriving great enjoyment from his large and well-selected library and from his literary labors. He wrote and published various essays of a historical, practical character, and prepared and left in manuscript a series of valuable biographical sketches of Americans of note of his own and earlier times. These would have been given to the public had not the various biographical dictionaries and works of a similar character occupied so fully the field of his labors.

As a lawyer Governor Plumer was diligent, careful, and sagacious. He won his laurels among no mean competitors, the bar of Rockingham and Strafford Counties during the period of his active practice containing some of the foremost lawyers of their time in the country. In all the relations of life he was respected, even by those whose sympathies were, by reason of political disagreement, turned most widely in other directions.

WILLIAM PLUMER, JR., son of the preceding, was born in Epping, Feb. 9, 1789, and was a student in Phillips' Exeter Academy and in Harvard College, whose diploma he received in 1809. He completed his legal studies under the tuition of his father in 1812, and was admitted to the bar, but he never could be styled an active practitioner. He was essentially a student, and was far more interested in literary work and in public questions than in the pursuits of his profession.

In 1816 he was appointed United States commissioner of loans for the State of New Hampshire, and as such resided in Portsmouth for above a year, and until the office was abolished. In 1818 he was chosen a representative in the State Legislature, and the same year was elected a representative in the Congress of the United States, where he remained by successive re-elections for six years. In 1824 he was chosen, on the part of the New Hampshire Senate, United States senator, but the House failed to concur. In 1827 and 1828 he was a member of the New Hampshire Senate, and in 1827 he declined the appointment of United States district attorney. After this Mr. Plumer appeared seldom in public, though he occasionally took part in popular meetings and on occasions of unusual interest. He lived in much domestic happiness at his home in Epping, and employed himself in reading and in literary composition. Several poems of his were published, and others privately printed for distribution among his many friends. He also prepared a valuable biography of his father. His last public labors were in the State Constitutional Convention of 1850-51, and he died three years later, Sept. 18, 1854.

HIRAM OSGOOD was a native of London, and commenced the law business in Epping about 1823. After remaining there about a dozen years, during which time he sustained a highly respectable character, he emigrated to Michigan, where he died in 1840.

ESOCII BARTLETT was a son of Hon. Bradley Bartlett, of Nottingham, and commenced practice in Epping about 1845, but remained there only a couple of years before he went to Lawrence, Mass., and opened an office. He was quite a successful practitioner, and was elected mayor of the city, but died in 1855.

JAMES McMURPHY was a partner of the preceding, and continued in business in Epping after Mr. Bartlett's departure until his death, about 1855. Mr. McMURPHY was a man of decided ability, had gained a respectable position as a lawyer, and was a growing man at the time of his decease, which occurred while he was only in middle age.

EXETER.

The first educated lawyer in Exeter was NICHOLAS PERRYMAN, a native of Devonshire, England, born Dec. 24, 1692. He came to this country young, after the death of his parents, married Joanna, daughter of Stephen Dudley, about 1717, and was in practice in Exeter between 1720 and 1730. His name appears pretty frequently in suits after that date, and he did much of the conveyancing of his time. In 1744 and 1746 he appeared in behalf of Exeter in divers contested matters wherein the town was interested. He was evidently a leading man, and took a prominent part in the affairs of the community.

He had several children, only one of whom arrived at maturity, Joanna, who married Noah Emery, Esq. Mr. Perryman died Aug. 9, 1757.

NOAH EMERY was a son of Daniel Emery, of Kittery, Me., and was born Dec. 23, 1725. He studied law with Nicholas Perryman, Esq., whose son-in-law he became, and was in practice in Exeter before 1769. During the Revolutionary war he occupied important and confidential positions in the new government. He was repeatedly chosen delegate from Exeter to the Provincial Congress, and was made clerk thereof, and acted on the committee to draw up a form of government for the colony. He was appointed clerk of the Court of Common Pleas in 1776, and continued to hold the office till 1787, near the time of his death, and was succeeded in the office by his son, who bore the same name.

WILLIAM PARKER, JR., was the son of Hon. William Parker, of Portsmouth, an eminent judge of the Superior Court. He was born in 1731, graduated from Harvard College in 1751, and was admitted to the bar in 1765. Commencing practice in Exeter, he succeeded his father as register of probate in 1776, and discharged the duties of the office until his death in 1813. He was also appointed a judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1790, and served in that capacity until 1807.

Judge Parker was respectably learned in his profession, and through his long life did much business in it, but on account of constitutional diffidence appeared little in the courts. It is said he never argued a cause to the court or jury, but he was an excellent conveyancer and a safe and judicious counselor, and found abundant professional occupation outside the courts. He was a man of bright parts and unbending integrity, and though he looked after his clients' interests faithfully, was very easy towards his own debtors. He died June 5, 1813.

OLIVER PEABODY, eldest son of a farmer of the same name, was born in Andover, Mass., Sept. 2, 1753, graduated at Harvard College at the age of twenty, studied law with Hon. Theophilus Parsons, of Newbury, Mass., and settled in Exeter about 1781. He was soon brought into public notice. He received the appointment of solicitor Aug. 6, 1789, was elected State senator in 1790, and the same year was constituted judge of probate for the county of Rockingham, which office he filled until June, 1793. In 1793 and 1794 he was again a member of the State Senate, and in the latter year president of that body. Being chosen State treasurer he resigned the office of senator, and continued in the former office for nine years. In 1805 he was appointed sheriff of the county of Rockingham, and discharged the duties of the position for five years. In 1813 he was again chosen to the Senate, and was its presiding officer, and the same year was made a justice of the Court of Common Pleas for the Eastern Circuit, holding the position until 1816. Three times he was chosen an elector of President of the United States, viz., in 1796, 1800, and 1808. He died Aug. 3, 1831.

Judge Peabody was gifted with excellent natural advantages, improved by study and cultivation. In all the various official positions which he sustained he exhibited the capacity and qualities needed for their satisfactory administration. He was not a contentious lawyer, and rarely took part in the trial of causes in court, but he drew many writs and conducted a large office business to the contentment of his clients. He was formed by nature for popularity. Handsome in person, graceful in manner, with a mild temper and a social disposition, he won the regard and conciliated the good will of all. He could not have an enemy. His name naturally suggested itself for new positions of trust, and while few objected, he attracted warm friends and zealous partisans, who easily carried his election or appointment, so that a large portion of his active life was spent in the service of the public. He was the father of an interesting and gifted family, on whose education he spared no expense, and in whose society he enjoyed the chief happiness of his later years.

NATHANIEL PARKER, son of Judge William Parker, Jr., was born in East Kingston, Oct. 22, 1760, and studied law in the office of his father, settling in practice at Exeter. He represented that town in the Legislature, and after performing the functions of deputy Secretary of State for some years was then made secretary in 1809. He died in 1812, leaving no descendants.

GEORGE SULLIVAN, a native of Durlam, and a son of Gen. John Sullivan, of the Revolution, was born Aug. 29, 1771, and was a graduate of Harvard College, of the class of 1791. He prepared himself for his profession under the tuition of his father, and made Exeter his home. He was appointed solicitor for Rockingham County in 1802, and held the office till 1805. In 1811 he was elected a member of Congress for two years, and in 1814 and 1815 he was chosen to a seat in the New Hampshire Senate. Before this time, in 1805, he had received the appointment to the State attorney-generalship,—which for three generations has been held long and creditably in the Sullivan family,—and occupied it for two years. Afterwards in 1815 he was reappointed and administered the office for twenty years more. He resigned the place in 1835, on the passage of a law increasing the salary, but prohibiting the incumbent from engaging in practice in civil causes. Mr. Sullivan's services were in too much demand by suitors to allow him to confine his attention solely to the criminal business. He died April 14, 1838, highly respected throughout the State. His private, professional, and public character were alike unblemished. His intellectual capacity, his legal acquirements, and his honorable course of practice placed him in the foremost rank of

New Hampshire lawyers, while the charms of his sweet voice, his graceful gesticulation, and his eloquent periods gave him a great advantage over his less favored competitors. Though of ardent temperament, and never shunning a contest, he was as ready to forgive as to take offense; the only unpardonable sin in his eyes was mean and underhand dealing. He was above all tricks and artifices. The traditions of his career that yet linger in the bar are all as creditable to his high sense of professional honor as to his mental force and moving eloquence.

SOLOX STEVENS, born in Charlestown, Oct. 3, 1778, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1798, read law with Hon. Benjamin West, and settled in Exeter in 1804. He remained there but a few years, when he removed to Boston, and soon returned to his native town, where he died Aug. 29, 1809.

JEREMIAH SMITH, a son of William Smith, was born in Peterborough, Nov. 29, 1759. He entered Harvard College in 1777, and about the same time served for two months in the army, being present and wounded at the battle of Bennington. He afterwards migrated to Rutgers College, in New Jersey, and graduated in 1780. He was for a time engaged in teaching, and then studied law, entering the bar in 1786, and establishing himself in his native town. He was sent as representative to the Legislature in 1788, 1789, and 1790, and as delegate to the State Constitutional Convention in 1791-92. In 1790 he was chosen representative in the United States Congress, and served until he resigned his seat to accept the appointment of United States district attorney for New Hampshire in 1797. The same year he changed his residence to Exeter. In 1800 he was commissioned judge of probate for Rockingham County, and discharged the duties of the position about two years. In 1801 he received from President Adams the appointment of United States circuit judge and entered upon its duties, but in a few months the law which established the court was repealed and his office terminated. In 1802 he was elevated to the dignity of chief justice of the Superior Court of the State, and administered the office with eminent ability until his resignation, on account of ill health, in 1809. The next year he was elected Governor of New Hampshire, and held the office for one year. He was replaced as chief in 1813 upon the bench of the highest State court, and continued as such until 1816, when a radical change of the judicial system of the State resulted in the removal of all the judges.

For a few years after this Judge Smith returned to the bar, and then about 1820 retired from active practice. The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College in 1804, and by Harvard in 1807. He continued to live in Exeter till 1842, and then removed to Dover, where he died September 21st in the same year.

Judge Smith's intellect was vigorous, his learning great, and his perceptions keen. He was an admirable lawyer, and enjoyed a large and lucrative practice in four counties for some years; but he studied and trained himself for the judicial office, and there he shone conspicuous. He had abundant professional learning, patience, and sound sense, beside fine discrimination and a sense of justice that was rarely at fault. Some of his opinions have been recently published in a volume, and, though mere skeletons and without revision, they constitute a valuable addition to the juridical literature of the State.

Many anecdotes of Judge Smith's ready wit are told by those who remember him. It was keen as an arrow, but left no sting behind. As a citizen and a neighbor his society was greatly valued. He manifested an interest in everything that made for the benefit and credit of his town. He was a trustee and treasurer of the Phillips Academy for many years; he was active in promoting the formation of a lyceum, and prepared lectures for it; he delivered an interesting and valuable historical discourse on the occasion of the two hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Exeter. Few men have left the record of a long life so unsullied.

JOSEPH TILTON was born in East Kingston in August, 1774, and graduated at Harvard College in the class of 1797. Studying law with Hon. Jeremiah Smith, he commenced practice in Wakefield soon after 1800, and removed to Rochester about 1805. In 1809 he opened an office in Exeter, where he thenceforward resided. For nine years in succession, from 1815 to 1823, inclusive, he represented Exeter in the General Court, a fact which is significant of the trust reposed in his ability and honesty by his fellow-citizens. He practiced his profession in the days of Mason and Webster, Sullivan and Bartlett, and other men of mark in the law, and maintained among them a creditable standing for learning and capacity. He was esteemed and respected by all, and his social qualities were highly valued by those who knew him best. Judge Richardson, who had a keen appreciation of humor, maintained the pleasantest relations with Mr. Tilton, and enjoyed many a hearty laugh at his quaint stories and bright repartees. Mr. Tilton died March 28, 1856, at the advanced age of eighty-one years.

JOTHAM LAWRENCE was a son of David Lawrence, of Epping. He received his early education at the Phillips Exeter Academy, which he entered in 1793, and prepared himself for admission to the bar in the office of Hon. George Sullivan. He lived to be the oldest member of the Rockingham bar, and died in Exeter, Nov. 6, 1863, aged eighty-seven years.

JEREMIAH FELLOWES was a native of Exeter, and a graduate from Bowdoin College in the class of 1810. He went through his preparatory studies under the eye of Hon. George Sullivan, and opened an office in Exeter in 1813. He was a young man of talents, and was the author of a volume of poems of some merit. He became in early life the victim of mental disease, from which he never recovered.

GEORGE LAMSON, a son of Gideon Lamson, of Exeter, was a graduate from Bowdoin College in 1812, and began to practice in his native place three years after. He became interested in the publication of a newspaper and of some law books, and was the proprietor of the Exeter Watchman from 1819 to 1821. He subsequently engaged in the business of a bookseller in New York, and died there in 1826, aged thirty-two years.

WILLIAM SMITH was a son of Hon. Jeremiah Smith, and was born in Exeter about 1800. He graduated from Harvard College in 1817, and commenced the practice of the law in Exeter in 1821. He was chosen a representative of the town in the Legislatures of 1822, '23, '24, and 1825. He was a young man of high promise, of fine literary taste, and of many accomplishments. He was the author of two pamphlets of merit, one "Remarks on the New Hampshire Toleration Act," the other "On the Assassination of Julius Cæsar." His health failed at an early age, and he sought for relief in a milder climate, but in vain, for he died unmarried March 29, 1830.

OLIVER WILLIAM BOURNE PEABODY was a son of Hon. Oliver Peabody, born in Exeter, July 7, 1799, and educated at the Phillips Exeter Academy and Harvard College, from which he graduated in 1816. He was for a while a teacher in the academy in his native town, then studied law and entered into practice there. He was a representative of the town in the Legislature from 1823 to 1830, eight years successively. In the latter year he took up his residence in Boston. In 1835 he was one of the representatives of that city in the General Court, and in 1836 was appointed register of probate for the county of Suffolk. He afterwards studied for the ministry, and was settled over the Unitarian society in Burlington, Vt., and died, unmarried, July 5, 1848.

He was gifted with uncommon talents, and his literary acquirements were of the highest character. He was the author of several poems and addresses which were much admired. His character was singularly pure and amiable, and attracted to him a wide circle of friends.

JOHN SULLIVAN was a son of Hon. George Sullivan, of Exeter. He went through the course of studies at the academy in his native town, and pursued his law-reading under his father's direction. On being admitted to the bar, about 1822, he chose Exeter as his place of business. In 1828 he received his first appointment as county solicitor, and performed the duties of the office for two terms (ten years). He was then commissioned judge of probate for the county of Rockingham, and so remained till 1848. In 1849 the appointment of attorney-general for the State was conferred on him, and he retained that position as long as he lived. He died Nov. 17, 1862, aged sixty-two years.

Judge Sullivan had a great share of the hereditary talent that characterized his family. He was a sound and careful lawyer, but he was particularly distinguished for his power as an advocate before the jury. He argued questions of fact with force, and frequently with eloquence, his well-rounded periods and musical voice reminding his elder hearers strikingly of his father. His feelings were quick and impulsive, but he was honest, honorable, and high-minded. The important and responsible offices which he filled for so large a portion of his life were ably and impartially administered. No man ever justly questioned his truthfulness or his integrity.

SAMUEL TAYLOR GILMAN, a son of Hon. Nathaniel Gilman, of Exeter, received his academic education at Harvard College, graduating in 1819. After studying law in the office of Hon. George Sullivan, he established himself in practice in Exeter about 1826. He delivered a Fourth of July address in his native town, which gained him much credit; and he was a representative in the General Court from Exeter in 1829. He was a young man of fine capacity and amiable character, and the future seemed full of promise to him, but death cut short his career when he had attained the age of thirty-four years.

JAMES BELL, a son of Hon. Samuel Bell, was born in Franconstown on the 13th of November, 1804, and graduated at Bowdoin College in 1822. Having prepared himself for his profession in the office of his brother, Hon. Samuel D. Bell, and at the law school in Litchfield, Conn., he entered into practice first at Gilmanton in 1825. After staying there about six years, he selected Exeter as his residence, where he continued for fifteen years, enjoying a large, important, and lucrative practice in Rockingham and Strafford Counties. During this period he was engaged in nearly every cause of magnitude which arose in that section of the State. His competitors at the bar were strong and learned men, but perhaps none of them—certainly none of his years—was his superior in all the qualities that go to make up an accomplished and successful lawyer.

In 1846 he was a member of the Legislature, and in the same year received a valuable appointment which caused him to remove to Gilford, of which place he continued a resident until his decease. While living there he was chosen a delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1850, and was one of its most prominent and influential members. In March, 1855, he was chosen a senator of the United States for six years, but he did not live to complete the term. His death occurred May 26, 1857. He was a man of unblemished character and of high and honorable attainments.

JOHN KELLY, son of Rev. William Kelly, and born at Warner, March 7, 1786, was a graduate of Dartmouth College in the class of 1804. After studying law he was admitted to practice in 1808, and chose Northwood as his home. He was a representative from that town in the General Court. In 1814 he resided for a year in Concord, and had editorial charge of the Concord Gazette. In 1831 he went to Exeter to live, having accepted the appointment of register of probate, which he held until 1842. In 1846 and 1847 he was a member of the Executive Council of the State. Mr. Kelly was for many years the editor of the Exeter News-Letter, and contributed to its columns a series of articles of much historical and genealogical value. He was distinguished for his antiquarian tastes, and his reputation ranks high among the New Hampshire scholars in that department of learning. He was a witty writer, and contrived to lend an interest to subjects generally to ordinary readers dry and forbidding. He died in Exeter, Nov. 3, 1860.

AMOS TUCK was born in Parsonfield, Me., Aug. 2, 1810; pursued his preparatory studies at the academies in Ellingham and in Hampton, and in 1835 graduated from Dartmouth College. He then became an instructor in Pembroke Academy, and subsequently the preceptor of the Hampton Academy, and at the same time devoted his leisure hours to law study, which he completed in the office of Hon. James Bell at Exeter, and on being admitted to the bar became his partner in business. The firm during the entire period of its existence enjoyed a large and important business in and out of the courts. Mr. Tuck began life as a Democrat in politics, but came out into the Free-Soil party in the movement which brought Hon. John P. Hale into prominence. In 1847 he was elected to Congress by the Whig and Free-Soil voters of his district, and was twice re-elected, serving six full years.

When Mr. Lincoln became President, he gave to Mr. Tuck, an old congressional friend, the position of naval officer in Boston, and reappointed him in 1865. It was an important and lucrative office. Mr. Tuck, after Mr. Bell removed from Exeter, had formed a law partnership with Hon. William W. Stickney, and subsequently with his son-in-law, Francis O. French, Esq., but after holding the office of naval officer gave up his law business and devoted his attention to other affairs. He received from the directors of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad the appointment of selling agent of their lands, and for some years passed most of his time in the West in that employment; and he gave much attention to other enterprises away from his home. He also traveled in Europe considerably.

He died in Exeter, Dec. 11, 1879, of apoplexy. Mr. Tuck was of an active temperament, and felt an interest in many things. In his town he took a prominent part in every movement, religious, educational, and political. He was concerned as president of the board of trustees in the shaping of the Robinson Seminary, and he served many years as a trustee of the Phillips Exeter Academy and of Dartmouth College. He was liberal in his dealings, and kind and charitable to the poor and needy.

As a lawyer he was ready, adroit, and familiar with human nature. He was faithful to his clients, and managed their business with sagacity and success. In his addresses to the court and jury he spoke pointedly, persuasively, and with effect. From early life he assumed a leading position, and throughout his threescore years and ten exerted a large influence about him. His death deprived the county of one of its best known and most important citizens.

SAMUEL HUBBARD STEVENS was born in East Kingston, Nov. 20, 1802. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1830, and after completing his professional study began practice in Bristol, and afterwards removed to Lawrence, and thence to Exeter, where he was cashier of the Granite State Bank from 1849 to 1858. Subsequently he took up his residence in Concord, having retired from active business, and made it his home for the remainder of his life.

TIMOTHY FARRAR, JR., was born in New Ipswich, March 17, 1778, and was the son of Hon. Timothy Farrar. In 1807 he took his bachelor's degree at Dartmouth College, and entered the office of Hon. Daniel Webster as a student-at-law. He began practice in Portsmouth about 1813 as law partner of his preceptor, and continued there after Mr. Webster's removal to Boston until 1822, when he went to Hanover to reside. In 1824 he was appointed a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and so continued until the abolition of that court in 1833. He then resumed his residence in Portsmouth till 1836, when he assumed the duties of cashier of a bank in Exeter. There he remained till 1844, and then removed to Boston, of which city he was a representative in the General Court of 1854. In 1867 he was honored with the degree of Doctor of Laws from his Alma Mater. He died in Boston, Oct. 27, 1874.

It was said of Judge Farrar that he was "pre-eminently a safe adviser." He was a man of much learning, general as well as professional. A number of works were the product of his pen, chiefly upon legal and constitutional subjects. He edited the "Report of the Dartmouth College Case" in 1819. In later life he published a "Review of the Dred Scott Decision," and several other minor essays, but his chief work was the "Manual of the Constitution," which has elicited the high commendation of some of our most eminent scholars and constitutional lawyers.

MELBURN F. ELDRIDGE was in practice in Exeter as an attorney-at-law from about 1845 to 1849, a part of that time having an office at Newmarket. He then removed to Nashua, and afterwards, it is believed, to Milford, where he continued till his decease, about 1854.

JOHN SULLIVAN WELLS, a descendant of Gen. John Sullivan, of the Revolution, was born in Durlham, and passed his early childhood there. He first learned the trade of a cabinet-maker, and earned enough by it to enable him to acquire a fair education. He studied law in Vermont and began practice there.

but removed to Lancaster, N. H., in 1837, where he at once received the appointment of county solicitor and retained it for ten years. From 1839 to 1842 he was a representative from Lancaster in the Legislature, and in 1841 was chosen Speaker of the House. About 1846 he changed his residence to Exeter. In January, 1847, he was commissioned attorney-general of the State, but resigned the position after a few months. In 1851 and 1852 he was a member of the State Senate, and president thereof both years. In January, 1855, he was appointed by the Governor United States senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. Moses Morris, and occupied his seat until March 4th. He was subsequently a candidate for Governor of the State and for senator in Congress. He died Aug. 1, 1869, at the age of fifty-six years.

Mr. Wells was gifted with many of the essentials of a successful lawyer and politician. He had a fine person, pleasing manners, readiness and fluency of speech, and a most melodious voice. In many of these respects he inherited the qualities which gave the Sullivans for several generations their prominent standing at the bar. Mr. Wells had the confidence of his party and of his clients in a remarkable degree. His professional business was large and lucrative, and but for the change that took place in the political complexion of the State at the period when his name was put forward he would have probably enjoyed more of her highest honors.

ELEN FRANKLIN TUCKER was a native of Kensington, born Feb. 16, 1822. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1843, and pursued his professional studies with Messrs. Bell & Tuck in Exeter and at the Harvard Law School, and began to practice in Exeter in 1846. His abilities were excellent, and his social qualities rendered him a general favorite. The later years of his life were shaded by illness, which put a period to his earthly existence May 30, 1857.

ALVA WOOD was a native of Georgetown, Mass. He received an academical education, and came to Exeter about 1847 and made it his lifelong home. He studied law in the office of Messrs. Bell & Tuck, and entered into practice about 1849. He was active and assiduous, and gathered a very considerable business, which continued up to about a year before his decease, when his health began to fail. He died suddenly, Feb. 17, 1878, aged fifty-seven years. He was a man of talents, who had made his own way to respectability and competence; was public-spirited and generally esteemed.

MOSES NORRIS COLLINS, a native of Brentwood, born in April, 1820, completed his law studies in the office of Gen. Gilman Marston, and was admitted in 1857. He had previously, in 1855, represented Brentwood in the General Court. He remained in the same office with Gen. Marston, and subsequently became his partner. The considerable business of the office he managed successfully while Gen. Marston was absent in Congress and in the army. In 1861 and 1862 Mr. Collins was a representative from Exeter to the Legislature, and in the summer of 1863 he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, and proceeded to the seat of war. He was shot dead in the battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864.

GILMAN MARSTON is a native of Oxford; his ancestors lived in Hanpton. He took his degree of A. B. at Dartmouth College in 1837; the same institution conferred the degree of LL. D. upon him in 1882. He began practice in Exeter in 1841. In 1845, 1846, and 1847 he was a representative of that town in the State Legislature, and has been so a number of years since. He was a member of the 36th, 37th, and 39th Congresses of the United States. In 1861 he was commissioned colonel of the Second New Hampshire Volunteers, and was severely wounded at the battle of Bull Run. In 1862 he received the commission of brigadier-general, and served nearly to the close of the war. He is still in the practice of the law in Exeter.

HON. WILLIAM WELLS STICKNEY was born in Enfield, N. H., June 24, 1801. He was the son of Daniel and Sarah (Morse) Stickney, and is a descendant in the sixth generation of William Stickney, the emigrant, who came from Frampton, Lincolnshire, England, about 1637, to Boston, Mass., and became one of the first settlers of Rowley, Mass. Daniel Stickney was a farmer, a soldier in the Revolution, enjoyed to a marked extent the confidence of the community, and for years was justice of the peace.

William W. received his preparatory education for college at Kimball Union Academy, and entered Dartmouth College in 1819, and was graduated from that institution in 1823. He read law with Hon. Henry B. Chase, of Warner, N. H., and was admitted to the bar at Concord, N. H., in 1826. After one year's practice of law in Concord, he removed to New Market, N. H., and established himself there as an attorney in July, 1827. Here he remained until October, 1847, when he moved to Exeter, N. H., and engaged in his profession in company with Hon. Amos Tuck. This copartnership continued until 1856. Since then he has been alone in practice. In his profession no lawyer could have been more diligent, attentive, or faithful. During his exceptionally long period of practice he has missed attending but one term of court, and that was by reason of illness.

Mr. Stickney has served four terms as representative in the State Legislature,—three from New Market (1839, 1840, 1841) and one from Exeter (1854). He was appointed United States district attorney for the district of New Hampshire by President Taylor, June 21, 1849, and held that position until the administration was changed by the election of Franklin Pierce in 1853. In 1857 he was appointed judge of probate for Rockingham County, and held that office until disqualified by age. He is president of the Bar Association of Rockingham County, and has held that position for a long term of years, being elected Oct. 19, 1860, and is the oldest practicing lawyer in this county, if not in the State. He has been connected with many business enterprises, is now president of Exeter Machine-Works, was chosen director of the Granite Bank in 1848, and was continued as such in its successor, the National Granite Bank. He has been a member of the Masonic Order since 1829, and now holds membership in "Star in the East" Lodge in Exeter.

Wm. W. Stickney

Mr. Stickney married Nov. 5, 1850, Frances A., daughter of Clark Hough, of Lebanon, N. H. Of their three children two daughters now survive.

In private life Judge Stickney is especially characterized by modest and unassuming manners, strong social feeling, and warm friendship for a large circle of devoted friends. In public life he has ever been the courteous gentleman to all, and a faithful and devoted servant to public interests. As a lawyer he is thorough and painstaking, his attainments being rather solid than brilliant, and he is well regarded by, and enjoys the esteem of, the members of the bar for both ability and thoroughness. In his judicial office he was upright and conscientious, just in his decisions, and careful in his investigations.

CHARLES HENRY BELL<sup>1</sup> is the son of Governor John and Persis (Thom) Bell, and the youngest of a family of ten children. He was born Nov. 18, 1823, in Chester, Rockingham Co. After acquiring the benefits afforded by the schools of his native town he entered the academy at Pembroke, where, and at Phillips Exeter Academy, he fitted for college, and graduated from Dartmouth in 1844. On leaving college he commenced the study of law, first with Bell & Tuck in Exeter, and subsequently continued with his cousin, Hon. Samuel Dana Bell, one of the most eminent lawyers in the State, and who for five years held the office of chief justice of New Hampshire. On his admission to the bar young Bell commenced practice in his native town of Chester, but the field of labor was far too small for a young man at all ambitious, and he began to look about him for an opening. He selected Great Falls, where he formed a partnership with Nathaniel Wells, a sound lawyer and a successful business man. The firm of Wells & Bell enjoyed a fair share of business, which was constantly increasing, but after several years' practice at the Stratford bar Mr. Bell removed to Exeter. Able lawyers were never scarce in Exeter, and to most young men the prospects of success would have seemed discouraging. As a student Mr. Bell had profited largely by association with the best lawyers of the time. He entered actively into practice, and in 1856 he was appointed solicitor of Rockingham County. For ten years he continued to discharge the duties of this office, and to manage a large civil business besides. Mr. Bell retired from active practice several years ago.

Governor Bell first entered politics as a member of the House of Representatives at Concord in 1858, and in his first term was made chairman of the Judiciary Committee, an honor that is rarely conferred on new members. He was re-elected to the Legislature in 1859, and again in 1860, in which latter year he was chosen Speaker.

In 1863 and 1864 he was elected to the State Senate, and during the latter year served as president of that body. In 1872 and 1873 he was again chosen to the House. Mr. Bell was president of the Republican State Convention of 1878, where his address proved the keynote to a successful campaign. In 1879 he was appointed United States senator for the special session of that year by Governor Prescott, to take the place of Mr. Wadleigh, whose term of office had expired. He was admitted to his seat April 10th, after a long debate on the constitutional right of the Governor to make the appointment.

In the Republican State Convention of 1880 the delegates, with an unanimity never before equaled, selected him as their candidate for Governor. Their opponents were preparing for an aggressive campaign with a most popular nominee for the Presidency, and their prospective candidate for gubernatorial honors was regarded as simply invincible. After a canvass probably never equaled for thoroughness on both sides, Mr. Bell was triumphantly elected, receiving the largest number of votes ever polled for any candidate of any party at a New Hampshire State election.

Governor Bell has devoted much time to historical research, and especially to the history of the State from its settlement. During the past few years particularly there has been no intermission in the assiduity with which he has employed the means of cultivating his tastes for literary pursuits. He is the author of a "Memoir of John Wheelwright," a work that is the only approach to a complete biography of this sturdy old Puritan pioneer yet written, the material being collected from every known source of information on the subject in this country and England. He is also author of "The Wheelwright Deed of 1629: Was It Spurious?" "Exeter in 1776," and "Men and Things of Exeter," besides contributing to the current literature of the State, and having in course of preparation the "Biographical History of the Bench and Bar of New Hampshire." This work was undertaken at the request, often repeated, of some of the most prominent lawyers in the State.

In the spring of 1871, Mr. Bell assumed editorial charge of the Exeter News-Letter, which he retained till 1875, about four years. He has occupied the Grand Master's chair of the Masonic fraternity of this State, of which order he is a high member. At present he is a trustee of Phillips Exeter Academy. For a dozen years or more past he has been president of the New Hampshire Historical Society, which has been instrumental in interesting the public in the history of the State, and has brought to light many important facts bearing on this subject. Dartmouth College at the commencement in June, 1881, conferred upon Governor Bell the degree of LL.D.

GREENLAND

WILLIAM PICKERING, a son of William Pickering, was born in Greenland, and received his academical education at Phillips Exeter Academy and Harvard College, from which he graduated in 1797. He pursued his legal studies in the office of Hon. William K. Atkinson, of Dover, and commenced practice in his native place. He served for a time as deputy Secretary of State, and was in 1816 chosen State treasurer, an office which he retained until 1828, and again held in 1829. The next year he was appointed collector of the United States revenue at Portsmouth, and removed to his former home in Greenland. The office of collector he resigned in 1833, and continued to reside in Greenland until his decease in 1850. He also represented that town in the Legislature of the State.

ISAIAH P. MOODY originated in York, Me., and in 1820, at the age of fifteen, attended the Phillips Academy at Exeter. He took his degree at Bowdoin College in 1827, and in 1834 set up practice as a lawyer in Hampstead. He appears to have remained there until about 1841.

OLIVER WHIPPLE practiced law in Hampton from about 1794 to 1806. He had previously resided in Portsmouth for more than twenty years, and his biography more properly belongs to that place. He went to Maine after leaving Hampton, and an interesting account of him is to be found in Willis' "Law and Lawyers of Maine."

HAMPTON.

EDMUND TOPPAN was the only son of Hon. Christopher Toppan, a man of note in the history of Hampton. He was born Sept. 25, 1777, and graduated from Harvard College in 1796. He studied law under the direction of Hon. Theophilus Parsons, then of Newburyport, and after a short stay at Portsmouth commenced business in Deerfield, his father having built him a house there and presented him with an expensive library. He practiced there till about 1804, when his house and library were accidentally destroyed by fire, and then he returned to his native place, and there remained until his death in 1849. His business in Hampton was necessarily somewhat limited, but he was acceptable to the people, and represented the town in the State Legislature.

Mr. Toppan is said to have possessed by nature rather a brilliant than a logical mind. His learning in his profession and generally was considerable, he spoke readily and gracefully, and his manners were courteous and attractive.

KINGSTON.

FRANCIS PETER SMITH, son of Rev. Isaac Smith, was born in Gilmanton, Aug. 22, 1795. He read law with Hon. Jeremiah H. Woodman and others, and began practice in Boston in 1819. He was in practice in Kingston in 1822, and afterwards in Ossipee for ten years. He then studied divinity and became a clergyman, having settlements successively in New Hampshire, Maine, and Vermont.

JOHN EDWARD STANYAN was a native of Pembroke; the time of his birth was May 17, 1816. For two years or more after his graduation from Dartmouth College in 1840 he was preceptor of an academy, and then studied law. He practiced at Pembroke, Epping, and Kingston, in this State, and at Haverhill and Ashby, in Massachusetts. He was emphatically a rolling stone, and though a man of no little ability, was too irregular and erratic to acquire and retain the respect of those whose good opinion is of value.

WILLIAM COLCORD PATTEN was a Kingston man by birth, education, and residence. He was gifted by nature with superior powers of mind and a fine and pleasing address. He began life as a teacher and land surveyor, but gradually acquired a taste for the law, and prepared himself for its practice. His aptitude for political life gave him rather a remarkable succession of official positions. He was a representative in the Legislature of 1857, State senator in 1861 and 1862, councilor in 1867 and 1868, and again representative in 1871 and 1872. He died in January, 1873, at the age of about fifty years.

Mr. Patten entered upon the practice of the law rather late in life, but from his experience brought with him much acquaintance with practical affairs and knowledge of human nature. His business was conducted with promptness and sagacity, and he acquired much credit as a practitioner. His ambition ran much in the line of politics, where his popularity was such that he was repeatedly elected to office by his townsmen when the majority was clearly against his party. Had he lived, there was every reason for believing that he would have achieved higher political honors.

His death was sudden, and, occurring while he was in the prime of life and apparently of sound constitution, caused a severe shock to the community.

LONDONDERRY.

JOHN PRENTICE, born in Cambridge, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard College in 1767, read law with Hon. Samuel Livermore, and established himself in business in Londonderry, having purchased the place where his instructor lived, and erected a large mansion thereon. His wife brought him a handsome dowry, and he was thus enabled to live through the period of the Revolution when the law business was at a standstill. Having been an "addresser of Hutchinson" in Massachusetts, he was not intrusted with public business by the friends of liberty, though at their instance or insistence he published a complete recantation of his "loyal" sentiments, both in that colony and in New Hampshire.

But upon the return of peace and the revival of ordinary business Mr. Prentice began to receive a fair share of professional employment. He was by no means a learned lawyer; he was not a student, and his professional library hardly contained fifty volumes; yet in those times an accurate knowledge of the law was perhaps less valuable to the practitioner, peculiarly at least, than practical sense and abundant self-confidence. In these qualities Mr. Prentice must have excelled, for he occupied for a considerable period some of the highest positions in the State, and conducted a large and lucrative law practice besides.

In 1785 he was elected a representative to the State Legislature, and was often re-elected. In 1787 he received the appointment of attorney-general of the State, and held the office until 1793. The next year he was chosen Speaker of the House of Representatives. In 1798 he was appointed a justice of the Superior Court, but, perhaps conscious that his qualifications were hardly equal to the position, he declined it. The same year he was elected Speaker of the House, and was annually replaced in that position until 1805. While holding that place he was supported by his party for election to the Senate of the United States, but failed to receive the honor.

Mr. Prentice had many of the qualities needed for a lawyer of eminence. With more application and taste for the learning of his profession, he would have led in important causes where he hesitated to trust his own knowledge and judgment, and would have avoided many of the obstacles which beset his path. But he had an aversion to the use of the pen, and no inclination for book-learning so long as he found that his native powers enabled him to sustain himself respectably. He was fonder of his farm than of his office, and prided himself much on its products. It is a remarkable circumstance that the place where he lived was the home of Hons. Samuel Livermore, Arthur Livermore, and Charles Doe, an extraordinary succession of men prominent in the judicial annals of New Hampshire.

Mr. Prentice died May 18, 1808.

GEORGE REID was a son of Col. George Reid, of the Revolution, born at Londonderry, Jan. 29, 1774, and educated at Dartmouth College, graduating in 1797. He studied law, and opened an office in his native town, but removed two years afterwards into Massachusetts. He died in Boston at the age of seventy-four.

FREDERICK PARKER was a native of Bedford, who graduated from Dartmouth College in 1828, and after the usual period of study of the law established himself, about 1832, in Londonderry, but in a year or two removed to Bangor, where it is understood that he became a teacher, and died May 19, 1834, at the age of thirty-four years.

NEWMARKET.

EDWARD PARSONS, a son of Rev. Joseph Parsons, of Bradford, Mass., was born in 1747, and received a collegiate education. He had commenced the practice of the law in Newmarket as early as 1773. He was a member from that town of the Provincial Convention which met at Exeter May 17, 1775, and afterwards became adjutant of Gen. Enoch Poor's regiment in the Continental army. He died at Ticonderoga, it is believed, in 1776.

NATHANIEL HUNTOON was a native of Salisbury, and studied his profession with Hon. Samuel Greene. About 1802 he started in life at Portsmouth, and after remaining there about twelve years changed his residence to Newmarket. But he did not live long enough to accomplish much there, for he died about 1816.

AMOS A. PARKER is still living in Glastonbury, Conn., at an advanced age. He is a son of Hon. Nahum Parker, of Fitzwilliam, and is a graduate of Vermont University in the class of 1815. He has led a varied and active life. He was settled as a lawyer for a time in Epping, then at Newmarket, afterwards at Kingston, and finally in his native town. For a year or two he resided in Exeter also. From 1823 to 1825 he was the proprietor of the New Hampshire Statesman at Concord. In 1835 he went on a tour to the West and Texas, and the next year published an account of his trip in a duodecimo volume, which ran through two editions. Within a few years he has issued a volume of poems, and a thick pamphlet of reminiscences of Lafayette's visit to New Hampshire in 1824.

WILLIAM TENNEY was the son of Capt. William Tenney, of Hollis, and born Sept. 13, 1785. He attended the law school at Litchfield, Conn., and was admitted to the bar in Boston in 1811. He first practiced in Pepperell, Mass., then in Salem, N. H., and came to Newmarket in 1815, where he spent the remainder of his days. He is said to have been much interested in political matters, and to have been more ambitious for preferment in that line than for professional advancement. In 1823 he was assistant clerk of the Senate, and in 1829 he received the commission of postmaster of the Lamprey River village. He died in 1838.

GILBERT A. GRANT, who came from New York, practiced law in Newmarket three or four years, beginning about 1843. He was able, quaint, and entertaining, and might probably have acquired eminence in his profession had he remained longer here. He was afterwards in New York, and it is believed in California.

WILLIAM B. SMALL was a native of Limington, Me., and was born May 17, 1817. While he was a child his father removed to Ossipee, in this State, where William passed his youth. He was a pupil of Phillips Exeter Academy, and a student-at-law in the office of Messrs. Bell and Tuck, at Exeter. During his education he taught school to eke out his narrow means, and showed himself to be diligent, capable, and independent. He commenced practice in Newmarket in 1846, and soon acquired a good position at the bar.

In 1866 he was appointed solicitor of the county of Rockingham, and was again placed in the same position in 1875, holding the office up to the time of his decease.

In 1870 he was elected a member of the State Senate, and while such received the nomination of representative to Congress, to which he was chosen in 1873.

Mr. Small had little taste for political life, but loved his profession, and devoted himself to its study and practice. He was industrious, studious, and persistent, regarding his clients' interest far above his own convenience or comfort. His character for honesty and perfect uprightness was never questioned. He prepared his causes with conscientious care, and tried them ably and vigorously, and took a high rank as a counselor and an advocate. His death, while in the full tide of his usefulness and power, was regarded as a real loss to the community. He died from the effects of a fall, April 7, 1878.

NORTHWOOD.

ABRAHAM B. STORY, born in Dumbarton, March 22, 1777, was the son of David Story, and graduated at Brown College in 1799. He studied his profession with Hon. Charles H. Atherton, of Amherst, and practiced in 1802 and 1803 in Northwood, but then removed to Washington, where he lived till about 1830, in which year he died, in his native place.

NATHANIEL DEARBORN was a native of Chester, a son of Deacon John Dearborn. He completed his legal studies with Hon. George Sullivan, and set up in practice in Pombroke in 1806, remaining there till about 1829, when he migrated to Deerfield, and afterwards in 1831 to Northwood, where he lived ever after. He died Sept. 12, 1869. He was an honest, painstaking man of fair abilities.

SALEM.

SILAS BETTON, a son of James Betton, born at Windham, and a graduate of Dartmouth College in the class of 1787, was admitted to the bar in 1793 and settled in Salem. That town was represented by him in the General Court in the years 1797, 1798, and 1799, and in 1810 and 1811. In the years 1800, 1801, and 1802 he was a member of the Senate. In 1803 he was elected a representative in Congress, and served two terms. In 1813 he received the appointment of sheriff of the county of Rockingham, which he held until 1818. He died Jan. 22, 1822, at the age of fifty-eight years.

Mr. Betton married a daughter of Hon. Matthew Thornton, one of New Hampshire's three signers of the Declaration of Independence. He was a man of handsome talents, and much esteemed in the community. He was gifted with some literary taste; many of the poems of Robert Dinsmore, the "Rustic Bard," were addressed to Mr. Betton, and some poetical epistles of his own composition were included in the volume of Dinsmore's published pieces.

DAVID WOODBURN DICEY was born in Londonderry, Dec. 25, 1792, and educated at Dartmouth College, graduating in 1818. He entered upon the practice of law in Londonderry about 1821, and remained there until 1833, when he removed to Salem, where he died Jan. 26, 1837.

SEABROOK.

EBENEZER FRENCH was born in Newton, April 10, 1802. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1824, studied his profession with Hon. Daniel French, of Chester, commenced practice in Sutton in 1827, removed to Seabrook in 1828, and there continued about twelve years. Thence he went to Amesbury and to Boston, and served in the custom-house eight years, and subsequently emigrated to the West.

WINDHAM.

ISAAC MCGAW originated in Merrimac, his father's name being Jacob, as was that of an older brother, who was a lawyer of distinction in Maine. Isaac was born May 25, 1785, and completed his college course at Dartmouth in 1807. He opened his law-office first in Bedford, where he continued from about 1811 to 1818, and then took up his residence in Windham. There he was chosen a representative in the Legislatures of 1829 to 1833, inclusive, and of 1838. After a long period of respectable practice in his profession he removed to Merrimac, and passed his last years with his son-in-law, Edward P. Parker, Esq., and there he died Nov. 6, 1863.

WILLIAM MERCHANT RICHARDSON was born in Pelham, Jan. 1, 1774, and died in Chester, March 23, 1838. He was a graduate of Harvard College in 1797. His father was Capt. Daniel Richardson, a soldier of the Revolution and a farmer, and William would probably have been brought up to the same employment but for an injury received to one of his hands, which incapacitated him for severe manual labor. After leaving college he was employed for a time as preceptor of Groton, Mass., Academy, and afterwards entered the office of Hon. Samuel Dana there as a student-at-law. On being admitted to practice he settled in the same town. In 1811 he was chosen representative in Congress, and two years after received a re-election. But political life was little to his taste, and in 1814 he resigned his seat and removed to Portsmouth, N. H., and opened an office.

He was at once recognized as a leading lawyer, and upon the reorganization of the courts in 1816 was appointed chief justice of the Superior Court. The propriety and excellence of the appointment were at once admitted, and never questioned during the twenty-two years of his service on the bench. Through his agency the publication of the series of judicial reports of New Hampshire was begun. He contributed very largely to many of the volumes, and his opinions have always been regarded as admirable in style and of high authority.

His professional learning was first-rate, his perceptions were rapid, and his honesty and fairness above suspicion. By reason of his quickness of apprehension, he was sometimes charged with jumping to conclusions, but he had none of the pride of opinion which closes the mind to argument, and was always ready, for cause shown, to retract a hasty impression.

In 1819, Judge Richardson changed his residence permanently to Chester. He was a good citizen, kind and public-spirited, and was greatly esteemed by his townsmen. His intellectual powers were highly cultivated. He was a great reader both in his own and in other tongues. He acquired several of the modern European languages after his accession to the bench, and the Spanish very late in life. Botany and mineralogy too he made himself master of in theory and by practice. He had always a taste for poetry. His graduation part at college was the English poem, and throughout his life he was accustomed to throw off poetical effusions, some of them of much merit. Dartmouth College conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. in 1827.

New Hampshire has been fortunate in having secured for her highest judicatory a succession of chief justices of extraordinary learning, ability, and integrity, and among these Judge Richardson holds no secondary place.

The following is a list of the present members of the bar:

Durville.—O. H. Key.

Derry.—G. C. Bartlett.

Exeter.—Governor Charles H. Bell, W. W. Stickney, Thomas Leavitt, J. F. Wiggin, Gilman Marston, J. Warren Towle, A. C. Buzell, E. G. Eastman, Fred. S. Hatch, C. H. Knight, A. O. Fuller, and W. C. Harriman.

Greenland.—C. W. Pickering.

Hampton.—Lamprey.

Kingston.—L. G. Hoyt.

New Market.—A. L. Mellows, C. H. Smith, I. T. George, and E. A. Keep.

Platiston.—W. H. Hills and C. C. Cheney.

Portsmouth.—W. H. Rollins, J. S. H. Frink, William H. Hackett, A. F. Howard, Calvin Page, G. E. Hodgdon, H. Call, C. E. Batchelder, John Hatch, and Wallace Hackett.

The senior members of the bar of this county have many of them made up their records; those still left are soon to follow, and the juniors are to assume their places at the bar and on the bench; to them will soon be committed these great responsible trusts. The perpetuity of our free institutions is committed to the guardianship and keeping of the bar and judiciary of our free country, for the history of the world teaches, and all free governments illustrate, this truth, that to the profession of the law civil government is indebted for all the safeguards and intrinsements with which the liberties of the people are protected, that legislation is shaped, Constitutions enlarged, amended, and adopted by the enlightened administration of the statesman, both of England and the United States, who have been in both, and are in all free governments, educated for the bar, and, ascending by the inherent force of their disciplined professional life, they become the directors of the destinies of States and nations.

Military chieftains may spring into power, tyrants may for the hour dazzle with the glamour of military parade, the pomp of war, an oppressed and frenzied people, but they turn as the cannonade dies away to the statesmanship of the country, and call to the Parliaments and congressional halls for final debate the arbitrations of the liberties of the people. From the days of King John to the present hour the bar and the bench have furnished the statesmen who have erected the bulwarks of constitutional law, and exorted from tyrants the Magna Charta which have secured to the oppressed the guarantee of free institutions. Imbued with the historical traditions of their predecessors, and tracing the paths they have trod, emulating their good example, it should become more and more the resolute purpose of the Rockingham County bar to so walk in the light of their professional teachings that when they are called to follow them to that upper court and file their judgment-roll of the great trial of life with that Supreme Judge from whose bar they can take no appeal,—

"Then go not like quarry-slave at night
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

CHAPTER VI.

THE COUNTY FARM.—INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Railroads: The Eastern—The Portsmouth and Dover—The Portsmouth, Great Falls and Conway—The Concord and Portsmouth—The Portland, Saco and Portsmouth—The Nashua and Rochester—The Portland and Rochester—The Boston and Maine—The Dover and Winnisseeogee—The Manchester and Lawrence.

PREVIOUS to the establishment of the county farm system, the selectmen or overseers of poor of each town had charge of all persons needing assistance. At various times the Legislature enacted laws which largely increased the number classed as county poor. The system of allowing each town to care for the poor within its limits led to some evils, was expensive, and made it necessary to locate buildings at some central point in each county where this large class of unfortunates could be better provided for. The county convention at its session in the month of June, 1868, authorized the purchase of a farm and the erection of suitable buildings to accommodate two hundred and fifty inmates. The authority to purchase said farm was committed to a joint board consisting of a building committee,—John R. Reding, of Portsmouth; W. H. Robinson, of Exeter; H. P. Hood, of Derry; and I. L. Robinson, of Fremont,—selected by the convention, and the commissioners, James C. Brown, John J. Leavitt, and Abbott Norris, who finally selected the Thyng farm, so called, in the town of Brentwood. The farm contains about one hundred and sixty acres, and is situated two and one-half miles from Epping depot, on the Concord and Portsmouth Railroad. The Nashua and Rochester Railroad now connects at said depot.

The first cost of the Thyng farm was $6500, including thirty acres adjoining land. The total first cost of the almshouse was $19,632.

The following year a building for the insane and a large barn were added at an expense of $9487. The same year the county convention authorized the commissioners to purchase woodland and pasture, and the farm of D. W. Ladd was bought, one hundred and sixty acres, for $4500. In 1873 additional buildings for storage were constructed, costing $2500. In 1874 boiler-house, laundry, etc., costing $8150. In 1875 House of Correction and work-shops, costing $12,000. In 1876 new brick asylum for insane, costing $9000.

The farm when purchased was in a poor state of cultivation, as but little had been done except to cut the hay for many years, which averaged about fifteen tons per year. The yearly crops now are one hundred tons of hay, with other crops of equal proportions.

The crops of the farm for the year 1881 are estimated as follows:

Hay.....	100 tons.	Beets (table).....	6,000 pounds.
Corn fodder.....	5 "	Beets (cattle).....	21,000 "
Straw.....	30 "	Carrots.....	1,750 "
Potatoes.....	2,500 bushels.	Onions.....	9,250 "
Peas (in pod).....	50 "	Pumpkins.....	6,000 "
Oats.....	620 "	Melons.....	1,200 "
Rye.....	50 "	Beef.....	2,300 "
Beans.....	50 "	Pork.....	8,000 "
Tomatoes.....	40 "	Butter.....	2,500 "
Cucumbers.....	25 "	Lard.....	1,250 "
Cider Apples.....	100 "	Parsnips.....	2,500 "
Corn.....	500 "	Cabbage.....	60 dozen.
Turnips.....	15,000 pounds.	Eggs.....	1,000 "

Average number of inmates for the years from 1871 to 1881, inclusive, has been 185. This includes insane, poor, children, idiotic, blind, and prisoners.

The farm constitutes a school district in itself, and three terms of school are taught yearly. There is also a chapel-room, provided with organ, etc., for services on the Sabbath. Children of sound mind and without parents or friends are furnished with good homes by the commissioners. The house is heated by steam; comfortable rooms, clothing, and good and abundant food is furnished to all, and few, if any, of the inmates ever enjoyed a better home. The average weekly cost for each inmate for the year ending May 1, 1882, was one dollar and ninety-five cents. This includes all running expenses of the farm, with food, clothing, medical attendance, nursing, etc. The farm is under the care of the county commissioners, who are now elected biennially in September at each State election. They appoint a superintendent and all necessary officers and help. The first superintendent, William L. Philbrick, of Portsmouth, was appointed 1869, resigned in 1871, and was followed by Frank D. Pollard, of Plaistow, who resigned in 1878, and was followed by Haven L. Scott, of Portsmouth, who retained the position till his death in December, 1881. His wife, Nancy M. Scott, continued in charge till the end of the year, May 1, 1882, when she resigned, and Gayton O. Reynolds, of Derry, was appointed. The farm always has an abundant supply of water drawn by steam-pump and two wind-mills. The house is supplied with fire-escapes; also three fire-extinguishers and a hydrant to the roof of the house, with plenty of hose in case of fire. Twice fire has been subdued, the first time in the men's wing, and second in the women's, each time with but slight damage.

The county debt, May 1, 1873, was $141,050; in 1882 it was $30,276.22.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

1856, William C. Patten, William S. Halley, Portsmouth; Josiah W. James, Deerfield; 1859, Isaac Woodbury; 1860, Franklin Crombie; 1861, Horace P. Watts; 1862, John Hodgdon (2d), Portsmouth; 1863, John J. Leavitt; 1864, Caleb Moulton; 1865, John Rowe, Gandia; 1866, James C. Brown, Portsmouth; 1867, John J. Leavitt; 1868, Abbott Norris; 1869, William S. Pillsbury; 1870, John W. F. Holdis, North Hampton; 1871, Frank D. Pollard, Plaistow; 1872, Frank W. Miller, Portsmouth; 1873, Woodbury M. Durgin, Northwood; 1874, Nathaniel H. Brown, Derry; 1875, Frank P. Cram, Hampton Falls; 1876, Sewall D. Tilton, Raymond; 1877, Newton Johnston, Portsmouth; 1878, Frank P. The Eastern Railroad enters the county at Portsmouth, and passes through Portsmouth, Greenland, North Hampton, Hampton, and Seabrook.

The road was chartered June 18, 1836, and was opened Nov. 9, 1840, and leased to the Eastern Railroad Company of Massachusetts for a term of ninety-nine years, at a rental which was to equal the dividends paid on the stock of the lessee. The latter failing to pay dividends in 1873, the rental was finally changed, Oct. 1, 1878, to $22,500, which is a trifle over 4.5 per cent. on the cost of the road as represented by the capital stock ($492,500) of the company. Cost of road, $49,090.18 per mile. This road, which was chartered as the "Eastern Railroad in New Hampshire," forms a portion of the Eastern Railroad, which extends from Boston, Mass., to Portland, Me. Mooly Currier, of Manchester, president; and E. A. Abbott, of Boston, treasurer.

The Portsmouth and Dover Railroad extends from Portsmouth, N. H., to Dover, N. H., and was chartered July 7, 1866. It was opened Feb. 1, 1872, and leased on its completion to the Eastern Railroad of Massachusetts for a period of fifty years, at an annual rental of six per cent. on $769,000, the cost of the road, represented by a corresponding amount of stock. Length of road, 10.88 miles; sidings, etc., 1.09 miles. Frank Jones, of Portsmouth, president; and G. L. Treadwell, of Portsmouth, treasurer.

Portsmouth, Great Falls and Conway Railroad is a consolidation of the Great Falls and Conway; chartered June 19, 1814; opened from Great Falls to Union village in 1850, and the Great Falls and South Berwick chartered June 8, 1848; opened in July, 1854. The line to Conway was built by the consolidated company, and completed June 3, 1872. It was leased in 1871 to the Eastern Railroad for sixty years. Oct. 1, 1878, a new lease for sixty years was made. The road extends from Conway Junction to North Conway.<sup>1</sup> Length of road, including sidings and other tracks, 6.69 miles. E. B. Phillips, president; and N. G. Chapin, treasurer; both of Boston.

The Concord and Portsmouth Railroad, extending from Portsmouth to Concord, was chartered July 1, 1845, and was opened in 1852. In 1859 it was leased for ninety-nine years to the Concord Railroad Company at an annual rental of 7 per cent. on $350,000 of stock, with $500 for support of organization. Annual rental $25,000. Stephen Kendrick, president, and Moody Currier, treasurer.

The Portland, Saco and Portsmouth Railroad extends from Portsmouth, N. H., to Portland, Me., a distance of 50.76 miles, and forms a portion of the Eastern Railroad. It was chartered in 1837, and opened Nov. 21, 1842. It was leased in perpetuity to the Eastern Railroad. E. B. Phillips, president, and N. G. Chapin, treasurer.

The Nashua and Rochester Railroad extends from Nashua, N. H., to Rochester, N. H., a distance of 48.39 miles. This road was chartered July 5, 1867, and opened Nov. 24, 1874. In 1872 it was leased to the Worcester and Nashua Railroad Company for fifty years. F. H. Kinnicutt, of Worcester, Mass., president, and T. W. Hammond, of the same city, treasurer.

The Portland and Rochester Railroad extends from Portland, Me., to Rochester, N. H., a distance of 52.5 miles. It was chartered as the York and Cumberland Railroad Company July 20, 1846, and opened to Saco River, eighteen miles, in February, 1853, and to Rochester in July, 1871. George P. Westcott, of Portland, Me., president; and W. H. Conant, of Portland, treasurer and secretary.

The Boston and Maine Railroad extends from Boston to Portland, Me., a distance of 115.50 miles. It is a consolidation of the Boston and Portland, chartered March 15, 1833; the Boston and Maine, chartered June 27, 1835; and the Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, chartered March 12, 1839. The road was opened from Wilmington, Mass., to South Berwick, Me., Feb. 23, 1843. Between Willington and Boston the Boston and Lowell Railroad was used until July 1, 1845, when an independent line was opened. The northern branch was completed in 1849, and since its opening has formed the connecting link between the Manchester and Lawrence, to which it was leased, and the Boston and Maine Railroads. The extension to Portland, Me., was opened Feb. 15, 1873. The road has a branch from Rollinsford to Great Falls, and also one from Newton Junction to Merrimack. Nathaniel G. White, president, Boston; Amos Blanchard, treasurer, Boston; and James Furlour, superintendent, Boston.

The Dover and Winnipiseogee Railroad extends from Dover, N. H., to Alton Bay, N. H., a distance of twenty-nine miles. It was chartered as the Cocheco Railroad in 1847, and opened in 1857. It was reorganized under its present name July 1, 1862. It has been leased for fifty years to the Boston and Maine. William Dale, president, and George W. Berns, treasurer. A branch of the Boston and Maine extends from Rollinsford to Great Falls, and also a branch from Newton Junction to Merrimack.

The Manchester and Lawrence Railroad passes through the southwestern part of the county. It was chartered June 3, 1847, and opened Nov. 13, 1849. B. F. Martin, president, and George B. Chandler, treasurer.

PORTSMOUTH.<sup>1</sup>

Motives of the Colonists—Early Voyagers—John Smith—The Piscataqua—Thomson's Settlement at Little Harbor—Mason and the Laconia Patent.

SEVERAL reasons may be assigned for persons leaving the comfort, order, luxury, and associations of an old land and an old home. There is in every community a class of adventurers of the type of John Smith, men fond of the excitement of travel, of novelty, ready to undertake any strange enterprise for the sake of the hazard, for exploration, for science, for notoriety, for profit, or for curiosity. The willingness of the new is more inviting than the regularity of the old. In all old and wealthy States there is a large class of persons, representatives of families of past prominence or departed splendor or dilapidated fortunes, who in a new place can maintain a position on cheaper terms, or follow with an easy grace employments they would not undertake where they are known, or more sons than can be placed in the ancestral neighborhood, or sons of wealth for whom many reasons conspire to make it better to seek situations elsewhere, as on the continent one constantly meets with English who in humble places or at low rates keep up an appearance of respectability they could not have at home, and as many from New England begin life at the West. The social barriers which other lands have made impassable are by the American idea entirely effaced by putting a few miles between our birth and our activity. "My son, you know," said a poor woman, "would never be anything in Portsmouth, but in Salem he is just as good as anybody." An old writer says, "If without offense it may be spoken, the multitude of patents granted to several gentlemen of broken fortunes hath provided an honorable exile or confinement, whither many deserving persons of better education than fortune were sent to shift for themselves in a foreign land without being further troublesome to those nearer home, on whom they had their hopes and dependence; yet it must not be denied but that some of the undertakers were at vast expenses, casting their bread upon these waters, where none of their friends and relatives have as yet had opportunity to find it." And this class of far-seeing, shrewd business men is always ready to send others or embark itself, and to bear any danger, delay, or loss in any enterprise which promises satisfactory returns, and especially questions of government and religion, of persecution and freedom, make it grateful for many to endure any hardships or abandon any associations for a free rule and a broader liberty of worship. It is difficult to analyze all the motives which enter into colonization; perhaps all we have named do in some degree with every settlement, nevertheless each has its prominent characteristics easy to be traced; in the Plymouth Colony the prevailing idea at first was religious liberty, for themselves, not for anybody else; in the Piscataqua Colony it was the spirit of mercantile enterprise.

Early Voyagers.—This spirit of enterprise, which in the seventeenth century was so active in the French, English, Spanish, and Portuguese, making them vie with each other in the establishment of colonies, the exploration of these western lands, and the discovery of new sources of wealth, must have sent persons to this part of the coast as early as 1602. At that time there was no European family along the line of the sea from Florida to Greenland. Foremost among the men thus filled with schemes for visiting and settling and owning the New World, and gaining therefrom fame or wealth, was Sir Walter Raleigh, the scholar, author, courtier, and adventurer. Among the men who had been interested with him in the discovery of Virginia was one Bartholomew Gosnold, who, in March, 1602, sailed for America, sighted the Maine coast and gave the name to Cape Cod. The voyagers were enraptured with the landscape, and one of them wrote after their return: "We stood awhile ravished at the beautie and delicacy of the sweetnesse, besides divers clear lakes whereof we saw no end, and meadows very large and full of greene grasse." Each voyage, whether successful or a failure, only aroused others, such is the fascination of a new and unexplored realm. The city of Bristol, England, was at that time foremost in all maritime adventures. Sebastian Cabot was a Bristol boy; a Bristol ship first touched our coast, and a Bristol ship first sailed up our noble river. In the spring of 1603 the city government and some merchants of Bristol, led thereto chiefly by a clergyman of that city, Richard Hakluyt, fitted out an expedition for trading and the further discovery of that part of this continent which, in ignorance of its extent and the uncertain limits of charters, was called North Virginia. The fleet consisted of a ship of fifty tons with thirty men and boys, and a bark of twenty-six tons with thirteen men and a boy, under the command of Martin Pring, and with a pilot who had been on the voyage the year before. They set sail from King Road, the anchoring ground, eight miles from Bristol, in March, 1603, and in June drew near to our coast, entered our harbor, and wrote of the "goodly groves and woods" along the banks of our river.

John Smith.—By 1614 the knowledge of our coast had grown more definite, and colonization began to assume larger and more permanent directions. The zeal for sudden wealth from the riches of mines led to a hasty occupation of the South, of Peru and Mexico by the Spaniards and Portuguese, but the English and French came with a tardier pace to the fur and fishing trade of the North, and yet found, as we have found in California, that the vineyards and pasture lands and husbandry are a surer and greater source of wealth than mines of gold or fields of diamonds. In March of this year the remarkable adventurer, John Smith, sailed for North Virginia, seeking a mine of gold and copper, or, failing in that, to fish and trade. He named the shoals which had previously been sighted and described Smith's Islands, spoke of our river, and on his return drew a quaint map of the coast and wrote a history of his voyages, and left it for Prince Charles to christen the new realm, so that in 1614 first appears the name of New England.

The Piscataqua.—It cannot but be interesting to notice the praises which the Piscataqua has called forth from the early voyagers and historians. One says "that westernmost and best river;" another, "the safe harbor and rocky shore of the Piscataqua;" another, "that famous, brave, and navigable river of note, which has been frequented ever since the country was first planted, whose channel is very swift and spacious, fit for vessels of great burden." And in an old deed, dated 1671, there is a will of one of the early merchants which runs thus: "I, Richard Cutt, for y<sup>e</sup> love I bear unto W<sup>m</sup> Vaughan, I do give unto him my stone warehouse, situate at Strawberry Bank and fronting upon the Grate River Piscataqua." And the truest poet of Portsmouth writes:

Like an azure vein from the heart of the main,
Pulsing with joy forever,
By verdurous isles, with dimpled smiles,
Flowereth my native river.
Singing a song as it flows along,
Bushed by the ice-king never;
For he strives in vain to clasp a chain
O'er thy fetterless heart, brave river!

RESIDENCE AND SURROUNDINGS OF HON. FRANK JONES, PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

Singing to me as full and free
As I sang to the dusky daughters,
When the light came like a sea-bird low
Over its parental waters.

Thomson's Settlement at Little Harbor.—In 1623 this spirit of enterprise took for us a more definite form, and with results reaching to the present day. Among a council of forty noblemen, knights, and gentlemen, to whom King James granted a charter for the "planting, ruling, ordering, and governing of New England in America," we find two persons conspicuous in energy and adventure, Sir Ferdinand Gorges and Capt. John Mason. Gorges was an officer of the English navy, intimate with Raleigh, and sharing his daring spirit. He had learned from some Indians many particulars of this part of the country, its rivers, harbors, islands, fisheries, and products; his enthusiasm to found a colony was not abated by many successive misfortunes, and his faith in its final success never died out. "I doubt not," he writes, "it will prove a very flourishing place, and be replenished with many fine homes and cities, it being a province both fruitful and pleasant." Mason was a London merchant, some time Governor of Newfoundland, where he learned in a general and indefinite way of these parts, and became as enthusiastic as Gorges to plant a colony, an enthusiasm which appears never to have left him amidst all the discouragements and difficulties which beset his attempts. He was also Governor of Portsmouth, in Hampshire, England.

Mason and the Laconia Patent.—The tradition that the first settlement at the Piscataqua was owing to the efforts of Gorges and Mason, or to the Laconia Company, of which they were members, has no foundation. From "An Indenture of David Thomson," recently discovered among the papers of Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, with careful "Notes" in explanation by Mr. Charles Deane, of the Massachusetts Historical Society, many of the doubts and uncertain dates and confused traditions are dispelled, and it appears that David Thomson and three merchants of Plymouth entered into an agreement, in pursuance of which Thomson came over in the ship "Jonathan" in the spring of 1623, and settled at "Little Harbor," a name which first appears in 1655, on the west side of the Piscataqua.

These three merchants were Abraham Colmer, Nicholas Sherwill, and Leonard Pomerie, and with Thomson they were to contribute to the expenses and to share the profits. It is provided in the partnership that the colony "shall and will use their best endeavors (by the direction of said David Thomson), with as much convenience as may be, to find out . . . some fit place to settle & build some houses or buildings for habitacons, on which they are to begin with as much expedition as they may; to the limits & precincts of which habitacons or buildings soe intended to be there erected, there shall be allotted of the lands next therunto adjoining, at or before the end of five years next ensuing the date hereof, the full quantitie of six hundred acres of land or more thereabouts." Jenness, speaking of the landing at Little Harbor, says, "The site selected for the settlement was chosen with excellent judgment. From the Little Harbor fronting the north side of the promontory a salt water creek runs back so far towards the ocean as almost to convert the inclosed point into an island of about six hundred acres area, which was the precise amount of land required by the indenture to be allotted to the new plantation. The soil is good, and among the rocks on the harbor shore is a living spring of fresh water. The harbor is safe and accessible at all times to vessels of light draught, and most commodiously situated for the prosecution of the fisheries as well as for the peltry traffic with the Indians of Sagamore Creek and Piscataqua River. Above all other advantages in those perilous times, the Point, rising on every side towards its centre and almost surrounded by water, was easily defensible against the assaults of savages. These considerations probably determined Thomson in the selection of this site for the new plantation, which he named, perhaps, from the Indian appellation 'Pannaway,' a name which seems, however, not to have survived the period of Thomson's own occupation and ownership of the plantation."<sup>1</sup>

In Winslow's "Good News," published in 1624, describing events apparently of the preceding summer, we find reference to "one Mr. David Tomson, a Scotchman, who also that spring began a plantation twenty-five leagues northeast from us, near Smith's fles, at a place called Pascatoaquack, where he liketh well." Thomson most likely remained at the Piscataqua until 1626, and deserves to receive the undivided praise as the founder of this settlement, while Mason had nothing to do with its beginning. In a deposition of several aged persons, including Edward Coleord, taken at Piscataqua Aug. 25, 1676, they make oath and affirm that "Capt. John Mason did never settle any government nor any people upon any land called the province of New Hampshire, on the south side of Piscataqua River, either by himself or any of his agents to this day."

After the Laconia grant, on the 17th of November, 1629, active measures were taken to found a colony, but without immediate success. Mason, who was one of the company, bought the shares of two of his associates and sent over some men and set up two saw-mills; but these and most of his operations were upon the east side of the river, in the territory which, in 1647, was incorporated as Kittery. The first ship which came out in the interests of the Laconia Company was the "Warwick," which sailed from London the last of March, 1630, with Walter Neal, Governor, and Ambrose Gibbons, factor; but, instead of begining, they found a permanent settlement had been made at the mouth of the Piscataqua for several years.

On the 22d of April, 1635, Mason obtained for himself, after discouragements and failures on the part of the previous company, a grant of the lands "between Naumkeag and Piscataqua," which, "with the consent of the Council, shall henceforth be called New Hampshire." It seems that after this grant Mason had great hopes and plans; he calls his whole grant on the Piscataqua "my country of New Hampshire, or Mannor of Mason Hall;" he doubtless had large expectations of some manor hall, with its surrounding estates, and of an inflowing fortune, but death put an end to all his dreams, leaving to another generation only an inheritance of lawsuits, which, amidst the perplexing grants to successive companies and individuals, given with little geographical knowledge, disturbed, convulsed, and embittered the settlement for many years. It was this high hope and this grand residence in the future which formed the only reality of a Mason's or manor hall at Little Harbor. There never was any such building. The settlers who came over in the "Warwick" doubtless occupied the houses at Little Harbor which were built by Thomson, and by common report one was of sufficient importance to give it the designation of the "large house," but the "Great House," which appears so frequently in early records, and the one more likely to which this pretentious title would be given, was a house built by one Chadbourne in 1631, which stood on what is now the corner of Court and Water Streets, and by reason of the rising ground from this spot to where St. John's Church stands being covered with wild strawberries, the settlement was commonly called Strawberry Bank until the year 1653, and familiarly so ever since, while by the inhabitants and the neighboring towns it was long known simply as "The Bank." The most serious thing we have to regret at the present day is that instead of "New Hampshire," a name it seems Mason designed to give to this region, and which was confirmed by a commission in 1679, we did not preserve either for the State or the town the far more interesting Indian name of Piscataqua.<sup>1</sup>

The Church of England.—It has been charged against the early settlers here that they were fishermen, or that they came merely for business purposes. Many of them doubtless found the fisheries the most profitable enterprise, and Smith sets forth the importance of that occupation and says, "Honorable and worthy countrymen let not the meanness of the word fish distaste you, for it will afford as good gold as the mines of Potassie or of Guiana, with less hazard and charge, and more certainty and facility." They were fishermen, but there were some very humble fishermen on the shore of the sea of Galilee who have played quite an important and respectable part in the history of the world, and it is true that the reason for the settlement was chiefly commercial; the colony, as most of the colonies in North America, except Plymouth, were sent over by merchants or came themselves to trade, and many of the troubles, the misfortunes, and want of prosperity in this settlement was owing to the fact that the proprietors had so little personal supervision over the settlers. They did not come to establish religious liberty for themselves, nor did they make a constant talk about their piety, but there is every reason to suppose that their general character was as good as that of their neighbors in the Bay Colony. They were, however, supporters of the Church of England, and therefore bitterly denounced by the Massachusetts Colony. In spite of the assertions which have been handed down generation after generation and repeated without examination and without reflection that this was merely a business settlement, a worldly and ungodly colony, while the saints were all at "the Bay," it is easy to show that the purpose of the founders was to make this a branch of the Established Church of England, and that this runs through all the charters. In the one to Gorges, in 1639, we find granted to him "full power, license, and authority to build and erect or cause to be built and erected soe many churches and chappelles there on to the said Sir Ferdinando Gorges, his heirs and assigns shall seeme meete and convenient, and to dedicate and consecrate the same according to all the ecclesiastical laws of this our realme of England," defying furthermore all his rights and privileges to be the same that the bishop of Durham had in the kingdom of England. In the earliest efforts made by the city of Bristol, the first inducement held out is "to plant the Christian religion," and that "the one of traffic, be it never so profitable, ought not to be preferred before the planting of Christian faith." One of the first expeditions under Gosnold which reached our coast carried with it a chaplain. Royal orders and instructions were issued requiring religious worship to be conducted as in the Church of England. Gorges' son Robert, who arrived in Massachusetts in 1624 to take superintendence of the churches to the great dismay of the settlers there, brought with him a clergyman of the English Church. One of the Puritan writers, referring to a settlement on the coast of Maine, rejoices "that one Episcopal colony is terminated, and its anticipated influence to advance the interests of the national church on our soil is hastily prevented;" and speaking of the settlement at Exeter, "thus the Granite State commenced its existence under the auspices of energetic and honorable proprietors, who proposed to give it the durable impression of Episcopacy as the efficient handmaid of royalty." In another place, referring to the efforts of Gorges at colonization, we find "his great preferences to have it done by sons of Episcopacy rather than by those withdrawn from its protection and rewards." Another royal charter says, "Our will and pleasure is that the religion now professed in the Church of England, and ecclesiastical government now used in the same, shall be ever hereafter preferred, and with as much convenient speed as may be settled and established in and throughout the said province and premises and every of them."

Gorges himself, in defending his company against various charges before the House of Commons, says, "I have spent £20,000 of my estate and thirty years, the whole flower of my life, in new discoveries and settlements upon a remote continent, in the enlargement of my country's commerce and dominions, and in carrying civilization and Christianity into regions of savages."<sup>1</sup> All these are testimonies that the aim of the proprietors and settlers was quite as truly religious as usually characterizes such enterprises. But their religious views were Episcopalian, and just at this period bitter strife reigned between Puritans and Episcopalians, and the strife in the old country was transferred to these shores. All the proprietors interested in the settlement were of the Established Church, and it was only natural that all the settlers who came out under them should be zealous in that faith. Gorges and Mason, Godfric and Neal, Gibbons and Chadbourne and Williams, and all the names which appear on the colonial records were doubtless of this faith, and the colonies at the Piscataqua and the bay were carried on with the same spirit that two rival and highly-excited parishes would be at the present time, only intensified by the more bitter theological hatred of that day. The leader of the Massachusetts colony even rejoiced at the death of Mason, as a proof of the Almighty's retribution upon the Episcopal settlement at the Piscataqua and his favor towards them. Governor Winthrop writes, "The last winter Capt. Mason died. He was the chief mover in all attempts against us, and was to have sent the General Governor, and for this end was providing ships; but the Lord in mercy taking him away, all the business fell our sleep." Among the earliest inventories of the colony's goods we find mention of service books, of a flagon, and of cloths for the communion-table, which show that provisions for worship were not neglected, and of what form the worship was.

Early Factors, or Governors. Anecdote of Mather.—After the departure of Thomson, and until the arrival of those sent out by the Laconia Company in 1630, our information about this settlement is slight and indefinite. Then came Neal as Governor, after his departure Godfric, with Warnerton at Strawberry Bank, then Williams as Governor in 1634. The colony began to extend over Great Island and along the bank of the river. A rude fort was built on the northeast point of Great Island, "about a bow-shot from the water-side to a high rock, the site of the present Fort Constitution. Under Williams, who is spoken of as a gentleman, a discreet, sensible man, accomplished in his manners and acceptable to the people, the first attempt at any combination for order and defense was made. It is related that Neal went on a journey of discovery to the White Mountains and the lakes, and gives a somewhat glowing account of them: "The summit was far above the clouds, and from hence they beheld a vapor like a vast pillar, drawn up by the sunbeams out of a great lake into the air, where it was formed into a cloud," but their hopes of mines and precious stones were dimmed. At another time Neal forbade a man who was about to begin a settlement at a point a short distance up the river. The dispute which arose was about to be settled by the sword, when a wiser thought suggested to each it would be braver not to fight, and so the place, known to the present generation as Nancy Drew's, was called Bloody Point, not on account of what actually happened, but what might have occurred in the event of a duel. Just before Neal left some trouble arose between him and the Governor of the Massachusetts Colony. It was charged against Neal that he did not call to see the Governor in Boston on his way to England, but Neal urged that he had not been well entertained the first time that he was there; that letters he had written had been opened in the Bay, and except he were invited he would not call. Winthrop says the letters were opened "because they were directed to one who was our prisoner, and had declared himself an ill-willer to our government." But political honor was rather low at that day, and if, even at a later period, England's prime minister confessed that he had no scruple in opening the letters of a political rival, the conduct of Massachusetts' Governor can be excused. Yet the incident shows that no papal inquisition ever exceeded the scrutiny of all persons or documents which came into the neighborhood of the Puritans. Warnerton seems to have been a wild and dissolute character. Winthrop says he lived very wickedly and kept the Piscataqua men under awe of him, while Warnerton, trying to collect a debt from one of the Bay Colony, called him rogue and knave, but added they were all so at the Bay, and he hoped to see all their throats cut. Whether he ever did anything worse than opening letters does not appear, but the incident reveals the general feeling that the two settlements cherished towards each other. All the early Puritan representation of this colony were in the same strain, and in return the bitterness of the eastern settlement against the Massachusetts was quite as great.

A Piscataqua man being in England in 1632 said of the Massachusetts planters, "They would be a peculiar people to God, but all goe to the Devil; they are a people not worthy to live on God's earth; fellows that keep hoggs all the week preach there on the Sabbath; they count all men out of their church as in a state of damnation."

John Josselyn, of Black Point, writes of the founders of Boston: "The chief objects of discipline, religion and morality, they want. Some are of a Linsie-woolsie disposition, of several professions in religion, all, like the Ethiopians, white in the teeth only, full of Iudification and injurious dealing and cruelty, the extremist of all vices. Great Synodies or censors, or controllers of other men's manners, and savagely factious among themselves."

In 1631, Thomas Dudley, afterwards Governor of Massachusetts, writing to the Countess of Lincoln in England, says of some of the settlers there, "Hearing of men of their own disposition, which were planted at Piscataway, went from us to them, whereby tho' our members were lessened, yet we accounted ourselves nothing weakened by their removeall." These first reports and prejudices in regard to this colony were repeated and spread without investigation and without confirmation. We find Cotton Mather, in the "Magnalia," recording an anecdote which conveys the same impression, and the locality of which, tradition has ascribed to the South Parish of this town: "There were more than a few attempts of the English to people and improve the Parts of New England which were to the Northward of New Plymouth, but the Designs of their attempts being aim'd no higher than the advancement of some worldly Interests, a constant Series of Disasters has confounded them until there was a Plantation erected upon the nobler Designs of Christianity; and that Plantation, tho' it has had more Adversaries than perhaps any upon Earth, yet having obtained help from God it continues to this day. There have been very fine settlements in the Northeast Regions, but what is become of them? I have read that one of our Ministers once Preaching to a congregation there urged them to approve themselves a Religious People from this consideration, That otherwise they would contradict the main end of Planting this Wilderness, whereupon a well-known Person then in the assembly [note assembly, which is a perfect translation of the Greek word 'church' in the New Testament] cried out, 'Sir, you are mistaken; you think you are Preaching to the People at the Bay; our Main End was to catch Fish.' Truly 'twere to have been wished that something more excellent had been the main end of the settlement in that brave country, which we have, even long since the arrival of that more Pious Colony at the Bay, now seen dreadfully unsettled no less than twice at least by the Sword of the Heathen after they had been replenished with many Hundreds of People, who had thriven to many Thousands of Pounds, and had all the force of the Bay, too, to assist them in the maintaining of their settlement." To any one who has investigated the history of these colonies this story is seen to be a capital piece of irony upon the cant of Puritanism, and the person in the pew evidently thought the preacher was ignorant of the design of this settlement, and wanted to call his attention to the fact that those to whom he was preaching were not banished nor self-exiled for religious opinions, but were on the loyal and Established Church side.

Settled Conclusions.—It seems that at this day it will never be possible to establish to the satisfaction of the careful historian several dates, and to explain several events in the early settlement of the Piscataqua, on account of the confusion arising from the first patents, which seriously complicated the different owner-ships, from the absence of sufficient trustworthy evidence, and from statements of the first writers, made without investigation, and repeated until they have been believed to have the authority of truth; but enough appears determined from the recovery of the indenture of David Thomson and careful research into the conflicting patents to regard it henceforth as settled that the credit of founding the Piscataqua colony belongs entirely to Thomson, and that he had nothing to do with the Laconia Company; that this colony was permanent, and that the one at Dover was several years later; that after the settlement by Thomson passed into the hands of the Laconia Company, the efforts and interests of Mason really begin; that the references to "Mason Hall," or "Mason's Manor Hall," which in so many records give such a pretentious sound to this settlement, do not apply to any building at Little Harbor, and if to any to a house called the "Great House," built by Chadbourne in 1631 at Strawberry Bank, but belong rather to the ambitious claims of his descendants at a much later date, and that the animosities and invectives which disfigure all early intercourse between the Massachusetts and the Piscataqua may be traced first to religious differences, and next to the overlapping and conflicting demands of successive grants given to different companies or individuals without any accurate knowledge of the boundaries of this new realm.

The Laconia Company.—Thomson removed from the Piscataqua to the Massachusetts in the latter part of 1626, and died there soon after. The government and progress of the Piscataqua for the next few years are involved in some obscurity. No claims appear from the heirs of Thomson to the property at Little Harbor, nor is it fully shown why he entirely abandoned his interests there, or who had charge of them until the Laconia Company sent out its agents in 1630. Mason obtained a patent on the 7th of November, 1629, of which no use was made, but ten days later the Laconia grant appears, and some active steps were at once taken to increase and make of some value the colony at Little Harbor. The bark "Warwick" arrived in the harbor of the Piscataqua on the 9th of September, 1631, bringing over some settlers, and came again the following winter with supplies and probably more settlers. Owing to some uncertainty about the patent under which they had begun operations, the association obtained a new grant on the 3d of November, 1631, covering both sides of the Piscataqua. The Laconia Company had in the beginning of its association obtained a charter for a large tract of land about Lake Champlain in the present State of New York, and was called Laconia from the great lakes included in the grant, and the secret of their operations at the Piscataqua was that from this point by an easy journey they could reach the lakes. With this idea they obtained possession of the buildings and interests of Thonson at Little Harbor, and for a while carried on their adventure with great hopes.<sup>1</sup> But the distance proved much farther than they in their ignorance of the country had supposed, and the difficulties insurmountable, and after many and great efforts, without any appreciable success or any return for their large and constant expenditures, all the Laconia association's interests at Little Harbor were abandoned.

Death of Mason.—Mason, however, evidently preserved his faith in the ultimate profits from all investments at this place, and on the 22d of April, 1635, obtained a grant by the Plymouth Council of a very large tract which covered both his former charters and was to extend sixty miles from the "first entrance of Piscataway Harbor," to take in "the South half of the Isle of Shoulds," all which was to be called by the name of New Hampshire, together with ten thousand acres on "the South East of the River of Sagadehook," to which was to be given the name of Masonia. In the midst of all the expectations from the settlement of such vast possessions Mason died, as we have seen, in the latter part of this same year, leaving for his heir an infant grandson.

Abandonment of the Settlement by His Widow.—For a time Mason's widow attempted to carry out her husband's plan in regard to the colony, and evidently with as great a faith in its ultimate success. One Francis Norton was sent out in 1638 to look after her interests, but she soon wearied of the large and constant expenditures and the deferred income; the settlers so far away, and soon conscious that the authority and oversight of the former proprietor were gone, began to take advantage of their situation to look out chiefly for their own interests, to divide the property among themselves for their wages, and Mrs. Mason, if she did not abandon her legal right, evidently in despair gave up all hope of carrying on the plantation, and ceased to provide for its needs.

Under the Jurisdiction of the Massachusetts.

The only government which appears in this colony from its settlement until the year 1640 was that of the stewards, or as they received sometimes the more dignified title of Governor; such were Neale, Jocelyn, and Norton. There was no idea for a long time of any self-governing state, or any rule apart from that of the home sovereignty; they went on as loyalists and members of the Established Church, with perhaps as much quiet and order as other settlements, but as their numbers increased, and the resolution to make a permanent colony became more fixed, efforts appear towards the establishment of a more formed and authoritative government. In this year a combination was entered into with Francis Williams, Governor, and Ambrose Gibbons and Thomas Warneron, assistants. But for some time previous to this the way had been preparing for the Piscataqua to come under the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts. The latter colony soon found that the charter of Massachusetts Bay was not as extensive as they had supposed, and had hardly become established before they began to reach out towards and covet the lands covered by the patent to Mason; the doubtful expressions in which these grants were conveyed made it easier to force an interpretation in agreement with their desires, and the more flourishing and powerful condition of the Massachusetts would have accomplished the purpose even earlier were it not for the different political and religious sentiments which prevailed at the Piscataqua. For several years, amidst all kinds of plottings and quarrelings, ambitious schemes and desire for greater protection, efforts at union were made and repelled, until it was finally accomplished in 1641, and the Piscataqua passed under the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts. Hugh Peters, an agent of the latter, after spending some time here, in the spring of that year reported to Governor Winthrop that the Piscataqua people were "ripe for our government; they grone for government and Gospel all over that side of the country. Alas! poore bleeding soules." From 1641 for a period of almost forty years, or until the commission of Cutt, the first Provincial President of New Hampshire, under whom the new government began on the 21st of January, 1678, the sway of the Massachusetts over this settlement was complete. But it was not harmonious. It was entered into out of the most selfish considerations on each side, and preserved amidst constant contentions, oppositions, and open revolts. In 1651 the residents at Strawberry Bank openly rebelled and attempted to escape from this jurisdiction, and again in 1664. There was a constant detestation of the union, which for prudential reasons they felt it necessary to abide by, and all the time they saw the influence of a party whose faith they bitterly opposed gaining ground among them. Their indignation appears in their petitions to their sovereign. In July, 1665, we find one headed by the distinguished Champernowne, and signed by the leading settlers, which sets forth among other grievances that "five or six of the richest men of this parish [meaning of course those who had become prominent under the power of the Massachusetts] have swaied & ordered all offices both civil and military at their pleasures: none of yo<sup>r</sup> Honor's petitioners, though Loyall subjects, & some of them well acquainted with the Laws of England, durst make any opposition for feare of great fines or long imprisonment, & for want of estates could not petition home to his Ma<sup>ty</sup> for relief, which the contrary party well knoweth, have kept us under hard servitude and denyed us in our publicke meeting the Common prayer, Sacraments, and decent buriall of the dead, contrary to the Laws of England." They also plead that they have been denied the benefit of freemen, that their lands have been taken away from them, and their grants disowned. Another petition about the same time asserts "to their great greife" that the sway of the Massachusetts has kept them from the good they expected, and so prays that they may be joined to the province of Maine, so "that they may be govrd by the knowne lawes of England, and enjoy the use of both the sacraments w<sup>ch</sup> they have been too deprived of," and they particularly mention Joshua Moody, Richard and John Cuit, and a few others, who were evidently leaders of the Puritan party and staunch upholders of the Massachusetts. By the year 1677, however, the Puritan influence had so far overcome the Church of England power that a petition with many names and much weight appears against any change, saying that they voluntarily subjected themselves to the Massachusetts government, and have not repented of it, that it has been a long-enjoyed and desired benefit which they fear to lose. "Wee are men y<sup>t</sup> desire to fear y<sup>r</sup> Lord & y<sup>r</sup> King, & not to medle with them y<sup>t</sup> are given to change, as well knowing what confusions, distractions, & Damage changes of governm<sup>ts</sup> are not unusually attended with."

The most effectual petition, however, was probably one from Mason and Gorges, praying for a Governor for the province of Maine and New Hampshire, on account of the injustice of the Massachusetts, "their violent intrusion and continued usurpation." This petition was received the 9th of January, 1677, and, as we have seen, the commission of President Cuit was sent out in December, 1679.

Claim of the Mason Heirs.—While all the intrigues and animosities in regard to the rule of the province were going on, another element of disturbance and angry feeling was thrown into this colony, the claim of the Mason heirs. It was, perhaps, the shadow of this impending difficulty which persuaded some to seek alliance with the Massachusetts, thinking thereby to gain their favor in the courts. Mrs. Mason, soon after her husband's death, was discouraged at the constant outlay required by the settlers, and gave up the whole enterprise. It was but natural, as she heard of the colony's growth and of a more stable government, to assert her claim to this region, and to seek some return for the great outlays Mr. Mason had made. But a few years of neglect would inevitably make vast changes in a new settlement even with the most honorable stewards and laborers, and in the midst of such conflicting grants there was easy opportunity for fraud of every kind, while the very accumulation of unpaid wages would in a brief period make the settlers feel they had earned all the possessions. As a matter of history, it was fifteen years before we find any protest from the attorney of Mrs. Mason against cutting timber on her lands along the Piscataway, and eighteen years before the first petition of Joseph Mason to the magistrates and deputies of the General Court in Boston, relating the expenses Mason had been at under the Laconia patent, and praying for some redress against the encroachments upon his property by the inhabitants of Strawberry Bank. Of course, each year, as the prosperity of the settlement increased, the more determined grew the heirs of Mason to recover their estate here, and in the lapse of time the statements of his expenditures were greatly exaggerated, and the necessity of maintaining their case led to the most bitter accusations and the most intense feeling on all sides, and what was at first a simple claim was aggravated by an appeal to all the political and religious interests which had been aroused just at that period both in England and in this settlement. In March, 1674-75, Robert Mason, the grandson and heir of John Mason, asserts his title to New Hampshire. He rehearses in a long petition the history of the settlement, the expenses of Mason, the unfaithfulness of the agents, the inability to recover anything through the General Court of Massachusetts, and his own vain attempts and costs to recover his estates here. Then, again, as the hope strengthened that his Majesty would appoint a President for New Hampshire, the claims of Robert Mason are reasserted at great length, with the added argument of a royal and church interest and fidelity from the beginning, and rehearsing the unjust laws which had been passed to confirm to the colonists the lands upon which they have been settled for years without any attempt at alienation, and what he himself had expended. Of course these claims were met by counter claims and charges, and all the fault was surely not on one side. As early as 1676 we find the depositions of several old settlers, whose testimony cannot all be worthless, and who on oath "doe affirm that Capt. John Mason did never settle any government nor any people upon any land called y<sup>e</sup> province of New Hampshire, on the south side of Piscataqua River, either by himselfe or any of his agents to this day. And whereas Mr.

Robert Mason, his grandchild, by his petition to his maj<sup>ty</sup> charges ye Governors of y<sup>e</sup> Massachusetts or y<sup>e</sup> Bostoners, as he calls them; for taking away their govern<sup>mt</sup> in a way of hostility; burning of their houses and banishing their people out of their dwellings, they doe affirme the same to be positively false." This fruitful source of discord embittered the whole colony long after the appointment of the first President.

The First Church.—The early religious interests of the Piscataqua were all centred in the Established Church of England. All those of any prominence were of that faith, and of course the settlers they sent over were of the same, and in the inventories of goods belonging to them we find provisions for that worship which doubtless was observed at Little Harbor and at the "Great House," which stood on what is now the corner of Court and Water Streets; but it was not until after the death of Mason that we find them taking any steps for the erection of a church. On the 25th of May, 1640, we find the grant of the glebe land in Portsmouth as follows: "Divers and sundry of the inhabitants of the Lower end of Pascataqua, whose names are hereunder written, of their free and voluntary mind, good will and assents, without constraint or compulsion of any manner of person or persons, have granted, given, and contributed divers and several sums of money towards the building, erecting, and founding of a parsonage house with a chapel thereto united, as also fifty acres of glebe land which is annexed and given to the said parsonage." We find in this same grant the names of the first church wardens (and as significant of the early Episcopal element the officers of the various old churches in Portsmouth are to this day called wardens), and that Mr. Richard Gibson has been chosen to be the first pastor. This first church was erected near where the Universalist Church now stands, and probably in the year 1638, for there is a tradition that Gibson preached and baptized in it in the month of August of that year.

Richard Gibson.—Richard Gibson was educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge, from which he took the degree of A.B. in 1636, and in that year appears as the minister of a colony at the Saco River, to which he had been brought by Mr. Trelawney. In seeking for some further information concerning this clergyman, the writer of this sketch was brought into correspondence with an aged gentleman residing at Ham, Plymouth (England), Mr. Collins Trelawney, a descendant of the one who had a grant of land near Portland, and who cherishes a hope that it is not too late to recover the estates which belong to his family in that region, including the whole city of Portland, a far more gigantic scheme and forlorn hope than the attempt of the Mason heirs.

The ministry of Gibson appears not to have been one of perfect peace, for in the Maine "Records" we find him complaining against a man for calling him a "base priest," and he says that he is much disparaged thereby in his ministry; so that it is evident the Episcopal settlements here and along the coast of Maine were not without some elements of Puritanism, as, on the other hand, in the Massachusetts there constantly came to the surface some elements of Episcopacy. Mr. Gibson, between the years 1638 and 1642, preached at the Saco settlement, at the Shoals, and at Strawberry Bank. In the latter year he was summoned by the General Court of Massachusetts for the crime of marrying and baptizing at the Isle of Shoals according to the ritual of the Church of England. Winthrop's account of the matter runs thus: "At this General Court appeared one Richard Gibson, a scholar, sent some three or four years since to Richmann's Island to be a minister to a fishing plantation there belonging to one Mr. Trelawney, of Plymouth, in England. He removed from thence to Pascataqua, and this year was entertained by the fishermen of the Isle of Shoals to preach to them. He, being wholly addicted to the hierarchy and discipline of England, did exercise a ministerial function in the same way, and did marry and baptize at the Isle of Shoals, which was soon found to be within our jurisdiction."

Gibson wrote to the minister at Dover, asking for help in opposition to the jurisdiction of the Puritans; but they were stronger in the contest, and he answered the demand of the marshal, and in 1642 appeared before the General Court. Either because the court recognized the fact that it had no authority in the case, or because he submitted himself to the favor of the court with the determination to leave the country, he was dismissed without fine or imprisonment, and soon after. This was one of the first fruits of the efforts of the Puritans to settle a country where freedom to worship God as he pleased should be every one's privilege.

Gibson is everywhere spoken of as accomplished and scholarly, but no gifts nor graces could count for anything while he was an open defender of the English Established Church.

Pulpit Supplies.—Soon after the union with the Massachusetts we find in those records this item: "It was ordered that the elders should be desired to take the care of the inhabitants of Strawberry Bank into their consideration and then help for providing a minister for them." One was soon found, who, being a Puritan, it was easy for Winthrop to consider "a godly man and a scholar,"—a Mr. Parker, of Plymouth,—but he was not an ordained clergyman. After his departure we find one after another supplying for a short time, the Episcopal element heartily and voluntarily contributing to their support rather than have no services, and this continued until the year 1658, when the long and eventful ministry of Joshua Moody begins.

The Name Portsmouth.—In May, 1653, we find this petition to the General Court at Boston: "Whereas the name of this plantation att present beinge Straberry banke, accidentally soe called by reason of a banke where straberries was found in this place, now Your petitioners' Humble desire is to have it called PORTSMOUTH, being a name most suitable for this place, it being the river's mouth and a good harbor as any in this land."

The Cutt Brothers.—Some time before 1646 there came from Wales three brothers, Robert, Richard, and John Cutt, who were to have a large influence in all the affairs of this colony. Maj. Cutt, a descendant, when at the Siege of Louisburg, met an English officer by the name of Cutt, and upon becoming acquainted, they found they had sprung from the same family; so thereafter the major added an s to his name, as did all the descendants of the family in Portsmouth. Robert settled at Great Island, and was a strong Episcopalian and royalist. Richard settled first at the Shoals, and became owner of most of Star Island in its day of greatest prosperity, and after making his wealth removed to Portsmouth and was interested in all its affairs. John settled at Strawberry Bank, where he came into possession of the Great House, and was a merchant of prominence, honor, and esteem. At the time of his prosperous business course the principal part of the town was built about the Point of Graves.

A New Meeting-House.—On the 27th of August, 1757, John and Richard Cutt, with Pendleton, Seavey, and Sherburne, were commissioned by the town to build a new meeting-house, not now a chapel, but still the town warden is employed. The settlement was so widely scattered and embraced such a great reach of territory that it is not surprising there was even at this date some difference of opinion as to where the new church should be located. After a long discussion and the appointment of referees to hear the reasons of all parties, the following conclusion was reached: "Wee whose names are under written, being deputed to consulte and determine the difference betweene the inhabitants of Portsmouth concerning the placinge of there meeting-house, upon the arguments alledged on either side doe judge and alsoe conclude all reasons weighled that it is upon all respects considered the meitest and most commodious place to erect a meeting-house is the little hill adjoininge to Goodman Webster's poynt." The tradition has it that Goodman Webster kept a place of entertainment, and in that day the location of the meeting-house near by might be judged not altogether without its conveniences. Doubtless the importance of New Castle and the travel by that road had something to do with determining the situation; at all events the new meeting-house, the second place of worship in Portsmouth, was built on that "little hill" just beyond the South Mill Bridge, on "the crotch of the roads" (as an old record has it) leading to the pound and Frame Point, or what is now just by the parting of the roads leading to New Castle and the South Cemetery, while the old chapel was converted into a house for the minister. Of this building there is a description minute enough to reconstruct it, and to this came the inhabitants from the wide domain of the town without any too tender regard for distances or for storms, from Rye, Greenland, New Castle, and Warrington, to hear the word and tell the news.

Cage and Pillory.—This new meeting-house did not stand alone, but there were soon added those other appointments which were then regarded as a necessary addition to the church. On the 25th of September, 1662, it was ordered, "That a cage be made or some other means invented by the selectmen to punish such as sleepe or take tobacco on the Lord's day out of the meeting in time of the public services." The cage, stocks, and pillory were built near the meeting-house. The pillory was a frame erected on posts, with holes and movable boards, through which the head and hands of the offender were put; the stocks was a machine constructed of wood, with holes through which the feet of the offenders were passed and their bodies thus confined. In 1669 permission was granted to one Fryer, of New Castle, "the towne's right of twenty foote square of land neare the meeting-house to sett up a house & keep wood in for to accommodate himself & family in winter time when he comes to meeting." It was customary in the early days of New England for small houses, called Sabbath-day houses or noon houses, to be built near the church, a few feet square, with a large fireplace, where the worshippers went before, between, and after services to warm themselves or to replenish their foot-stoves with coals.

Pews and Seating.—In the increasing prosperity of the settlement the new meeting-house was soon filled to overflowing, and we find a record in 1660 that the selectmen, in order to regulate the confusion occasioned by the crowd, "placed the women in their seats as commodiously as the room will afford." From time to time leading parishioners were granted permission to build, at their own cost, seats or pews for themselves in various parts of the house, seats and pews of varying length and breadth, so that the aisles, or alleys as they were called, ran among the seats, and it was not until 1693 that the pews were made according to one regular order. We find the choice of a sexton to ring the bell and make clean the meeting-house for four pounds a year; and a man engaged by the town at twenty shillings per annum "for to look after the demeanor of the boys at meeting;" and a vote that five or six persons should have liberty "to build a pair of stairs up to the westward beame within the meeting-house, and a pew upon the beam," for their own use and at their own charge; that "strangers are not to be discommodious to the meeting-house;" and that no boys should be snuffered to sit on the stairs or above stairs, and that no young men or young women offer to crowd into any seat where either men or women are seated.

Early Laws and Rulers.—After the erection of New Hampshire with a royal province, under President Cutt, we trace the operations of an established and authoritative government through the acts of a General Assembly. We find it framing a code of laws, comprising sixteen "capital," twenty-seven "criminal," and forty-five "general laws." Here is what constituted drunkenness in that day: "By drunkenness is to be understood one y<sup>e</sup> lips or falters in his speech by reason of overmuch drinke, or y<sup>e</sup> staggers in his going, or y<sup>e</sup> vomits by reason of excessive drinking, or y<sup>e</sup> cannot, by reason thereof, follow his calling." Here is the law against scandal or malicious gossip, or the dealers in false news: "That w<sup>t</sup> p<sup>r</sup>son soever, being 16 years of age, or upwards, shall wittingly or willingly make or publish any lie w<sup>ch</sup> may be tending to y<sup>e</sup> damage or hurt of any p<sup>t</sup>icular p<sup>r</sup>son, or w<sup>ch</sup> intent to deceive & abuse y<sup>e</sup> people with false news or reports, shall be fined for every such default 10s., and if y<sup>e</sup> p<sup>t</sup>ie cannot or will not pay y<sup>e</sup> fine, then he shall sit in y<sup>e</sup> stocks as long as y<sup>e</sup> Court shall thinke meete; & if the offenders shall come to any one of Councill & own his offense, it shall be in y<sup>e</sup> power of any one of y<sup>e</sup> Councill afore<sup>d</sup> to execute y<sup>e</sup> law upon him where he liveth, & spare his appearance at y<sup>e</sup> Court; but in case when y<sup>e</sup> lie is greatly p<sup>r</sup>icious to y<sup>e</sup> Comon Weal, it shall be more severely punished, according to y<sup>e</sup> nature of it."<sup>1</sup>

President Cutt died in 1682, and was succeeded temporarily by his deputy, Richard Waldron, a prominent and active man in the colony, and a zealous friend of Massachusetts, until the appointment and arrival of Cranfield as Lieutenant-Governor and commander-in-chief, and with powers greatly exceeding any of his predecessors. His commission begins thus, "Whereas our colony of the Massachusetts (alias Massachusetts Bay), within our dominion of New England, in America, hath taken upon themselves to exercise a government and jurisdiction over the inhabitants and planters in the towns of Portsmouth, Hampton, Dover, Exeter, and all others y<sup>e</sup> towns and lands in our Province of New Hampshire, lying and extending itself from three miles northward of Merrimaek River into the province of Maine, not having any legal right or authority so to do, the said jurisdiction and all farther exercise thereof we have thought fit by the advice of our Privy Council to inhibit and restrain for the future. . . . Now know ye, that we, reposing especial trust and confidence in y<sup>e</sup> prudence, courage, and loyalty of you, the said Edward Cranfield, Esq., out of our especial grace, certain knowledge, mere motion, have thought fit to constitute and appoint you our Lieutenant-Governor and commander-in-chief of all that part of our province of New Hampshire," etc. His commission has also these words, "and above all things we do by these presents will, require, and command you to take all possible care for the discountenance of vice and encouragement of virtue and good living, that by such example the infidels may be incited and desire to partake of the Christian religion; and for the greater care and satisfaction of our said loving subjects in matters of religion, we do here by will, require and command that liberty of conscience shall be allowed unto all Protestants, and that such especially as shall be conformable to the rites of the Church of England shall particularly be countenanced and encouraged." This is the exception which is always understood with liberty of conscience, especially to favor our own, and such an exception gives unbounded liberty of persecution to a narrow and bigoted official. In "liberty of conscience" and a desire to establish it there is not anything to choose between Puritan and Episcopalian in this period of excited controversy; neither knew what it really meant, each claimed it only so far as it suited his own interests or prejudices; so history everywhere gives a partial and false impression by the emphasis which the writer lays upon the injustice done to those with whom he happens to sympathize. In the "Notes on the Laws of New Hampshire," above quoted from, we find (page 10) this passage: "The Rev. Mr. Moody, the only minister in Portsmouth during the administrations of Cutt and Cranfield, refused to baptize the children of some of his parishioners according to the ceremony of the English Church, though often and earnestly requested." Liberty of conscience seems to have been interpreted by him to mean intolerance of any conscience but his own. Yet no one who has read the history of this period with any freedom from bigotry would venture to say there was any less intolerance on the part of Cranfield, while, if enlightenment of conscience by a pure and noble life could be comited upon, Moody was by far the more acceptable life.

Governor Cranfield left the province in May, 1685, and was succeeded for a short time by Walter Barefoote, his deputy, until the commission of Dudley in May, 1686, and he in turn was followed by Andros from December, 1686, to April, 1689. Then for a period of eleven months the province was without any government until it was reannexed to the province of Massachusetts on the 19th of March, 1690. During this period, as is shown by the careful paper of Mr. Charles W. Tuttle on "New Hampshire without Provincial Government," the attacks of Indians, especially the tragedy at Dover, in which the venerable Richard Waldron, one of the most prominent men in these settlements, and a number of the inhabitants were slain, and the dangers from the French revealed the weakness and insecurity of these separate colonies, and forced them for self-protection to join with the Massachusetts, under whose rule the Piscataqua remained until Samuel Allen was commissioned as Governor of the province, Aug. 13, 1692. His son-in-law, Usher, was appointed with him as Lieutenant-Governor, a man, as we shall see, particularly objectionable to the people on account of his arbitrary interest and action in the Mason claims.

Partridge, the Earl of Belmont, Dudley, and William Vaughan successively administered the government of this province, either as Governors or Lieutenant-Governors, until the commission of John Wentworth as Lieutenant-Governor, signed by the distinguished Joseph Addison as Secretary of State, was published to the province on the 7th of December, 1717, and the more settled history, government, and prosperity of the province begins, as well as the longer reigns of its rulers.<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER IX.

PORTSMOUTH.—(Continued.)

The Mason Claims—Theological Movements—Early Clergymen—Cranfield and Moody—Imprisonment of Moody—Mr. Moody's Interest in Harvard College—His Death.

Mason Claims.—During all this period, to the government of which we have briefly referred, and even to a much later date, the petitions and efforts of the Mason heirs were fruitful of the most constant and serious disturbance to the province, and of course with a legal if not an equity claim. In 1681 we find a petition, signed by most of the prominent settlers, setting forth that "the great matter of difficulty now amongst us is referring to Mr. Mason's pretensions to the propriety of the lands we possess, some countenance to his clayme whereunto he hath gotten in yo<sup>r</sup> Maj<sup>ty</sup> Commission under the broad Seal, which we cannot but thinke has been by inderect meanes and untrue informations (in w<sup>ch</sup> he abound) obtained. Wee are informed y<sup>e</sup> he has no authority, Authentique, Original, or Dupliccate, of any grant for the soyle, nor hath he in any measure attended the scope of such grant (if any such had been made to him), viz.: the peopling of the place and enlarging yo<sup>r</sup> Maj<sup>ty</sup> Dominions, both which have been vigorously attended by the present Inhabitants. The vast expence of estate is mostly if not merely a pretence. An house was built in this province, but the disbursements laid out were chiefly in the Neighbouring Province of Meyn, on the other side of the River, and for carrying on an Indian Trade in Laconia, in all w<sup>ch</sup> his grandfather was but a partner, however he would appear amongst us as sole proprietor." The petition states at length how Mason has tried to substantiate his claims by the signatures of persons of no influence or account in the province, and adds, "These subscribers are the generality of the whole province, y<sup>e</sup> are householders and men of any principles, port, or estate."

This is met by a counter petition from Mason, requesting all the acts of the Governor and company of the Massachusetts Bay to be declared void and illegal, and that "the petitioner may not be any longer kept out of his inheritance by the continuance and practices of evill minded men."

After Cranfield assumed the government here and had looked into this disturbing element, we find him writing that "Mr. Mason hath much misrepresented y<sup>e</sup> whole matter, both as to y<sup>e</sup> place and people. . . . Instead of being ready to own Mr. Mason as their Proprietor, they are very slow to admit of any person except their Sovereign Lord, the King, to be their Lord Proprietor." In the same paper he adds, "Touching Ecclesiastical Matters, the attempting to settle y<sup>e</sup> way of y<sup>e</sup> Church of England, I perceive wilbe very grievous to the people. However, Mr. Mason asserted y<sup>e</sup> their Inclinations were m<sup>ch</sup> y<sup>e</sup> way. I have observed them to be very diligent and devout in attending on y<sup>e</sup> mode of worship w<sup>ch</sup> they have been brought up in, and hath been so long settled amongst them, and seem to be very tenacious of it, and am very thankfull for His Maj<sup>ty</sup>'s gracious Indulgence in those matters."

In 1691, Robert Tufton Mason, to whom the estate of his brother, John Tufton Mason, had descended, sold his whole claim in the province of New Hampshire to a merchant in London, Samuel Allen, for the sum of seven hundred and fifty pounds, a paltry sum after the statements of expenditures and the prosperity of the colony, or a proof that the confidence in his legal claim or the hope of recovering anything had nearly vanished. One of the chief reasons for Usher's unpopularity was his attempt immediately upon arriving to secure into his own possession all the papers relating to the Mason claims. For some time, through the determined opposition of Pickering, a man very prominent in the early history of the settlement in both church and State, he was prevented, and at last after succeeding, and after many discussions and legal attempts, a peaceful solution of the long standing contention was about reached when Allen died and his son carried on the strife. Again, in 1746, John Tufton Mason, still claiming a title to the realm of New Hampshire, sold it in fifteen shares to twelve persons prominent in the province, who at once released to all the towns the lands which came under the old grants, and Mason's claim forever fell asleep. Two or three conclusions are evident from a careful review of the whole matter,—that Mason was not the original founder of this colony, but the one who carried on the original settlement by Thomson to a successful issue; that he was one who by a long and generous interest showed his unwearied faith in its final success; that he doubtless spent large sums upon this colony without any encouraging returns; that after the settlement was by his heirs for a long time abandoned there is every reason to suppose the wages of his colonists and their labors to build up the province fairly entitled them to most of the possessions here, and that most of the claims made by succeeding generations of heirs were manifestly exorbitant and unjust. But, on the contrary, when in "Notes on an Indenture of David Thomson and others," recently recovered among the papers of the Winthrop family, it is said, "New Hampshire has but little cause to cherish his (Mason's) memory; and he would probably have been forgotten but for the accidental revival of his name by the claims of his heirs, who used them as an instrument to annoy and perplex the settlers on the soil, who had acquired a right to their homesteads and farms by long undisturbed possession," we think we find here the old spirit of the Massachusetts to belittle the character of the settlers at the Piscataqua, for there is no reason to suppose that Mason was not an honorable, loyal, generous, and good man.

Theological Movements.—The change in the Piscataqua from Episcopacy to Puritanism, which was made during one of the most excited ecclesiastical periods in history, finds its only explanation in an understanding of the ecclesiastical parties of England and New England. That vast theological movement which spread over Europe in the sixteenth century under the name of the Reformation reached England in the reign of Henry VIII. Convocation after convocation for arranging articles of faith broke up with only a wider separation. During the next reign of Edward VI. a committee of bishops and divines translated and arranged from the Latin of the ancient liturgies enough to form the Book of Common Prayer, which substantially in its present form was adopted in 1548, and ordered to be read throughout the kingdom. The Established Church of England was a compromise between Papacy and Calvinism, the faith of Rome and Geneva, the two great rival centres of theology for that day. It was, and was intended to be, neither one thing nor another, but so admirably proportioned to the tastes of the discordant factions that in it the Romanist might find enough of his old ritual to make him think he was still coming to mass and the Puritan enough of change to make him think the church had been purified, and, as a matter of history, "even those who were addicted to the Romish communions made no scruple of attending the Established Church. Her doctrinal confessions," says Macaulay, "set forth principles of theology in which Calvin or Knox would have found scarcely a word to disprove. Her prayers and thanksgiving, derived from the ancient liturgies, are very generally such that Cardinal Pole might have heartily joined in them. Utterly rejecting the doctrine of transubstantiation, and condemning as idolatrous all adoration paid to the sacramental bread and wine, she yet, to the disgust of the Puritan, required her children to receive the memorials of divine love, meekly kneeling upon their knees. Discarding many rich vestments which surrounded the altars of the ancient faith, she yet retained to the horror of weak minds the robe of white linen which typified the purity which belonged to her as the mysterious spouse of Christ." And yet, as history found, in the very concessions which gave her birth were the elements which forbade perpetuity, and by the gradual development of which she is now breaking up pieces.

When Mary came to the English throne, through her leaning to Catholicism, the ancient liturgies of the mass were revived, and the Book of Common Prayer abandoned. Under Queen Elizabeth the service according to the Book of Common Prayer was restored. During her reign the thirty-nine articles were prepared by a convocation of the clergy, and at the same time a vote was taken in the Lower House upon throwing out the ceremonies, and they were retained only by a majority of one, showing how nearly balanced the Puritans and Episcopals had become. After these articles were adopted the clergy were ordered to subscribe to them, and those who refused were termed Non-conformists. Elizabeth liked more and more the ritual of Rome, and felt more and more that the Reformers had gone too far in cutting off forms and observances; while on the other hand the Non-conformists, many of them leaving on account of persecution, came back from the homes of the Reformation whether they fled still more embittered against all forms, and persecution was returned by persecution.

When James came to the throne the Reformers expected from him some favors, because he had been reared in Scotland and because he had twice sworn and subscribed to their Confession of Faith, and once said in the General Assembly of the Puritans that he praised God he was born to be king of such a church, the purest in the world, and that the service of the Church of England was an ill said mass in English.

But we have all found that the promises and professions of a man before gaining office and his performances afterwards are rarely in accord. So when James became king his demeanor towards the Puritans entirely changed. He was himself a man of free living to say the least, liked mirth and sports, and could not bear the severe discipline of the Reformers. He had learned also in Scotland that with all their complaints against the Romanists the Presbyterian clergy of the Scotch Kirk had quite as much of the spirit of popery as the Romish priests, and that they were bent upon a union of church and State even more complete than at Rome, only it was to be of their ruling, and moreover he found that the Puritans were tending to a democracy sure to be his overthrow. "A Scotch Presbytery," said King James, "agrees as well with monarchy as God and the devil." So James as monarch began a violent opposition to the Puritans. Still the parties had not come to an open rupture, and James called a council to harmonize the differences. The subjects of greatest dispute were the cross in baptism, the ring in marriage, the use of the surplice, and bowing at the name of Jesus. Some changes were made in the Common Prayer; each party went away more than ever dissatisfied. At this long reach of years it is impossible to enter into or portray the intense excitement which pervaded every class in England. The kingdom, about equally divided, was hastening on to the temporary rule of the Puritans during the establishment of the Commonwealth. Persecution on the side of the Established Church was met by railery on the side of the Reformers. All the innocent amusements of life were classed with the guilty by the indiscriminating and stern Puritans. The sports of the English people came particularly under their ban, and when the king gave countenance to dancing, archery, and may-poles on Sunday after worship, the wrath of the Puritans was beyond control. Bear-baiting, then a favorite sport, particularly called forth the censure of the Puritans, and if with any of that humane instinct which at the present day characterizes the movement against cruelty to animals it had been well, but the Puritans opposed it not because it was wrong in itself or tortured the animals, but simply because their opponents indulged in it: as Macaulay has so pointedly expressed it, "the Puritans hated bear-baiting not because it gave pain to the bear but because it gave pleasure to the spectators."

All the forms of the church which had been endeared by generations of worshipers became the butt of the Puritans. The altar was removed from the wall and placed in the middle of the church, and thenceforth denominated the communion-table, while the papists irreverently termed them oyster-boards. The sermons of the Puritans, their long prayers and endless discourses, became the ridicule of the Ritualists. Queen Elizabeth used to say that two or three preachers were sufficient for a whole county, while the Puritans found not a little compensation for their exile in listening to sermons of indefinite length whenever they pleased.

To add to the theological bitterness came also a political warfare, for it was deemed by the reformers that the spirit of liberty could not coexist with monarchy, that Episcopacy was the natural enemy of democracy, and the same rancor they bore towards their spiritual head, the pope, was turned against their political head, the king.

The turbulence and bitter personalities which filled all England, both in church and State, are equaled but two or three times in history.

Now it was at the very culmination of these troubles that our settlements were made, the Bay Colony by the Puritans, Maine and New Hampshire, the Piscataqua by the adherents of the Established Churches. The first chapel on Pleasant Street was built, and Richard Gibson, the first minister of the Piscataqua parish, preached in it the very year (1638) that Episcopacy was abolished in England, and the glebe with its chapel and parsonage was given by the inhabitants to the wardens and their successors forever, just on the eve of the civil war in England. Can any one at all acquainted with the bitterness of party feeling, either in politics or theology, fail to see a sufficient explanation of the constantly repeated charges against the Piscataqua settlement that it was begun and carried on simply in the interests of trade, and by men who had no religion, for to the Puritans Episcopacy was no religion? On the other hand, does not the same height of party feeling lead us to suppose that the supporters of the Established Church at this point did everything with reference to its perpetuity, if for no other reason because it was, even though weak, an open testimony to their cause in the very face of Puritanism? No one can wish to question the purity of life or the praiseworthy sacrifices of many of the Puritans, or that the first settlement of the Plymouth Colony was made singly in the interests of religious liberty; but the spirit of colonization at that time pervaded all classes about alike, and the character of the various settlements soon became much the same.

One of the Hiltons of our Dover settlement, first settled at Plymouth, writes from there in 1621, and after speaking of the pleasant climate, fertile lands, plentiful timber, and abundant fruits, goes on to say, "We are all freeholders, the rent day doth not trouble us, and all those good Blessings we have in their season for taking. Our Companie are for most part very religious, honest people; the word of God sincerely taught us every Sabbath, so that I know not anything a contented mind can here want." Nothing could better reveal than this private correspondence the actual character of the colony,—persons who felt a glad sense of release from their persecutions, from the restraints and taxes and formalities of an old community, and who were equally pleased with the devoutness of their simple worship.

There was an additional reason why the Bay Colony should regard this colony with distrust, and follow it with all the mis-representations born of the bitter conflict in England. Puritanism had not yet quite gained the supremacy, and until it did there runs all through the history of that settlement a fear of Episcopacy, lest perchance they should themselves be brought under its sway. Elements of the Established Church constantly come to the surface, and call forth such a feeling of indignation, wrath, and anxiety as can now hardly be appreciated.

When Robert Gorges, son of Sir Ferdinando, came to the Massachusetts Bay, with a learned and worthy minister of the English Church to begin a settlement, and other families, they found no peace. Attempts to found Episcopal Churches in Massachusetts proved constant failures. At Salem Common Prayer was read for a while, but Maverick and Skelton, and Blackstone and Lyford, and other clergymen of the Established Church found no reception for their views and little toleration for their efforts. The Massachusetts Colony was constantly in dread lest the king should impose the ceremony of the Church of England upon them, and, either with or without just reason, constantly suspected Mason and Gorges and the settlement at the Piscataqua of inducing the king to do so, and charged them with misrepresenting the Bay Colony to the government of England.

On the other hand, the settlements along the Maine coast and at Piscataqua were strictly in the interests of the Established Church; and without making any claims for the special godliness of their members, the testimony is ample that though the kind of religion was different from the Bay Colony, there was just as much interest in the kind. When the expedition under Popham reached the Maine coast in 1607, as soon as they land they listen to a sermon from their preacher, Richard Seymour, and as soon as they disembark they build a church.

It is easy to see, therefore, that all the heat of ecclesiastical troubles in the old country was reproduced in these neighboring settlements. The question then arises, How did the Episcopal parish here pass so rapidly and completely under the control of the Puritans? The solution is not afar. In the first place, as in the Bay Colony some elements of Episcopacy appear, so there were doubtless some of Puritanism already here from the beginning. Next, with the greater influence and fear of the Massachusetts colony, all her efforts were directed towards hastening the supremacy of Puritanism. We find a record that a merchant of London writes to John Winthrop, Jr., "there are honest men about to buye out the Bristol men's plantations on Piscataqua, and doe propose to plant there five hundred poor people;" and a little later Bristol merchants who had bought the patents of Edward Hilton sell them to purchasers by the encouragement of Massachusetts, "in respect they feared some ill neighborhood from them;" whereupon one of the Puritan historians writes, "As these new proprietors were of Puritan preferences and principles, such a consideration must have been very welcome to the Bay authorities, who naturally wished to be surrounded by those who labored for the same great cause of reformation."

To the ecclesiastical enmity which separated the colonies at the Bay and at the Piscataqua there must be added a political animosity also, arising from the feeling on the part of some that the Bay Colony had assumed here a jurisdiction which never justly belonged to it, a feeling which seems to have remained deep-seated and active even to the time of the appointment of the first Governor of the separate province of New Hampshire.

In 1664 the king appointed commissioners to visit all these colonies and collect testimony in regard to the many complaints which had reached the court. The appointment of it created great opposition by the Bay Colony, and great consternation at the Pis-cataqua. The religious and political differences ran so high that the commissioners found hard work and ill treatment awaiting them. John and Richard Cutt, who seem to be the leading selectmen of Portsmouth, send a messenger post-haste to Boston for advice, saying that although "our people the five to one are in their hearts for the Bay, yet they have fears that the king's commissioners will gradually take advantage upon us by secret seducing the ignorant and ill affected, then will openly prevail with the rest;" but when the commissioners came and held their meeting at Portsmouth, one Henry Sherborne (the same who was a church warden, when it was demanded who would be under the immediate government of the king and renounce the Massachusetts, "the said Henry Sherborn said, 'one and all for the King,' or in words to that effect."

Such are the incidents which reveal to an impartial consideration the true condition of the colony, its various divisions, its theological and political excitement, and its personal animosities.

In the light of this historical sketch we find then a far safer and more sufficient explanation of the early matters of our settlement than it has been customary to give. All the charges that it was made only in the interests of trade, and that it was wholly irreligious, or, as Winthrop says, that it was the usual manner (some of them) of the colonists here to countenance all such lewd persons as fled from the Bay here, as if our settlement was composed of that class of persons, fall to the ground. The accusation has the common sound and taint of the party feeling which ran at that time so high. Many early settlers both at the Bay and here were of the highest class of colonists who ever left a mother-country, and many were of that restless nature moved by the numberless motives which fill all new settlements. As human beings they were pretty much the same, as worshippers they were widely apart and greatly embittered against each other, but the settlement at the Piscataqua I have satisfactorily shown was planned and supported enthusiastically in the interests of Episcopacy.

In the light of this historical review we find the only true explanation of another point which has been as steadily misunderstood or misrepresented. If the first parish and church were Episcopal, how is it that all the services after the departure of Gibson were by Puritan ministers, and that the chapel, parsonage, glebe land, and all the appointments for public worship were transformed with seemingly so little public or long-continued opposition to the Puritans?

In the first place we must give up all those suggestions which, if they did not show themselves as too partisan, would be too absurd, such as that the forms of the deed were expressed according to the Church of England, and appropriate church terms were used because no other were at hand; that the deed was purposely drawn so as to leave the form of worship to be decided from time to time. Would anybody have reasoned thus if a Catholic priest had been chosen, or the glebe land come under the Romanists' patronage, or that the adherents of the Established Church, in assenting to the worship they were powerless to prevent, did ever see in the change any perversion of the original intention and employment of the gift? We all well know that churches are never thus indifferently founded, and that the denominational spirit is not so readily transferred, and does not so readily die out. If we could ask Walford and Sherborne, the first wardens, or any of the little congregation of churchmen who, in that little log chapel on Pleasant Street, saw the Puritan minister, Parker, officiate in the winter of 1642 without robes, and without the Book of Common Prayer, whether there was in that any perversion of the provisions for the maintenance of a church, can there be any doubt what their reply would be?

The parish had been gathered, the chapel and parsonage built, and the glebe land set apart with no other thought than that the worship according to the Established Church of England would be perpetual in the Piscataqua settlement, but the proprietors and supporters of the settlement died, and their estates came into new hands. Some of the leading churchmen of the colony went elsewhere or died, and of course many of the settlers were as willing to support the worship of one church as another, and some were earnest for Puritanism. The Bay Colony, as we have seen, was far more populous and prosperous, and even reached as far as England to see that their neighboring settlers were of the same faith. The jurisdiction of Massachusetts was established over the Piscataqua settlement just at that time, and the very year the chapel was built Episcopacy was abolished in England. If all the records which a sectarian zeal made way with were extant, we should doubtless find more open opposition to the rule and worship of the Puritans than we do, but the Episcopalians could no longer support public services, and their numbers were soon almost lost in the rapid increase of Puritans. In secret, without a doubt, they trusted that the Established Church would soon be triumphant, the combination with Massachusetts be dissolved, and the king confirm to them all the rights of their chapel and worship. That time never came. It remained for them to worship in their own chapel under other forms or to have no public worship at all. They did the former, and even Sherborne himself became much interested in subsequent ministrations of the South Parish, and in the building of the Second Church.

The Puritans, too, could not as I see have done or been expected to do otherwise. There was the unused chapel and parsonage and glebe land; perhaps no one thought of objecting to their worshipping in it. When Sunday came round, as a company of travelers in distant lands and of divers faiths, they were all glad of some kind of worship, and went to what they had. As to their appropriating it as their own thereafter, that was what either side was doing to the other whenever it could during that long period of ecclesiastical anarchy, and justice from one bitterly excited sect towards another is something which is still remanded to a Sunday's meditation rather than to the consideration of a parish meeting.

I find not so much fault with what the Puritans did at the time as their explanations of it afterwards, when a calmer survey of history, or a little meditation upon the golden rule, ought to have taught them better, not so much with what they did in the heat of theological warfare as what they attempted to justify in the calm of Christian worship.

With the departure of Gibson in 1642 the public services of Episcopacy in the Piscataqua settlement came to an end. We shall find that it was almost precisely a century before they were again opened, but not so as to have any historical associations with the first parish and chapel of their faith on Pleasant Street; all the worshippers there had become a part of the South Parish, and yet it is but a fair concession to the tenacity with which we know persons hold to their inherited or adopted faith to regard it as quite probable that during that century Episcopacy did not quite die out among the descendants of the early worshippers.

The most important incidents in the recorded history of this settlement now follow for a time the two or three principal pastorates. Joshua Moody began his ministrations in the year 1658, and the next year was regularly settled as the minister of the town. He was born in Wales in 1632, and brought by his father to this country the following year. The family lived for a time at Ipswich, and removed to Newbury in 1635. Mr. Moody graduated at Harvard in 1653, and began the study of theology. He preached in the new meeting-house in Portsmouth with so much approval that a subscription was taken for his maintenance for a year, and then he was called to be the minister, yet such was the division of sentiment on account of Puritanism and Episcopacy, preventing any permanent and harmonious action, that he was minister of the town for twelve years before a church, meaning thereby a body of communicants, was gathered. The Episcopal element, though small, was so important and influential that in regard to all matters pertaining to the minister's support it had to be regarded, and it persistently opposed everything which tended to the strict organization of Puritanism. The history of the formation of the church is still plainly preserved in Mr. Moody's own handwriting, and runs as follows:

PORTSMOUTH, N. E., ANNO 1671.

"After many serious endeavors wch had been used by ye then minister of ye place (since the par-<sup>or</sup> of ye Church there) in public, & by severall of ye Inhabitants in Private; ye Lord (without whose presence and Blessing man builds but in vaine) was pleased length to lay ye foundation of an House for himself in this place, of ye Beginning and progress whereof here follows a brief but true account. In ye winter of ye foregoing year (viz., 1670) there were severall meetings together of ye minister with sev'l of ye Inhabitants (who were members of other congregations) in ye

"Hereupon sev<sup>l</sup> assembled in Private & sought ye Lord by fasting & prayer yt hee would discover to us a right way (there being many tentes and discouragements before us) for ourselves and little ones (Ezra viii. 21, 22, 23), and wee hope wee may say hee was entreated of us, as ye Event hath in some measure (blessed be his name) made manifest."

Then follows an account of private meetings, which were continued several days, to discuss the subject and arrange the conditions of church membership; meetings of inquiry as to relations of one to another, so that they could freely unite in the same society; of consent to several sermons delivered by Mr. Moody upon the subject in the latter part of 1670 and beginning of 1671; of a committee appointed to "acquaint the Civill" authority of their purpose; of an invitation sent to other churches; of their attendance with the civil authority; of a sermon by the pastor, and the ordination of the pastor by several of the elders, and of the ordination of a deacon by imposition of hands and prayer.

The nine persons who were embodied and formed the first communicants were Joshua Moody, Mr. John Cutt, Mr. Richard Cutt, Elias Stileman, Mr. R. Marty, James Pendleton, Samuel Haines, Mr. John Fletcher, and John Tucker. So widely were they scattered that Stileman was from New Castle, and Haines from Great Bay, at Greenland.

Cranfield and Moody.—It comes from the language of Cranfield's commission that one of the principal objects of his appointment was to settle the serious difficulty constantly reappearing in the colony in regard to the claims of the heirs of Mason. His descendants, under the lead of Robert Mason, Esq., one of Cranfield's Council, came to reassert their right to most of the land here, which had been greatly improved, and the titles to which having been derived from the government of Massachusetts Bay, the judges in England had set aside. The most serious disturbances the colony had yet known now began. Cranfield's residence was at Great Island, now New Castle, where a number of the leading colonists lived. Of course, Cranfield and Mason became at once objects of bitter hostility to all the settlers, who, without any or with no good legal titles, began to fear the loss of their possessions. The home government had decided that on account of great expenses which the ancestors of this Robert Mason had incurred upon their grant of land at the Piscataqua he had a claim upon the estates here. Mason agreed with the home government to demand nothing for the time past, nor molest any one in the time to come, provided the tenants would pay him sixpence on the pound on a just and true yearly value of all their estates. If no settlement could be made upon these terms, the cases were to be sent to England for decision. It is easy to see the tumult into which the colony was thrown, it being determined almost unanimously that the claims of Mason would not be satisfied. Each house became the seat of a secret conspiracy. All conversation was about the claims of Mason and the unpopular Governor at Great Island. The result of it was that Cranfield could not settle the difficulties, adjust the claims, nor resist the wide-spread opposition, nor, as it has generally been represented, obtain any personal advantages from the office. Complaints were made against him, and listened to by the government, that he had attempted to settle himself cases which ought to have been sent to England, and he left the province in 1685. Whether it was because Cranfield was sincerely desirous to favor the Established Church, or whether he used this plea to cover up plans for self-aggrandizement, or whether it was because the Rev. Mr. Moody, as one of the most influential men of the settlement, was in the way of his success, Governor Cranfield soon came to an open rupture with Mr. Moody. A ministry of twenty-four years at the time Governor Cranfield came, and steadily increasing in favor and influence, had given to Mr. Moody a sway in all local as well as parish matters which could not easily or safely be disputed, and that Mr. Moody was not unwilling to use it appears from a letter of one Chamberlain, secretary of the province and justice of the peace, wherein it is stated that Mr. Moody was "archbishop and chief justice too."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>In one of Cranfield's letters he says, "I found Mr. Moody and his party so troublesome that I believed myself unsafe to continue longer amongst them till I had the continuance of a frigate and full instructions to reduce them to better understanding." Capt. Barfoot also shows the general feeling of the church party towards the Puritan element and the acts of the Massachusetts by writing, "I have been an inhabitant about five and twenty years, during w<sup>ch</sup> time I have not only made my observation upon y<sup>r</sup> humors and carriage of this people, but by the means of some of my neare relations being married into y<sup>r</sup> wealthiest families in this country, I have been thoroughly informed of the intrigue and designs of the faction and malignant party who managed all publicke affairs here whilst this province was under the Massachusetts jurisdiction, & very unwillingly submitted to a change of government wth his Majesty by his Royal Commission hath established, & although Massachusetts exercise no authority in this province, yet they influence things as they please, there being a strict confederation between y<sup>r</sup> ministers and church members of this province and those of y<sup>r</sup> Massachusetts Colony, who Govern and sway y<sup>r</sup> people as they please, noe pope ever acted wth greater Arrogance than these preachers who enslave the people to their fantastick humors and delatch them from theire duty & obedience to his Majesty & his Lawes, & are ever stirring them up to disloyalty & intermeddling in all civill affairs."

And again Cranfield writes, "When the charter shall be made void it will be necessary to dissolve their University of Cambridge, for from them all the severall colonies in New England are supplied the people. Looking upon their Teachers little less than Apostles, it is incredible what an influence they have over the vulgar, & to make it their business daily to excite and stir them up to Rebellion, being profest Enemies to the King's govt & Church it is to be feared this people will never be reclaimed until the University of England supply these Colonys, the not nipping them in the budd may prove of great inconvenience. By taking away their University (which will also be forfeited with their

The occasion for an open rupture between the head of the State and the head of the church came in 1684. In that year one of the leading characters of Great Island, George Jaffrey, a constable, and a prominent merchant, was brought before the court for some evasion or infringement of the revenue laws, but for some reason legal proceedings against him were stayed, and he seemed about to escape. Mr. Jaffrey was, however, a member of the church worshipping at the old South, and it came to the ears of Mr. Moody that there had been some false swearing in the matter, and when the State let Mr. Jaffrey go the church took him up. Mr. Moody brought Mr. Jaffrey before the church for discipline, against the command of the Governor, and in the end obtained from him an open confession of his wrong, a confession so sincere that, instead of provoking him, it led Mr. Jaffrey to be afterwards an active, useful, and leading man in the church. Thereupon a short time after Governor Cranfield issued an order that after the 1st of January ensuing all the ministers within the province should admit all persons of suitable years and not vicious or scandalous in their lives to the blessed sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and their children unto baptism; and if any persons desired the sacrament, or their children to be baptized according to the liturgy of the Church of England, it be done accordingly under penalty of imprisonment of the clergyman refusing and the loss of all the (charter) the Effect will come, for all other waies will be ineffectuall, the fontaine being impure."

And still once more Cranfield writes, "The experience I have had in this small government plainly discovers an true obedience not good can be expected upon y<sup>e</sup> regulation of the Massachusetts Colony if the Assembly or other persons in publick trust doe consist of the Congregate Church members, the ministers giving it as doctrine that the oath of Supremacy & all other oaths that are not approved of by the Ministers & Elders of their Churches, are unlawful in themselves, therefore 'tis my humble opinion that it will be absolutely necessary to admit no person into any place of Trust but such as take y<sup>e</sup> Sacrament & are conformable to the Rites of the Church of England, for others will be so influenced by their ministers as will obstruct the good settlement of this shire, & I utterly despair of any true duty and obedience paid to his Maj<sup>ty</sup> until their Colleges be suppressed and their Ministers silenced, for they are not only Enemies to his Maj<sup>ty</sup>'s government, but Christ himself, for of all the inhabitants of this Province, being about four thousand in number, not above three hundred Christianed by reason of their Parents not being members of their Church. I have been this 16 months perswading the ministers to admit all to the Sacrament & Baptism that were not vicious in their lives, but could not prevail upon them, therefore with advice of the Council made this inclosed order. Notwithstanding they were left in the entire possession of their churches and only required to administer both Sacraments, according to the Liturgie of y<sup>e</sup> Church of England, to such as desired them, which they refuse to doe, and will understand Liberty of Conscience given in his Maj<sup>ty</sup>'s Commission not only to exempt them from giving the Sacrament according to the Book of Common Prayer, but make all the Inhabitants contribute to their Maintenance, although they refuse to give them the Sacrament & Christen their Children, if it be not absolutely enjoyed here, & in other Colonies, that both Sacraments be administered to all persons that are duly qualified, according to the form of the Common Prayer, there will be perpetual dissensions and a total decay of the Christian Religion."

What an admirable illustration of the confusion most rulers would create when they meddle with theological subjects of which they are ignorant, and the blindness of that bigotry which is seeking to establish for itself the very thing it is condemning in others!

profit of his spiritual benefices. This was in accordance with a statute of Queen Elizabeth, but it was also in conflict with a later statute granting liberty of conscience unto all Protestants,—a provision as we have seen plainly made in Cranfield's commission, and also in conflict with a provision of the church in not permitting one who was not in holy orders to administer its sacraments, and Mr. Moody had not been ordained to the Church of England ritual. In spite of all this the arbitrary and enraged Governor sent word to Mr. Moody soon after that on a following-named Sunday he should attend worship at his church and receive the sacrament according to the service of the Established Church. The order reads very much like the reported command of one of our colonels in the late war, ordering out a battalion of men to be baptized, so as not to be surpassed by a revival in another regiment. The Governor sent also to Rev. Seaborn Cotton, of Hampton, saying that when he had prepared his soul he would come and demand the sacrament of him, as he had done at Portsmouth. Whether the Governor ever prepared his soul is not a matter of history, but without waiting for that the minister of Hampton at once fled to Boston. It was not so with the more courageous minister of Portsmouth. Mr. Moody refused to obey the Governor, saying, "I told the marshal I durst not, could not, should not do it," whereupon complaint was made against him of violating the statute of Queen Elizabeth; "that the said Joshua Moody, being the present minister of the Town of Portsmouth, in the province of New Hampshire, . . . by the duty of his place is by laws and statutes of the said realm of England required and commanded to administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper in such manner and form as is set forth in the Book of Common Prayer and administration of sacraments and other rites and ceremonies in the Church of England, and shall use no other manner or form than is mentioned and set forth in the said Book. Whereas the said Joshua Moody in contempt of the said Laws and Statutes hath wilfully and obstinately refused to administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper, according to the manner and form set forth in the said Book of Common Prayer unto the Hon. Edward Cranfield, Gov. of his Maj. in the Province of N. H., and others of his Maj<sup>ty</sup>. Council of the said Province, and doth wilfully and obstinately use some other form than is by the said statutes ordained, Therefore, &c., doth pray that the said Joshua Moody being thereof convicted according to the Law, may suffer such penalties as by the said statutes are made and provided." In another information against Mr. Moody praying for judgment against him that he might suffer the penalties of the statute we find this expression: "The said Moody having for many years had the appearance & reputation of a minister of God's word." It seems that the justices were divided in their opinion, two holding that he was not liable to the penalty on account of the liberty of conscience granted to all Protestants here, and four holding that he was. Mr. Moody himself, at the Quarter Sessions the 5th of February, 1681, upon examination pleaded "his not being ordained, having no maintenance according to the statute, and therefore not obliged to do that work which the statute required. Besides, these statutes were not made for these places; the known end of their removal hither being that they might enjoy liberty in these foreign plantations which they could not have by virtue of the statutes at home, and were allowed to have here, especially our commission granting liberty of conscience." But it was all to no purpose, for the Governor had determined upon his imprisonment, and to the prison at Great Island Mr. Moody went.

There is preserved a letter of one William Vaughan, who was imprisoned about the time, containing a journal with comments of current events. He writes, "Above all, our minister lies in prison, and a famine of the Word of God is coming upon us. No public worship, no preaching of the word. What ignorance, profaneness, and misery must needs come." Under date of Feb. 10, 1681:

"The Sabbath is come, but no preaching at the Bank nor any allowed to come to us. . . . Motions have been made that Mr. Moody may go up and preach on the Lord's day, though he come down to prison at night, or that neighbor minister might be permitted to come and preach, or that the people might come down to the prison and hear, as many as could. But nothing will do; an unparalleled example amongst Christians, to have a minister put out, and no other way found to supply his place by any means or other. Good Mrs. Martin was hurried, being not able to live above one Sabbath, after the shutting up of the doors of the Sanctuary."

How many would die for that reason now? Mr. Martyn, one of the first seven members of the church, was also imprisoned, and this journal is authority for the remark that the Governor said to him, "I want money and will have it." "But," said Martyn, "I have none." Then said the Governor, "I will take you home," adding also that Martyn was a church-member, and he would watch him and all such and be sure to pay them off if he could catch them. In April, after they had been "nine Lord's days without a sermon," Mason, in absence of Cranfield, gave leave for any minister to come and preach at the Bank, whereupon Rev. Samuel Phillips, of Rowley, came for two Sundays, the 13th and 20th of April.

We find this item under date of September 12th: "Mr. Joshua Moody, being to take a journey out of the Province, was forced to give a recognizance of £200 to return in three weeks, if alive and well."

Mr. Moody underwent imprisonment with a courageous spirit, and writes during his confinement:

"I told the court that I should go to prison with much more peace than they sent me thither, and particularly applied myself to Roby, a church-member, and told him that I had done nothing but what he was by solemn covenant engaged to maintain, and wished him to provide against the day when those things should be overhauled. . . . But blessed be God for Jesus Christ, I am quiet and at peace. Thus I have many things that are matter of repentance and shame to me, yet in this matter I am abundantly satisfied in my lot, and hope shall be a gainer, and that because of Christ will gain by my sufferings. Only methinks I had it a hard matter to suffer in a right manner. Something of stoutness of spirit, something of smelter-ends are apt to creep in and spoil suffering work. The Lord grant that I may have grace soberly it is not to lose sight that I have done and do now suffer! I beg your hearty prayers for me, that with integrity and sincerity I may cheerfully and patiently bear my cross till the Lord shall give me a discharge."

There is another letter dated "From the prison, 27th 1st Mo., 1684," i. e., March 27, 1684, in which he writes to Rev. Mr. Phillips, of Rowley, urging him to come to Portsmouth and preach:

"Oh, consider that my poor flock have fasted about forty days, and must now be an hungred! Have pity upon them, have pity upon them, and thou, my friend! And when you have taken your turn we shall hope for some other. You will thereby not only visit me in prison, but feed a great multitude of the hungry and thirsty little ones of Christ, which will be accounted for at that day. Pray come early enough in the week to give notice to the people. (I do also in behalf of my dear and tender wife, thank you for yours to her.) Now pray for me, that I may have an humble heart, and that my whole soul, body, and spirit may be sanctified and kept blameless to that day."

Mr. Moody was once allowed to leave the prison and make a short visit to his family. He was released after thirteen weeks' imprisonment under a strict charge to preach no more within the province on penalty of further imprisonment, whereupon he removed to Boston, and was at once called to be assistant minister with Rev. John Allen at the First Church, and at once occupied a prominent place, and was held in the highest regard during the eight years of his ministry. Mr. Moody seems to have followed the course of the justices who condemned him with a keen vision, and he interpreted the disasters which befell them as a divine retribution for his imprisonment, and in the church records he writes of them as follows: "Not long after Green repented, and made his acknowledgment to the pastor, who frankly forgave him. Roby was excommunicated and died of Hampton Church for a common drunkard, and died excommunicated, and was by his friends thrown into a hole near his house for fear of an arrest of his carcass. Barefoot fell into a languishing distemper, whereof he died. Coffin was taken by the Indians at Cochecho, 1689, his house and mill burnt, himself not being slain but dismissed. The Lord give him repentance, though no signs of it have yet appeared."

While Mr. Moody was at Boston he became a fellow of Harvard College, and upon the death of Rev. John Rogers, the president, the distinguished honor of that office was offered to him, but declined.

It had doubtless been greatly owing to Mr. Moody's interest in educational matters that in May, 1669, the inhabitants of Portsmouth sent to the General Court of the Massachusetts the following address, to which Mr. Moody's name is appended:

"To the much Hon<sup>d</sup> the General Court of the Massachusetts assembled at Boston, 29th May, 1669:

"The humble address of the inhabitants of the town of Portsmouth humbly sheweth that seeing by your means under God, we enjoy much peace and quietness, and very worthy deeds are done to us by the favorable aspect of the Government of this Colony upon us, we accept it always and in all places with all thankfulness. And that we have articled with yourselves for exemption from publick charges, yet we never articled with God and our own consciences, for exemption from gratitude which to demonstrate while we were studying, the loud groans of the sinking College in its present low estate came to our ears. The relieving of which we account a good work for the house of our God, and needful for the perpetuating of knowledge, both religious and civil, among us and our posterity after us, and therefore grateful to yourselves, whose care and study is to seek the welfare of our Israel. The piousness considered we have made a collection in our town of 600 per annum (and hope to make it more), which said sum is to be paid annually for these seven years ensuing, to be improved at the discretion of the Hon<sup>d</sup> overseers of the College, for the behoof of the same and the advancement of good literature there, hoping what that the example of ourselves (which have been accounted no people) will provoke the rest of the country to jealously (we mean an holy emulation to appear in so good a work), and that this hon<sup>d</sup> Court will in their wisdom all most vigorously to set for dislodging the sad omens to poor New England; if a College beann and comfortably upheld while we were little should since now we are grown great, especially after so large and profitable an harvest, that this country & other places have reaped from the same. Your acceptance of our good meaning herein will further oblige us to endeavor the approving ourselves to be you thankful and humble servants.

"JOHN CUTT,

"RICHARD CUTT,

"JOSHUA MOODEY,

"in the name and behalf of the rest of the subscribers in the towne of Portsmouth."

This address from the inhabitants of the town of Portsmouth was presented by Mr. Richard Cutt and Joshua Moodye, May 20, 1669, and gratefully accepted; and the Governor, in the name of the whole met together, returned them the thanks of this court for their pious and liberal gift to the college therein.

The town of Portsmouth had then become the richest town, and the occasion of the subscription was a general collection for the purpose of erecting a new brick building at Harvard College. Dover gave thirty-two and Exeter ten pounds for the same purpose. This interest in Harvard College and the recollection that besides the election of Mr. Moodye to its presidency, Dr. Langdon, of the North Parish, was also called to the same office at a later period, Dr. Peabody, of the South Parish, fulfilling the same duties temporarily at a still later period, and that Dr. Stiles, of the North Parish, was called to the same office at Yale College, show how greatly the strength and substantial character of our parishes were due to their appreciation of and demand for an able, cultivated, and learned minister, and how greatly the congregations have departed from so general and deep an interest in true scholarship.

Mr. Moodye and Witchcraft.—But the one thing for which Mr. Moodye deserves the highest credit, and which shows a mind enlightened and liberal beyond the current opinions of his day, is the part he took in the witchcraft delusion, a delusion which, as we shall see at another time, hardly found any spread or reception in our settlement. While he was settled over the First Church in Boston, Salem was very much excited upon the subject, and Philip English, an eminent merchant of Salem, with his wife, were sent to the Boston jail by reason that the one at Salem was crowded with the victims of this terrible persecution. Mr. Moodye took an early occasion to call upon them and invite them to his church (they having the liberty of the town by day, on condition of returning to the jail at night), and preached from the text, "When they persecute you in this city flee ye into another," in which he justified every attempt to escape from the forms of justice when justice was violated in them. After service he visited the prisoners and advised them to flee, and offered himself to assist Mrs. English to escape. After much reasoning he induced them to go, and had provided, with the consent of the Governor, for their escape from the prison at midnight. They reached New York and remained until the danger was over, and yet so universally was witchcraft believed in, even by many of the best, that Mr. Moodye was severely denounced for opposing it.

Death of Mr. Moodye.—The long ministry of Mr. Moodye over the parish at Portsmouth created an attachment which is revealed by the words of tenderest sympathy while he was ministering to the First Church at Boston. He writes that during his residence there "the church were often visited by the pastor, and kept up their private meetings, and so held together, tho' some removed and others were taken away by death."

In a letter to Increase Mather, then in England, he writes, "If you can, in all your opportunities of waiting on his Maj<sup>ty</sup> find a season to thrust in a happy word for poor N. Hampshire, who are under lamentable circumstances. Mason is dead, but his sons survive, and possibly may be worse than hee. You know how the poor people have been unreasonably harassed, and to raise one family on the ruins of half a dozen considerable Townes looks hard. 'Tis my affection to my people that has drawn this hint from mee. I leave it to your consideration and pray for God's presence to be with you." And again he writes, "If something could be done for the poor province of N. Hampshire & Mein, it would be a good work."

The year after Mr. Cranfield drove Mr. Moodye to Boston he was himself removed from his office here, and though the opportunity was offered, and Mr. Moodye constantly expressed the deepest interest in the parish here, it was not until 1693 that he returned. The explanation is very easy and satisfactory, if only we keep in mind the Episcopal element, which has been so steadily ignored, and which must have been brought to the surface, and probably was more important and influential than it had been since the ministry of Gibson. The want of harmony in the parish was doubtless such as to make him question the usefulness of his ministry, although never without the cordial, earnest support of a large portion of the parish. In July, 1688, Mr. Moodye wrote to Mather upon the subject, "I need exceedingly your advice about going to Portsmouth, which is vehemently urged by my church and people, and the next week we are to take counsell about it. The church is dear to mee, and I could bee glad to be with them, but the circumstances of my removing hence and being there are tremendous to meet. Pray for me daily." At length he removed his pastorate here, and continued it for four years, when a dangerous illness seizing him from his wearying labors he went to Boston for medical advice, and died there on Sunday, July 1, 1697. His funeral sermon was preached by Cotton Mather, from the text, "Looking steadfastly on him they saw his face as it had been the face of an angel," in which for all the virtues and gifts of a clergyman he is placed among the foremost of his day. "The church of Portsmouth," he says (a part of the country that very much owed its life unto him), "cries out of a deadly wound in his death."

That Mr. Moody had an impressive manner, which left an influence upon his hearers, I should judge from a trifling incident, that during the time of rebellion under Cranfield, one Waldron, talking by the road with another of the subject, said he had been thinking of a sermon he heard that Mr. Moody preached at Dover, and his text was "in the time of adversity consider." That he hesitated not to bring all the influences of religion upon the politics of his day may be judged from the deposition during the Corbet conspiracy of one who testified Corbet had said Mr. Moody's prayers were but babblings, but wital he must be regarded as a man of distinguished abilities, ceaseless industry, fervent piety, and during a long ministry in a difficult field resolute in his sense of right, full of kindness and sympathy, foremost in every good work, devoted to his parish, and faithful unto the end.

PORTSMOUTH.—(Continued.)

Separation of the Town of New Castle.—The Parish—Lithobrix—Prominence of New Castle—Prominent Inhabitants.—The Sheels Family.—The Jaffrey House.

Separation of the Town of New Castle.—Until the year 1693 there was but one place of worship, the old South Meeting-house, for the inhabitants within the limits of Portsmouth, New Castle, Rye, Greenland, and a part of Newington.

From the settlement at Odiorne's Point in 1623 the way was easy across the beautiful waters of the Little Harbor to the Great Island (as New Castle is even still frequently called), with its small and pleasant beaches, its higher rocks, and its sennor defenses by nature from the attacks of the Indians. One finds at the present time graves in all parts of the island, and although, by reason of the inconveniences of the ferries and in the growth of the colony, Portsmouth became more prominent and engrossed nearly all the history of the settlement, we must not forget that for a number of years Great Island was of more importance and the most populous and aristocratic part of the town. Here were the Governor's residence, the fort called William and Mary, on the site used ever since for the same purpose, the prison where Moody and others were confined, the houses of several of the most wealthy and influential settlers, mansions of note for their day.

In the year 1693 there appears the following record:

To the Honorable, ye Lieut. Governor and Council of His three Majesties Province of New-Hampshire., the humble petition of the Inhabitants of the Great Island humbly sheweth:

"That whereas ye being part of ye towne of Portsmouth, and having found for many years great Inconveniencies arising thereby in regard of the distance we are from the bank, and no way to it but by water, wherein there is great difficulty at any time, but sometimes more especially to the hazard of our healths and lives, in going up to attend the publicke worship of God at Strawberry bank, and having many poor people amongst us, both men and women and children, which have no convenience of passage, by which means ye greatest part of our people cannot enjoy ye hearing of ye word preached to them, we earnestly many times ye breach of ye Sabbath, and ye dishonour of Gods holy worship, as also, our Island being ye mouth of ye harbor and inlet into ye province, having the Kings fort placed here, and all the stores of ammunition, wh. is of great Consequence and ought at all times to be carefully attended and lookt after; but if the Inhabitants of this Island must be confined to attend their duty at Strawberry bank upon every publicke occasion, the Kings fort is left destitute of assistance, and lies exposed to ye surprisall of ye enemy and on owne destruction; we therefore, the Inhabitants of ye Great Island, being a competent number to make and uphold a towne-ship, do humbly beg and desire of this honorable board ye Governor and Council that we may be constituted a Towne-ship by ourselves, and that you would grant us the privileges and immunities as their Majesties have bin graciously pleased to allow such a Towne-ship, . . . and ye petitioners shall ever pray."

This petition is signed by a number of persons, among whom we find names still common at New Castle. Of course there was considerable opposition on the part of Portsmouth to the petition. The selectmen appeared before the Council and confessed it was inconvenient for the inhabitants of Great Island to go to meeting at the Bank, and that the fort and stores ought not to be at any time deserted; but there should be a minister settled on the island rather than a separate town.

The Council, however, decided that Great Island should be made a towne-ship, and divided from the Bank, taking in Little Harbor and a part of Rye, and on the 30th day of May, in the fifth year of the reign of William and Mary, 1693, the charter of the town of New Castle was given. It is written on parchment in black letter, or old English, and preserved with great care among the town papers.

The early records of New Castle, beginning in the year the town was chartered, and for a long time supposed to be lost, have recently been returned from England in a state of good preservation, and written with accuracy and distinctness beyond our own. From these records it appears that a meeting-house had been erected at least as early as 1693, for in December of that year an order was put on "ye Meeting-House" for a town-meeting to agree with a "minister and discourse other things Necessary for the towne's Benefit." The record of the meeting runs thus: "The Town mett on the 20th December at the Meeting-House and by the Inhabitants; then to discourse a minister were chosen 'a committee of five to join the selectmen to discourse and agree with a minister for the whole year next ensuing.'" The result was that Mr. (Benj'e) Woodbridge was engaged to be the minister for a year at a salary of sixty pounds and the contribution of strangers. Whence he came and when and why he left there is no record, but he is mentioned two or three times in a strange book written about that time and printed in London in 1698, to which we shall soon refer, and called Mr. Woodbridge, a divine. I judge there was some trouble in regard to the salary, as this is a trouble which seems to run through the record, or the inhabitants felt that they had not been sufficiently consulted, for soon after Mr. Woodbridge was settled his advice was asked in regard to a successor. He named three clergymen, and of course the parish did not agree upon any one of them; but in 1694 Mr. Samuel Moodey was "discoursed," and called by the parish at a salary of seventy pounds, finding himself housing and all other things on his own charge. This Mr. Moodey was a son of Joshua Moodey, the minister of Portsmouth, and was graduated at Harvard in 1639. He remained until the latter part of 1702, or early in 1703, and thereafter appears at the Shoals, where he is spoken of as "a man of piety and a pathetic and useful preacher." The last record in regard to him is on a matter of salary, the town agreeing to pay him not all in money, but part in provisions, and thereafter he is spoken of as the late pastor.

At a town-meeting held on the 24th of May, 1703, it was voted to settle Mr. John Emerson, at a salary of sixty-five pounds and the contributions of strangers; and also to build a minister's house, "when the town is able," and to fence in the land belonging to the "ministry," and to pay the minister the freight on his house goods. Altogether they seem to have begun with Mr. Emerson with a good deal of enthusiasm, perhaps because of his distinguished presence and gifts, which won promises they could not make good in money, for in 1710 Mr. Emerson complains to the town of the poor house in which he has lived ever since he came among them, and puts them in mind of their promise to build a parson's house. This seems to have led to some difficulty, which resulted in the loss of their minister, for although the town voted to build a parsonage, Jan. 18, 1710, the vote was not carried into effect for two years, and on the 17th of September, 1711, Mr. Emerson informed the town that he being sickly of the "ague, and the town not agreeing with him, he thinks it absolutely necessary for his regaining his health to move farther from the sea." He left in 1712, and in 1715 was settled over the South Parish of Portsmouth. When he left New Castle application was made to the president of the college and the minister at Cambridge to procure a minister suitable for the place, and in 1712, November 24th, it was voted "that Mr. William Shurtleff shall be ye minister in this town, and that he be called to office and ordained here," and in the same year it was voted "that ye Reverend Mr. William Shurtleff shall have sixty-five pounds per year for his annual salary during the time he lives single, but when his family increases by marriage it is voted that he shall have eighty pounds per year." In 1732 he gave up the parish at New Castle, and on the 21st of February, 1733, was installed over the South Parish, where he had a ministry of great prosperity for fourteen years.

The first meeting-house at New Castle, built in or before the year 1693, gave way to another in 1706, which was furnished with a bell of fine tone sent over from England, decorated with a beautiful altar-piece, and supplied with a silver communion service, to which was added a splendid silver cup, the bequest of a sister of Sir William Pepperell, and on the pulpit was a large folio Bible with illuminated letters, printed at the University of Oxford. This meeting-house was, perhaps, as a whole, finer than the first old South at Portsmouth, standing at the same time.

In these early records there are votes at the town-meetings which show the same general characteristics of the inhabitants in regard to social and religious customs that we have already noticed. We find the same order as to seating the townspeople in the meeting-house. We find it ordered "that one household or more walk every Sabbath day in sermon time with the constable to every Publick House in ye town to suppress ill order, and if they think convenient, to private Houses also." We find the same votes in regard to the entertainment of strangers, and giving their names to the selectmen if they remain more than a few days. We find it ordered, "for the prevention of fire or other dangers which may happen by smoking in the Meeting-House, that every person see smoking at any meeting in the Meeting-House be fined." We find it ordered, "for the prevention of charge coming on the town by some certain noted common drunkards, that the names of such persons be given by the selectmen to every publick house in the town in a paper, and a fine to be inflicted on whosoever shall sell any drink to persons so noted and named." We find a vote that all the inhabitants shall pass the ferry free on Sabbath days and on all other public days; and we find many votes at various meetings about 1720, and thereafter, in regard to building a bridge over Little Harbor, which was built, fell into decay and dis-use, was swept away by the tides. Another was built upon its site, of which within a few years almost the last traces have disappeared, and now, after the lapse of a century, the old discussion is renewed, and soon a third bridge will span the Little Harbor. Thus do the ways of travel return to their former courses.

Lithobolia.—The most remarkable incident in the history of Great Island is connected with one of the few cases of witchcraft in our neighborhood, and while one instance of the appearance of the witches at Little Harbor is in all the accounts, this, the far more extraordinary, has been almost entirely lost sight of. There are two roads that lead into the ancient village, one by the water and the other a little farther inland. About a third of a mile east by south of the last bridge, on the latter road and very near to it, perhaps, indeed, on it, as the highway has been opened since the building disappeared, and on the land now owned by Mr. John Locke, there stood, as early certainly as 1686, a large mansion with a gambrel roof, a hall extending through the lower story, with several spacious chambers above. The house belonged to one George Walton, called a planter, and among the inmates was one Richard Chamberlain, a prominent public functionary under Cranfield, being variously styled justice of the peace, Secretary of State, clerk of the court, etc., and near by was a friend of his, also prominent in provincial matters, Capt. Walter Barefoot. When Chamberlain went home to England he wrote a book, which was printed in London in 1698, of which the following is the name and its explanation: "Lithobolia; or the Stone-throwing Devil. Being an Exact and True Account (by way of Journal) of the various actions of infernal Spirits or (Devils Incarnate) witches, or both, and the Great Disturbance and amazement they gave to George Walton's family, at a place called Great Island, in the province of New Hampshire, in New England, chiefly in throwing about (by an Invisible hand) stones, bricks, and brickbats of all sizes, with several other things as hammers, mauls, Iron Crows, Spits, and other domestic utensils, as came into their Hellish minds, and this for the space of a quarter of a year. By R. C., Esq., who was a sojourner in the same family the whole Time, and an Ocular witness of these Diabolical Inventions. The Contents hereof being manifestly known to the Inhabitants of that province and known of other provinces, and is upon record in his Majesty's Council Court, held for that province, 4to. Dedication 2 pp. 16, London: Printed and are to be sold by E. Whitlock near Stationer's Hall, 1698."

Lithobolia is a Greek word, signifying a throwing of stones, and is the title given to this book because it describes the intervention of supposed evil spirits whose manifestations took that form. The belief in witchcraft was then almost universal even among legal minds best trained to the examination and sifting of evidence. So easy is it for persons to see what they believe they will see therefore the book begins with a charge against the skeptical, incredulous, and infidel spirit of the age which should venture to disbelieve such well attested things, as with equal reason one might as well deny his very senses, infidelity being always nothing more than the reproach of not accepting the belief of the majority, no matter how much stronger or higher our faith may be in something different. The malicious acts of these fiends ceased about the time the Governor arrived, so that he insisted upon it that it was only the wagery of some unlucky boys, but this Chamberlain regards as impossible after the sight and testimony of so many considerable persons. These preternatural occurrences were supposed to be caused by the maliciousness of a neighboring woman, who pretended that some land of her field had been taken into the bounds of this George Walton, and who had been heard to say with much bitterness that Walton should never quietly enjoy that piece of ground. It would often be a source of grim satisfaction to many if they could thus call all the evil spirits to their aid in tormenting those who have infringed upon their rights. This true narrative, the writer says, is set down to rectify the depraved judgments and sentiments of such unbelieving persons as reject the operations and being of witches, and convince all who hear without prejudice by the testimony of eye-witnesses almost every day for a quarter of a year together.

One Sunday night, about ten of the clock, this Richard Chamberlain, justice of the peace, lodging at the house of George Walton, heard many stones thrown and hit with great noise against the top and all sides of the house. Walton and his neighbor, Amazeen, an Italian, had gone to examine the gate between their houses, which had a habit of being swung off the hinges and cast upon the ground, and as they returned to the house they were assaulted with a peal of stones, taken, as was supposed, from the rocks hard by the house (thus always, in spite of their belief in the supernatural and omnipotent agency, persons try to let the attendant circumstances make it easier for the divine agency) and by human hands as agents.

Everybody in the house was aroused by the strange alarm, and all looked out as sharply as possible, it being a bright moonlight night, but could make no discovery. Then a shower of stones, some of them as big as the fist, came into the entry of the house, whereupon they withdrew into the next room, none being hit save two youths. "Praised be Almighty Providence," says Richard Chamberlain; for certainly the infernal agent, constant enemy to mankind, had he not been overruled, intended no less than death or maim. Forthwith they began a search; they searched the hall, they searched the cellar, and of course the shower of stones began to diminish, but when they came into the room "these unfriendly lapidary salutations" were renewed. The windows were broken, and yet the stones had a way of coming apparently from the inside, forcing the bars and cast windows out, and themselves falling back into the room. One stone they took out of the glass of the window where it lodged itself in the breaking of it, in a hole exactly fit for the stone. Sometimes they scratched the stones, and found that the same ones were taken up and thrown at them again and again.

After four hours of fright Chamberlain concluded to go to bed; thus do the powers of nature overcome the supernatural, and we go to sleep even in the presence of demons, but soon he was again awakened by another battery, when it seemed as if shelves, pictures, books, and everything had been knocked down, and upon all the household rushing to his room, they found a stone weighing eight pounds and a half, which had burst open the door. Soon after the manifestations ceased for that night. It was a disturbed night for the household, and in the morning each one had some strange experience to relate, which probably lost nothing in the relation. That day while the men were at work in the field, and with Mr. Woodbridge, the divine, now present to see, the stones came jumping and tumbling on the grass, and upon one person skeptically asserting he was not persuaded, but that the boys at work did throw them, the devil rewarded his infidelity by a blow with a stone upon the boy, which convinced the one and set the boy a-crying. That night Chamberlain began to play upon a musical instrument, perhaps to drive away his fears,—as boys whistle in the night,—when a great stone came rimbuling into the room, which, he says, was on a much different account than in the days of old, and of old fabulous enchantments, his music being none of the best; and while many gathered at the house on account of the marvelous thing, just as the stones were being thrown about, two youths saw a black cat in the fields, which was shot at, but missed by its changing places, and being immediately at some distance, and then out of sight.

The next Monday Walton went by water to a place called Great Bay, and as the men were at work in the woods felling wood, there came another shower of stones, which they gathered into a pile under a tree, and returning after a time found they had disappeared, and were again thrown about. Once again, returning from Great Bay with a load of hay, about midway in the river he found his boat in a sinking condition by the pulling out of the stopple in the bottom,—“a contrivance, a combination,” says Richard Chamberlain, “of the old serpent to have doomed my good landlord and his company.” At one time, after a number of prominent persons gathered there had been wondrously affected by these strange things, they offered themselves to give testimonies, which Richard Chamberlain, Esq., then wrote down, and several signed a paper attesting the truth of their being eye-witnesses of at least half a score of stones that evening thrown invisibly into the field and entry and hall and chamber of George Walton. Among these we find the Governor of West Jersey and the Deputy Governor of Rhode Island and other persons of note. Strange sounds sometimes attended the throwing of the stones, and besides the stones strange things flew about, and familiar things strangely changed their places.

One of the worst days was Friday, the 4th of August, when the fence between Mr. Walton and the neighbor who was supposed to be the witch was maliciously pulled down to let their cattle into his ground, and when he and his servants went to put it up again they were pelted with above forty stones. Walton was hit divers times, and all that day as they were reaping it ceased not, and there fell above one hundred stones. Sickles were bent, and Mrs. Walton going out to make most diligent observation, to dispel the incredulity of some and confirm her own belief, met with a severe blow from the Unseen Power; and Mr. Woodbridge, the divine, and Mr. Jaffrey, the merchant, were all hit and injured.

Thereafter the stony disturbances grew less, and last of all they ended with Mr. Walton, who, going in his boat from the Great Island to Port-mouth, to attend the Council which had taken cognizance of the matter, he being summoned thither for examination, as if to have a final fling at him (all such things generally ending upon proper examination), the devil hit him sadly with three pebble-stones as big as one's fist. One gash broke his head, which for evidence Chamberlain saw him show to the president of the Council, and from the stroke of another he complained afterwards to his death.

The “Lithobolia” closes thus: “Who that peruses these preternatural occurrences can possibly be so much an enemy to his own Soul and irrefutable Reason as obstinately to oppose himself to, or confusedly fluctuate in, the Opinion and Doctrine of Demons and Spirits and Witches! Certainly he that do's so must do two things more. He must temerariouly unbinge or undermine the best Religion in the world, and he must disingenuously quit and abandon that of the three Theologicke Virtues or Graces, to which the great Doctor of the Gentils gave the precedence—Charity—through his unchristian and uncharitable incredulity.”

So it was the faith of that day that if witchcraft and a belief in the devil went, Christianity went too; still they have gone, and Christianity remains.

Prominence of New Castle.—At Great Island resided Cranfield and Barefort, and here was the Governor's house. Here, too, lived Robert Utt, the royalist Episcopalian, whose Puritan brothers, Richard and John, at the Bank, took such a prominent part in our early history. Here lived Pendleton, Stileman, and Fryer, three leading persons in early church matters, and the first two among the seven names of those who became members at the organization of a church in 1671. Here lived Theodore Atkinson, for a long time foremost in all provincial matters; Richard Chamberlain, holder of several offices, and author of “Lithobolia;” Charles Story, secretary of the province. Here we first find the name of Tobias Legr, whose descendant became a somewhat eminent diplomatist, and the private secretary of Washington.

It would be a serious omission, and would leave this sketch quite incomplete were I not to mention another name whose descendants have held a prominent place in the town until the present day,—

The Sheafe Family.—On an ancient monument within the diocese of Norfolk, of St George, Norwich, is this inscription :

"Here are buried under this stone,
Thomas Sheff and his wife, Marston
Sometime we war as you now be,
'And now we are as hee shall you;
Wherefore of your charite,
Pray for us to the Triuite,
"Obit. Mcccxxxiii"

Here, at Cranbrook, Kent, in England, we first find the Sheafe family, of whom it is believed Jacob Sheafe came to America with Rev. Henry Whitfield, and died in Boston. His son, Sampson Sheafe, came to Great Island in 1675, and here was the beginning of the family in this neighborhood. He had at New Castle housing, wharf, and lands, was one of his Majesty's Council, and collector of customs at Portsmouth. His descendant, Mrs. White, was, in 1821, the sole member of the ancient church in Newcastle.

The Jaffrey House.—This brings us to another and the last name of persons living at Great Island who had a conspicuous place in civil as well as ecclesiastical matters. In 1677, after Sampson Sheafe had returned to Boston, he contracted with one George Jaffrey to go to Great Island and take charge solely of his goods, housing, orchard, and land, and to do no other business, in consideration of forty pounds lawful money of New England for two years, and to be found and allowed "good and sufficient meat and drink, washing and lodging." In 1682, Jaffrey was tried for an attempt to defraud the revenue, and this matter brought him into conflict with Rev. Joshua Moody. It seems he was afterwards forced to flee and his house was taken by the government, for there is a record, dated May 16, 1684, ordering the "General Assembly to convene at Great Island, at the house late in possession of George Jaffrey," and, again, "the talk is that his [George Jaffrey's] house must be court-house and prison both, and standing so near the Governor, it is judged suitable for both these ends, that he may have the shorter journey to Court, and the prisoners may be always under his eye." And last of all there is a note in the journal of Rev. John Pike: "George Jaffrey, Sr., of Portsmouth, one of the Council, journeying from Boston to Piscataqua on a very cold day, was taken sick and died at Ipswich. A man of singular understanding and usefulness among us." The following description of the old Jaffrey house is from an account of it, partly a history, partly a fancy, by its present owner, and perhaps one day to be published:

On Jaffrey's Point, which has been corrupted into Jerry's Point, stands this house, wellnigh two hundred years old, "substantially as he (Jaffrey) built and let it, and since he himself somewhere says of his dwelling, that as any one might through his clothing see the general outline of his form, and through his form his soul, so his house was only a little farther removed from his essential nature." His house so near the sea was even nearer when it was built. There is a succession of garments which a man wears who is in any degree free to choose, and which reflect his being, and the spot where he fixes his abode is one of them. The sight of the sea must have been to George Jaffrey a necessary condition of healthful activity. From no window of his house is it hidden. And it is equally open to the sun, which goes round it in winter and over it in summer. He built it low to be out of the wind; at the same time he chose a situation where no height was needed to bring into view all he wished to see, and he wisely spread it over a wide area of ground for comfort, convenience, and because land was cheaper than air. The modern architect knows only how to put floor over floor, as is necessary in large towns, but the lines of buildings in the country should be horizontal and irregular. Under the roof, which he hung so low, he put many rooms, in no way resembling one another, all being of various forms, sizes, and heights. You seem to be in a different house as you step from one room to another. In the centre, and to crown the whole, he built the huge chimney-stack, with fire-places on every side, wide enough for a whole family to gather in, deep-mouthed, where you hear the wind roar in winter, and the swallows beat their wings in summer, and where children may stand and look up at the stars and sky,—a bringing, as it were, a piece of out of doors into the very heart of the domestic inclosure. Others build chimneys as a convenience for their houses, concealing and thrusting them out of the way as much as possible, but he evidently built his house as only an adjunct to the chimney, accounting ample hearthstones of more consequence than rooms. This was the primary idea in the plan of the old mansion, and around this firm, capacious column of brick it grew as the ship grows from the keelson. When all was finished and he sat down by his open fires, now in one room, now in another, he grew more and more thoughtful; "the affairs of the world sounded more and more distant."

The old mansion has seen its contemporaries fall away, and generation after generation pass on. Business and fashion were lured to our more flourishing town, and for many years few have gone through the fishing village to enjoy and rest in the beauties of the shore beyond, to be lulled by the roars of the sea, full of rest and unrest, or to feel the friendship of the light-houses as they send out from every point their guiding rays over the deep. We begin to go back in many things to the choice of our fathers. The dust-laden travelers of summer from our heated inland may be glad of the sea anywhere, and throw themselves down where others have chosen for them, without variety and without beauty, and in their want of knowledge think it is all grand; but one may go a good while along our coast before he finds any views more charming and enrapturing than those from the very sites of the old mansions at Great Island.

PORTSMOUTH.—(Continued.)

Manners and Social Life—Temperance—Use of Tobacco—Social Customs—Church Pews and Customs—Observance of Sunday—Cost of Living—Early Laws—The Isles of Shoals.

Manners and Social Life.—While colonies vary very much in the purpose of their settlement and the character and plans and religious views of their leaders, the average settler is pretty much the same always. It is true of both the Bay and the Piscataqua that they had a very large number, during the early years, of settlers of the very highest moral and social standing, merchants and citizens of the best quality of England's culture; it is true the religious views of the colonies differed; it is true that they were equally attached to their faith; it is true that some members of each partook of that coarse, wild, and profane character which belongs to all new settlements, and it is true that the settlement here came so early under the sway of the Bay Colony, was subject to their worship, and controlled by men of precisely the same character with themselves, that it was not possible for anything but prejudice to suggest or keep alive the tradition of a substantial difference. This is perhaps the most suitable place to notice some of the customs, social and religious, which found an observance during the first part of our history, and being much the same in the various settlements, may give some idea of the social life in all.

One cannot fail to mark the expressions of friendship or of religion which are found at the opening or close of business communications. The letters from one merchant to another seem incomplete without inquiries about health, family, or asking the blessing of God upon their enterprises. Of course it is as possible for good manners to conceal the intentions or disposition of dishonesty, just as the forms of religion may advance the schemes of hypocrisy, but it is not generally so, and these expressions, even though the common epistolary form of that day hardly belong to a class of men utterly without the sentiment of religion, abandoned to trade beyond all other settlers. Thus Thomas Eyre, of the Laconia Company, writing to Gibbins, closes his letter with this sentence, "I commend you and your wife, who by this I hope is with you, to the protection of the Almighty."

Mason, sending to Vaughan an invoice of goods shipped to the company, finishes the letter with "Thus we commend you to God." Gibbins, writing back, says, "At large I will write, if God wil, by the next. Thus taking my leave, I commend your worship to Almighty God." Not less frequent are the expressions of friendship from the families of the proprietors to those of the factors, "With my kind love to you and wife and daughter." And Mrs. Mason writes to "her loving friend," Ambrose Gibbins, And while these expressions abound, there is no reason to suppose they are suggested by any other than business relationship. Nevertheless even at that day there was a spirit of overreaching and dishonesty in trade, which seems as old as trade itself, coming constantly to the surface. Ambrose Gibbins says, in a letter to Mason, "The merchants I shall be very cautious [cautious] how I deale wth any of them while I live. In Mass. a woman is excommunicated from the Boston Church for charging mechanics who worked on her husband's home with extortion, and a man is fined £5 for taking upon him to cure the scurvy by a water of no value, which he sold at a very dear rate."

Temperance.—In matters of temperance early settlers are not apt to be the best examples. Yet there is nothing which shows so well as history the progress the temperance cause has made. The convivial habits of one hundred, two hundred years ago would not be endured for a moment anywhere. Any one who will take the trouble to look up the social life of the English or Scotch, or of our own land, beyond the present or last century, is amazed at the custom of intoxication or excessive drinking. While among the greatest of the evils we have still to deal with, the change has been very marked, and the excited and unfounded statements that we are intemperate beyond all other people, or that, proportionately, the vice is greater in our day than in the past are made in utter ignorance and the extremest party or fanatical zeal. All these settlements were well supplied with agua vita, as it is spelled (agua vita, water of life), being the common name of brandy, or the spirit of wine. It comes in all the inventories as a part of the goods, and sack, the name of a Spanish wine now called sherry, is not infrequently in the accounts. We find it ordered by the court of Exeter that "no wines or strong water shall be sold by retail to the English but by Thomas Wardle," from which it would appear there were no restrictions upon the sale of liquor to the Indians, as the Arabs at the present day deem it all honorable to overreach the Christian infidels in any way; but in 1654, "Roger Stearne, of Hampton, is impowered and ordered to sell wine of any sort and strong liquors to the Indians as to their (his) judgment shall seeme meete and necessary for their relief in just and urgent occasions, and not otherwise," and there is a record of the House of Deputies of Massachusetts in 1654 as follows: "Whereas, it is judg<sup>d</sup> most comely, convenient, and conducive to the dispatch of public service that the deputies of the General Court should diet together, especially at dinner, it is therefore ordered that the deputies of the General Court the next ensuing year, viz., 1655, shall all accordingly dine together, and that Lieut. Phillips, the keeper of the said Tavern, shall be paid for the same by the Treasurer for the time being by discounting the same in the custom of wine." In 1658 it is declared that "this Court doth expect that all the inhabitants of Piscataqua doe attend the observance of our laws, in particular those concerning the selling of strong liquors, and good order to be kept in ordinances." As early as 1637 the Legislature of the Bay Colony, perceiving the deadly effects of intemperance, passed the severest laws, with probably no greater enforcement and no more beneficial effects than in the last few years; but the best step in the temperance cause was when the Governor, in 1639, believing, from what he had seen of the custom of drinking healths in England, that it was contrary to religious obligation, "restrained it at his own table, and wished others to do the like, so as it grew by little and little to disuse." The extent of the evil is shown by the efforts to suppress it, e.g., we find in 1634, at Roxbury, for drunkenness, a man was ordered to be disfranchised, wear about his neck and so to hang upon his outward garment a D made of red cloth and set upon white, to continue this for a year, and not to take it off at any time when he comes amongst company." With us, instead of being disfranchised, the drunkards are those in whom the politicians have the deepest interest. "Persons who keep homes of entertainment are forbidden to allow tipping after nine o'clock at night."

In Londonderry, at the close of the last century, the evil was so great that at the installation of a clergyman a hogshhead of rum was drank, and in one part of the house in which the minister lived was a tavern where spirits was sold and drank on Sunday by members of the church, and so wide-spread was the custom that on a fast-day, when the minister was supposed to be free to indulge in some special topic, he was widely denounced for preaching upon temperance.

Use of Tobacco.—The use of tobacco, then comparatively novel, but a habit which has a fatal tendency to make its subjects ungentlemanly and rude, and to forget how disagreeable it may be to others, early became subject to legal restrictions. In 1646 we find, "Whereas there is great abuse in taking tobacco in a very uncivil manner in the streets, if any person or persons shall be found or seen doing so hereafter he shall be subject to punishment;" and, again, "any person or persons who shall be found smoking tobacco on the Lord's day going to or coming from the meeting within two miles of the meeting-house, he shall be fined." Within two miles was construed to have no bearing on such as had a mind to smoke in the meeting-house, and so the loud snapping of tobacco-boxes after loading the pipes; the clinking of flint and steel, followed by curling wreaths of smoke, were not infrequent in the house of worship.

Thus early, too, we find the habit widely prevalent among the students at Harvard. Capt. John Underhill, who was a conspicuous figure in the early settlement, went so far as to say "that having long lain under a spirit of bondage he could get no assurance, till at length as he was taking a pipe of tobacco the spirit set home upon him an absolute promise of full grace, with such assurance & joy that he had never since doubted of his good estate, neither should he whatever sins he might fall into," and "that as the Lord was pleased to convert Saul while he was persecuting, so he might manifest Himself to him while making a moderate use of the good creature tobacco,"—the only instance, I doubt not, since its discovery wherein it has been a means of grace.

Social Customs.—Some of the customs and moralities of these early times may be gathered from the regulations passed in the interests of good order and religion. It was ordered "that no young man that was neither married nor hath any servant, and be no public officer, should keep house by himself without consent of the town where he first lived; and that no master of a family should give habitation or entertainment to any young man to sojourn in his family but by the allowance of the inhabitants of the said town where he dwells,"—this was that a strict watch might be kept over the ways of each person.

It was ordered that Maverick, an Episcopal clergyman on Noddles Island, and his family move into Boston, and entertain no strangers longer than one night, out of fear that he might countenance and harbor the enemies of the Puritans, but the order as to his moving was countermanded at a later date.

At an important Synod held at Newton, May, 1637, it was resolved, "Though a few women might meet together for prayer and religious conversation, yet large companies of them, as sixty or more, who convened weekly in Boston, taught by a particular one of their number in doctrine and exposition of the Scriptures, were disorders."

A man accused of swearing was to have his tongue put in a cleft stick. A member of Harvard College, being convicted of speaking blasphemous words concerning the Holy Ghost, is sentenced to be publicly whipped before all the scholars, suspended as to taking his degree of Bachelor, sit alone by himself in the hall, uncovered, at meals during the pleasure of the president and fellows, and be in all things obedient, doing what exercise is appointed him by the president, or else be finally expelled from the College.

In 1618 the wearing of long hair was condemned as sinful. The Governor, Deputy Governor, and magistrates entered into an association to prevent the growing evil. Forasmuch as the wearing of long hair, after the manner of ruffians and barbarous Indians, has begun to invade New England, contrary to the rule of God's word, which says "it is a shame for a man to wear long hair, as also the commendable custom generally of all the godly of our nation until within these few years, we, the magistrates, do declare and manifest our dislike and detestation against the wearing of such long hair, as against a thing uncivil and unmanly, whereby men do deform themselves and offend sober and modest men, and do corrupt good manners."

In 1638, in Massachusetts, the court taking into consideration the extravagance which prevailed through the country as to costliness of attire and following new fashions, ministers, as the particular duty of their profession, were called upon to urge a reform in this respect on their congregations; "but," it is added, "little was done about it, for divers of the elders' wives were in some measure partners of this general disorder." What would a settler of 1638 think of the disorder now! In 1642 the General Court require that the children whose parents neglect to educate them shall have the particular attention of the selectmen where they live, so they shall learn to read and understand the principles of religion as well as the capital laws. In 1643, ordered that all parents and masters do duly endeavor, either by their own ability and labor, or by employing such schoolmasters or other helps and means as the plantation doth afford, or the family may conveniently furnish, that all their children and apprentices as they grow capable may, through God's blessing, attain at least so much as to be able duly to read the Scriptures and other good and profitable printed books in the English tongue." In 1647 there is a long resolution in regard to the Bible in schools, so that the pupils may exercise greater vigilance against papacy, "it being one chief project of y<sup>e</sup>ould deluder Satan to keepe men from the knowledge of ye Scriptures, as in former times by keeping y<sup>m</sup> in an unknowne tongue, so in these latter times by persuading from ye use of tongue." The use of the Bibles in schools was to make each one read it for himself, the cardinal Protestant idea, and the greatest object of education to enable each to be able to read it, whence utterly ignoring the original idea, and entirely wresting it from its purpose, by a long custom it has come to pass that some not able to distinguish between a custom and a principle insist upon the illest form of reading a few verses of the Scriptures as an essential part of our common-school system.

Church Pews and Customs.—We have referred to the old South Church being for a long time without any pews. The church at Hampton had at first but one pew, and that for the use of the minister's family, the rest of the house being furnished with seats for the accommodation of the people. Each man was obliged to build his own pew, keep it in repair, to maintain all the glass against it, and he must build on the spot assigned him. In the town of Stratham there was an exception, where by a vote of the town "Mr. Andrew Wiggin shall have liberty to set in what seat he pleaseth in the meeting-house," while the general law was "that when the committee have seated the meeting-house, every person that is seated shall sit in these seats, or pay five shillings per day for every day they set out of these seats in a disorderly manner to advance themselves higher in the meeting-house. Persons were seated in church according to their rank or station in life or society, and Mr. was at that time a title of great distinction, to which a very small proportion attained. Even in the beginning of the present century it was usual in the Scotch Kirk for the minister to bow from the pulpit to the lords according to their rank as they sat in the front seats, and there was often a rivalry entirely unbecoming the equality of souls before God as to who should have the first bow; and in one parish the custom was given up, and inasmuch as they could not judge of themselves as to point of honor and descent, the minister was appointed to forbear bowing to any the lairds from the pulpit for the time to come. The distance persons walked for worship is almost incredible in our degenerate day. They came on foot from Rye, New Castle, and Greenland to the Old South Church over the bridge, and it was no uncommon thing for women to walk six or eight miles, and sometimes carry an infant child. Before the town of Bedford was set off its inhabitants for some time attended worship at Londonderry. They performed the journey on foot, and generally carried one or two children a distance of twelve miles.

At a regular parish meeting held June 4, 1705, it was voted "that in consideration of their number, the distance they had to travel, and the dangers to be encountered in their attendance upon public worship, the inhabitants of Greenland be permitted to enjoy their own regular instituted means of grace, and that one hundred pounds be paid yearly, out of the town stock, as their proportion for the support of the ministry during their maintenance of an able minister among them, and no longer." In want of a bell, a drum gave notice of the time of gathering for public worship. By an ancient law a penalty of forty shillings, by way of a fine, was attached to every town not provided with a drum to call the people to meeting. There is an order of public worship in Boston as follows: "It begins by ringing of a bell about nine of the clock or before." The pastor prays a quarter of an hour. The teacher reads and explains a chapter. A psalm is dictated by one of the ruling elders and sung. The pastor preaches a sermon, and sometimes gives an exhortation without notes. The teacher closes with prayer and benediction. Services begin at two in the afternoon, and proceed in the same order.

When a minister exchanged, the ruling elder said to him publicly, after the psalm was sung, "If this present brother hath any word of exhortation for the people at this time, in the name of God say on." Before departing in the afternoon one of the deacons said, "Brethren of the congregation, as God hath prospered you, so freely offer;" then the magistrates and chief gentlemen first, and then the elders and all the congregation of men, and most of them that were not of the church, all single persons, widows, and women in absence of their husbands, went up one after another one way, and brought their offering of money or chattel to the deacon's seat, and passed by another way to their seats. Persons were appointed to have inspection of the audience during the public exercises, whose frequent rounds kept the children in order. The badge of their office was a pole with a knob on one end and a tuft of feathers on the other; with the one they rapped on the men's heads, and with the other they brushed the ladies' faces when they caught them napping. Music in these early days, as in the latter, was deemed a necessary part of worship, and had its attendant criticisms and disaffections. The custom was from the earliest days to deacon the hymn, the precentor or leader of psalmody reading two lines and all singing them, and so on to the end; but the singers wanted to break up the old habit of "lining" or "deaconing" and have it all their own way. At Stratram the matter was settled by a compromise, the deacon by vote of the town to read half the time; but still he complained of the bass viol, saying "they had got a fiddle into the church as big as a hog's trough;" while at Londonderry the precentor and choir both kept on at the same time, one reading and the other singing, until the latter gained the victory and sang the reader down.

Observance of Sunday.—The observance of Sunday was strict and general, but hedged round by so minute and constant command of the law that it is questionable if its true helpful keeping was ever so great as now. Those were good times for dull ministers, when every seat in the church was filled, without regard to weather or the difficulty of traveling, by the tenor of the magistrate more than the fear or love of the Lord, and they were pretty serious times for such as some of you who would forsake the sanctuary for a walk, a drive to the beach, or a sail to the shoals, or the enjoyment of a cigar. In October, 1668, the court ordered "That whatsoever person in this jurisdiction shall travel upon the Lord's day, either on horse-backe or on foot, or by boats, from or out of their owne towne to any unlawful assembly or meeting not allowed by law, are hereby declared to be profaners of the Sabbath, and shall be proceeded against as the persons that profane the Lord's day by doing servile works."

In 1682 it was enacted,—

"For prevention of the profanation of the Lord's day that whosoever shall, on the Lord's day, be found to do unnecessary servile labor, travel, sports, or frequent ordinaries in time of public worship, or idly straggle abroad, the person so offending shall pay a fine of ten shillings, or be set in the stocks an hour; and for discovery of such persons it is ordered that the constable, with some other meet person whom he shall choose, shall in the time of public worship go forth to any suspected place within their precincts, to find out any offender as above."

The restrictions of the Bay Colony, which of course all came in force here, were exceedingly severe and minute. It was ordered "to the end the Sabbath may be celebrated in a religious manner, that all that inhabit the plantation, both for the general and particular employments, may observe their labor every Saturday throughout the yeare at three of the clock in the afternoon, and that they spend the rest of the day in catechizing and preparation for the Sabbath as the minister shall direct."

Whoever neglected to attend worship on Sabbath, fast, or thanksgiving without sufficient cause was fined five shillings. For fast especially this law would at the present time be a source of goodly income to the city treasury. If profanation of the Lord's day were done proudly and with a high hand against the authority of God, it was to be punished with death. There is a record of an agreement with some Indians who came under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts in 1641, wherein the following conversation takes place: "Will you worship the only true God who made Heaven and earth and not blasphemous? We do desire to reverence the God of the English and to speak well of Him, because we do see He doth better to the English than other Gods do to others. Will you refrain from working on the Sabbath? It is easy to us; we have not much to do any day, and we can well rest on that day."

In 1639 it was ordered that a man be whipped for shooting at fowl on the Sabbath day. Those were fortunate days for the clergy, when any disrespect to them or their office was a matter of legal punishment, although a clergyman deserving of real respect never had so much—if not enforced, at least zeal—as at the present time. In 1682 it was enacted that "whosoever shall behave himself contemptuously toward the word of God preached or any minister thereof called and faithfully dispensing the same in any congregation, either by manifest interrupting of him in his ministerial dispensation or falsely charging him with teaching error, such offender shall pay a fine of 20s., or sit two hours in the stocks." There is a story on record of a minister in Bedford, this State, who had a neighbor with whom he was not on the best terms. One Saturday they came to sharp talk about their fences and cattle, which was heard by others, who predicted the neighbor would not be seen any more at church, but the next Sunday he was punctually there. After service they said, "We thought you would not be at meeting to-day after such a quarrel yesterday with the minister." "I'd have ye to know," was the reply, "if I did quarrel with my neighbor yesterday I did not quarrel with the gospel."

Games, sports of all kinds, at all times met with little favor, but on Sunday particularly with the severest censure. It was one of the matters by which the Puritans were especially distressed that King James permitted and encouraged dancing, archery, May-games, and May-poles, and any harmless recreation on Sundays after divine service. When a May-pole was set up at a plantation afterwards called Braintree in 1625, it was a serious annoyance to the settlers at New Plymouth, who called it "an idol, yea, they called it the calf of Horeb," and stood at defiance with the place, naming it Mount Dagon, threatening to make it a woful mount and not a merry mount; and in 1628, Endicott causes the May-pole to be cut down, and rebukes them for their profaneness. In 1631 the court ordered all who have cards and dice in their houses to destroy them before their next session. In a proclamation of King Charles in 1633, besides permission for these sports, it is ordered "that women shall have leave to carry rushes to the church for decorating it according to their old custom." It is only within very recent years that any flowers and decorations and the observance of any days were permitted in the churches of the Puritan descendant, and still by many are regarded with fear and trembling and serious objection.

Even as early as 1638 some of the colonists began to be alarmed about their degeneracy in matters of religion, and a fast was observed by reason of prevalence of smallpox and fevers, and decay of religion in the churches, which was ascribed to the spread of Mrs. Hutchinson's views.

In 1634 there was a discussion at a lecture in Boston about women's wearing veils. Cotton took the ground that whenever such a custom is not indicative of female subjection it does not come under apostolic command. Endicott took the other side, and in 1634 various regulations were passed against costly dress and compliance with unstable fashions tending to injure the Commonwealth.

The settlement at Plymouth seems to have had greater privations in some respect than that at the Piscataqua, for in 1623, in a state of famine, as described by Governor Winslow, when he had seen men stagger from faintness for want of food, Capt. Miles Standish was sent here for food, where he was hospitably received and amply supplied; and in 1631, the very day before an appointed fast was to be observed, a ship bearing provisions came in, and the fast was changed to a thanksgiving day, whose religious observance then had a meaning. "In the absence of bread they feasted themselves with fish. The women once a day as the tide gave way resorted to the mussells and clam banks, where they daily gathered their families' food with much heavenly discourse of the provisions Christ had formerly made for many thousands of his followers in the wilderness."

Cost of Living.—We have, however, abundant evidence from the correspondence between Mason and his agent here that our own settlement was at times in great straits for provisions, and shared the privations which are the attendant of almost all early colonies. Separated from the friends and comforts of an old land, in dread of savage attacks, and doubtful about the bread of to-morrow, we cannot enter into their hardships while we enjoy the fruits of their sacrifices. The cost of living and the pay of labor seem to our rates exceedingly trifling, for we find an agreement between an innkeeper and the deputies of the General Court, by which they were to be provided with breakfast, dinner, and supper, with wine and beer between meals, with fire and beds at the rate of 3s. per day; but such as only dine to pay 18<sup>d</sup>. for dinner, with wine and beer betwixt meals, and by wine is intended a cup each man at dinner and supper is no more," but where would one get the 3s. or 18<sup>d</sup>.?

Early Laws.—Marriage, when it was celebrated,—a rare event in the early settlement,—was performed by a magistrate, or by persons specially appointed for that purpose. Governor Hutchinson, in the History of Massachusetts, says he believes there was no instance of marriage of a clergyman during their first charter. Ambrose Gibbins, writing to Mason, says "a good husband with his wife to tend the cattle and to make butter and cheese will be profitable, for maids they are soone gone in this countrie."

In 1680 there was set forth a code of province laws of the General Assembly in Portsmouth, wherein, as in the Bay Colony, many of the Mosaic laws, especially those against sensuality, were reproduced in all their severity; the one against witchcraft, as we shall see, was little needed in our settlement. Here are two showing the relation of parents and children: "If any child or children above sixteen years old of competent understanding shall curse or smite their natural father or mother, he or they shall be put to death, unless it can be sufficiently testified that the parents have been very unchristian, easily negligent of ye education of such children, etc." "If any man have a rebellious or stubborn son of sufficient years and understanding, viz., 16 years of age or upwards, wch. shall not obey ye voyce of his father, or ye voice of his mother, yet when they have chastened him will not hearken unto them, etc., such son shall be put to death or otherwise severely punished. There is a law which severely punishes any one who shall wittingly or willingly make or publish any lie wch may be tending to ye damage or hurt of any particular person, or wth intent to deceive and abuse the people with false views or reports." "For preventing deceite in trade y<sup>e</sup> all men may be on a certainty in matters of contracts and bargains, it is ordered that all contracts, agreem<sup>ts</sup>. or covenants for any specia whatsoever shall be paid in the same specia bargained for, any law, usage, or custome to the contrary notwithstanding," and yet so wise have some of our Legislatures grown by two centuries they have come to maintain that deceit in trade is the best thing, and any certainty in matters of business or trade the worst thing, for a nation.

These are some of the customs and laws which reveal the condition of our early settlers; grown to a populous community, and with the lapse of many years, these customs of society and of worship have all been changed, the sumptuary laws and the strict laws for the surveillance of individuals, the inspection of houses, the punishment of profanity, or intemperance, or sensuality, or the breaking of the Sabbath have become dead letters, but society endures, worship knows no failure, and schemes of reform of every kind fill the air and enlist the prayers and sacrifices of all good wishers to humanity, and the dishonesties of trade, the sins of impurity, the decline of interest in religion are common complaints and common fears. The severe oversight possible in a small colony is laid aside in a thickly-settled neighborhood, where, even with the deepest sympathies or interest, one hardly knows the persons living next him. The causes of danger or suffering of that early day have passed away with the resources of our vast land, extending through all zones, and the idea of individual opportunity, of personal liberty and religious freedom, with which these colonies began, has widened beyond all conceptions of that day, and into a license which is big with dangers. No law of the State compels us to worship or mark the boundaries of Virtue's path; it is all left to the individual conscience. A divine idea, we Americans are wont to boast, and leading to divine things when rightly received, rightly interpreted, and rightly understood. If each one of our society to-day uses his liberty for the best things we are doubtless better off than when our ancestors were hedged about by so manifold restrictions, but if he does not we are still far from safety or moral growth.

The Shoals.—The Isles of Shoals were of course visited even earlier than the mainland. "Among the remarkablest Isles and mountains for landmarks," writes Capt. Smith, "are Smith's Isles, a heape together, none neare them, against Aecominticus." He evidently desired these islands to perpetuate his name and adventures, but after other patents divided New England he writes again, "But no lot for me but Smith's Isles, which are a many of barren rocks, the most overgrowne with such shrubs and sharp whins you can hardly pass them, without either grass or wood, but three or four short shrubby old cedars."

The Isles of Shoals were included in the grant of the Laconia Company of 1631, but upon the failure of that venture the grant was divided in 1635 by a line which has continued to the present day, Gorges taking the northern half as a part of the province of Maine, and Mason the southern, as a part of the province of New Hampshire; but some settlers remained there permanently and increased to quite a flourishing colony.

For a long time the islands were a kingdom and government by themselves, and had a constantly increasing prosperity, so that the number of inhabitants ran up to about six hundred, and even with a seminary of some repute, to which some families on the mainland sent their sons to be educated. It was here that the three brothers Cutt first settled, removing to Portsmouth in 1647, but still carrying on business at the Shoals. The islands came under the sway of the Massachusetts about 1652, but a strong element of royalty and Episcopacy for a long time remained. In 1824 the population had fallen to sixty-nine, and within a few years it has entirely disappeared, and all the islands passed under the ownership of the proprietors of the large and flourishing hotels which year by year attract summer visitors.

The Navy-Yard.—The "Falkland"—The "Ranger"—The "America"—The Ministry of Rogers.—The Half-Way Covenant.—A New Parish.

The Navy-Yard.—It was because the early government of this settlement saw, on account of the extensive and fine timber lands and the advantages of the deep and never-closed harbor, an admirable location for ship-building that Portsmouth was chosen as a place for building ships for the Royal Navy, and at a later date by our government for one of its yards, although the official name is the Kittery Navy-Yard. As early as 1650 there are records of timber for masts marked with the king's "Broad Arrow" as belonging to the crown.

The "Falkland."—The first war-ship built here was the "Falkland," of fifty-four guns, in 1690, and in 1724 still in commission in the Royal Navy. In 1749 a ship-of-war named the "America," of fifty guns, was built for the British government by Col. Nathaniel Mervise. When the war of the Revolution was seen to be inevitable this site at once recommended itself to the government. Governor Langdon, then the owner of Badger's Island, offered its use to Continental Congress, and here, in March, 1755, was begun work on the frigate "Raleigh," of thirty-two guns, and the following May she was launched, and before four months had elapsed she was on the seas and had engaged in attacking four English vessels of war acting as convoy of a large fleet of merchantmen. It was one of the earliest engagements which gave promise of that brilliant bravery which surprised the world as it gained one success after another upon the seas, and over the ships of the greatest naval power in the world.

The "Ranger."—The next ship built here for the Colonial government was "the Ranger," launched in 1777, and immediately given to the command of John Paul Jones, and with her he attacked and captured the "Drake," a British vessel of greater power.

The "America."—In 1776 the keel of the "America" was laid at Badger's Island, the only ship of the line which the government at that time completed, and in 1782 this ship was given by Congress to France to replace the "Magnifique," one of her men-of-war, recently lost in the harbor of Boston. This ship was captured by the British in 1794, and her name changed to the "Impetueux," and long regarded as one of the most valuable and beautiful vessels in the British navy, and yet her builder, Mr. Hackett, of Portsmouth, had never seen a ship-of-the-line. For a long time after the war little was done in the navy, but in 1798 the frigate "Crescent" was built, then the sloop-of-war "Portsmouth," next the "Seamell," and then the "Congress." It was not till 1800, the principal island, on which the buildings of the navy-yard are erected, that was purchased by the government and the various provisions necessary for a naval station actively began. From time to time appropriations were made for increasing its usefulness, from time to time some of the finest ships were here built, and during the late war of the Rebellion a large body of men was steadily employed, and the capacities of the yard enlarged until it became an important station for the government.<sup>1</sup>

The Ministry of Rogers.—The long ministry of Moody ended in 1697, and after several attempts to settle a clergyman, on the 3d of May, 1699, Nathaniel Rogers was ordained minister of the town of Portsmouth. He was born at Ipswich, Feb. 22, 1669-70, and graduated at Harvard in 1687. There are few names among the clergymen of Massachusetts more eminent than that of Rogers, and the same family which gave the minister to Portsmouth furnished to Ipswich pastors of the same name for a period of over a century. John Rogers, who was chosen to succeed Mr. Oakes as president of Harvard and was installed in 1683, is described as a man of such sweet disposition that "the title of delicia generis humani might have been given him, and his real piety set off with the accomplishments of a gentleman was like a gem set in gold." Of this Rogers, president of Harvard, one clergyman was the youngest son. Rev. Nathaniel Rogers was a man of great elegance in his person and deportment, of a most agreeable manner of preaching, and of eminent piety. He was a strict disciple of the Geneva school, a term used to designate the hearty supporters of Calvinism, whose centre of influence and learning was in the Swiss metropolis. The disturbing matters which filled the pastorate of Moody seem to have produced little irritation during the ministry of Rogers, and, as is often the case, those on either side who could find no harmony in the lifetime of a person foremost in creating, sustaining, or bearing the reproach of the difficulties and animosities after his death are glad to be at peace for a while. Rev. Dr. Stiles says of Rogers, "he was a most excellent minister; and his ministry as well as that of that holy man of God, his predecessor, was eminently owned and blessed by the great Head of the Church."

His work was quiet, faithful, and successful, but although repeatedly solicited to publish some of his sermons he always refused, and we have nothing by which to judge of the character of his writings; and the influence of his ministry, which in all respects appears the best, was unhappily greatly lessened by a serious disturbance in regard to building a new church, which for a long time embittered the whole neighborhood, and even extended throughout the province.

After being the minister of Portsmouth for fifteen years, preaching in the old South, Mr. Rogers was directed, by a vote of the church-members, to officiate in the new meeting-house which had just been completed on the northeastern corner of the glebe land, the site of the present North Church. Here he remained preaching with acceptance and success for nine years until his death, on the 3d of October, 1723, making a total pastorate of twenty-four years five months. He was buried at the "Point of Graves;" but the slate which was let into his monument, and on which his epitaph was written, has long since disappeared. This inscription was written in Latin, with a Hebrew motto at its close, and with marked classical purity and taste, and fortunately before its destruction was copied by one of his successors, Dr. Stiles, and so has come down to us. Without being fulsome it briefly and beautifully portrays a faithful and distinguished pastor, well named in the church records "the good Mr. Rogers."

The Half-way Covenant.—It is somewhat remarkable that with a clergyman so strictly of the Geneva school as was Mr. Rogers his church should under his pastorate adopt what was termed the Half-way Covenant, but in the church records under date of April 21, 1707, we find the following: "At a church meeting legally convened it was voted that persons having a competent knowledge, and making a serious profession of ye Xian Religion, and being of a conversation void of scandal, upon ye owning ye covenant, and subjecting themselves to ye government of Christ in this church, shall be admitted to baptism, and have the like privilege for ye children." It would seem that to be well informed of Christian truth, and to seriously profess to obey its requirements, to be of a walk and conversation free from all reproach, to confess the creed, and to be entirely subject to the Head of the Church would be sufficient to admit one to the questionable salvation by the form of baptism, but such was the severity of the Geneva school that all this was only half-way. A man might be of an upright walk beyond question, a glory of example of goodness to all the world, and yet, being without the formal test of election, redemption, and faith, all his goodness was unavailing, and even might make against him. Nevertheless this Half-way Covenant was for a time quite popular in New England, and was in use in the new parish in Portsmouth until it was discontinued by Dr. Putnam. As might be supposed, among the strict followers of the Geneva school it could work only mischief, and deadness to the spiritual life, for it is a tacit admission of the failure of that system through its excessive rigidity, and whatever religious tenets one holds to, he must hold to wholly, and not partially, to make them effectual. It might be likened, in some degree, to the old biblical distinction of the proselytes of the gate, in contrast with the proselytes of righteousness, the former being in the eyes of strict Jews only half converts, not required to observe the whole law, but only to abstain from certain heathen practices.

A New Parish.—We come now to consider the gathering and history of a new parish. This matter has never had the careful investigation, or been set forth in the simple historical accuracy it deserves. I find that it is quite as simple, and far more readily understood than most events in the past with which the historian has to deal. There was, as we have seen, some objection at the time to building the old South Church beyond the mill-dam, at the fork of the roads going to New Castle and the cemetery, and the matter was settled only by the appointment of a committee by the General Court, which finally located it there. All the time there had been a small party wanting it farther up Pleasant Street. Since the building of that first old South more than fifty years had passed away, and from the building of the first chapel near the Universalist Church nearly seventy-five. The population, which in 1657 I am inclined to think was not far from five hundred, had increased to at least twelve hundred in 1693, and yet they were all included in one parish, and their only place of worship was the old South Church beyond the mill bridge. From some old records I find that of this number, according to the same calculation, Great Island had about two hundred, when a separate parish was established there in 1693. There must still have been in the old parish, wide as its limits still were, allowing for the same rate of increase, although there is every reason to suppose it was much more rapid, at least twelve hundred inhabitants, whose only home for worship was the old South, and all the time the settlement had been growing away from the church and towards the Bank, as this upper part of the town was generally called. The old church was not only in constant need of repairs, but was entirely too small to accommodate the large and rapidly increasing parish. We find in the town records the following: "At a General Town-meeting held at Portsmo, the 24th day of September, 1711, voted that a new meeting-house be built in the Town. Voted, that the new meeting-house be built on the corner of the minister's field, on ye place formerly appointed by ye Committee, and that it be ye stated meeting-house of ye Town. Voters for the meeting-house are sixty-five; against, are forty-five." A committee was chosen at the same meeting "to carry on ye affaire of building s<sup>d</sup> House," and the selectmen were empowered to raise money by way of a town rate for the said house. "This corner of the minister's field" referred to in the vote, was the corner of the glebe land we have already described, and the site of the present North Church.

When this vote was taken there was no thought of any division, only of building a new church for the whole parish, but the parishioners at the south end were not willing to have it built so far to the north. It is said they were willing that it should be built on the spot where later the house of Mr. Joseph Haven stood, or the rise of ground near it; but the parishioners at the north end were not willing to go so far south. Instead of compromise, the matter grew only more complicated and excited, and as the new church went up the discussions grew wider and fiercer.

The people of Greenland, who were anxious to be set apart and have a parish of their own, all came to the aid of the north end, as the tradition was that in return, as soon as the new church was built, those for whom they voted would vote for their separation.

While, however, a majority of twenty of the whole parish, meaning thereby the whole town, was thus in favor of the new church, and the minister, Mr. Rogers, was on that side, there is every reason to suppose that the majority was gained out of those who, by the increase of population towards the north, could not be accommodated at the old South. The church, meaning thereby the communicants, had at that day the chief authority in ecclesiastical matters, and after the new meeting-house was finished we find, under date of Jan. 7, 1714, the church voted "that Nathaniel Rogers, minister of this church, should come to the new meeting-house erected at the Bank on ye next Sabbath, seven night, and preach there, and continue preaching there as formerly at ye old Meeting-House, and perform all other offices which appertain to his function." Unfortunately the record does not give the number for or against. We do not know how many church-members there were at this time, the men only voting, but the number was probably between twenty and thirty, as there were twenty male members at the time of Mr. Rogers' ordination, yet at the beginning of the present century the tradition was that while a majority attending the meeting voted for Mr. Rogers to go to the new meeting-house, an actual majority of the church-members were in favor of retaining him at the old. Hence it came that the feeling grew only the more violent, because the parishioners at the south end claimed that unfair measures had been taken to gain the vote, and so they determined to remain at the old South. In this, and this is a fact of great importance, and which has never been set forth, they were advised and sustained by an ecclesiastical council, and the counsel of no less distinguished a clergyman than Dr. Mather, of Boston, whose advice and assistance the parishioners at the south end sought and followed. Mr. Rogers became much disgusted with the conduct of the ministers because they took the side of the people of the old church. Dr. Mather, on the other hand, blamed Mr. Rogers, and wondered how so good a man could discover so much ill humor; but all ecclesiastical history shows that very good men can. The result of the council was, as in general, somewhat unsatisfactory to all sides, and says one of the early historians, "the societies separated and did not walk in love till that generation dropped off the stage."

But the ecclesiastical council did not settle matters. It never does, and before long the subject comes before the council held at Portsmouth. At a general town-meeting held Sept. 9, 1713, the redoubtable John Pickering, who was warm in the cause of the south end, was chosen moderator. After passing two votes disorders arose, and the justices dissolved the meeting; but those who remained, with Pickering at their head, put a number of things to vote which were carried, such as that the old meeting-house shall continue town-meeting house forever, and when too much decayed with age to be repaired, that a new one shall be erected in its place; that the glebe land (this was the serious cause of the trouble), formerly given by the town for the use of the ministry, shall wholly remain to the benefit of the minister, who shall officiate in said house; that a committee shall wait upon Mr. Rogers to see if it be his pleasure to continue preaching at the old meeting-house during his abode in the town; if not, that the said committee shall provide an able minister for the said place of worship, and agree with him for his salary, which agreement, so made, shall be ratified and fulfilled by the town.

But Mr. Rogers followed the vote of the church, and went to the new meeting-house, whereupon the old parish at the south end sent at once to Mr. Emerson, of Great Island, or New Castle, to be its minister. Then the matter came to open war, each parish appearing before the General Assembly by a committee. At a meeting of the Council of General Assembly of the province of New Hampshire, held on the 11th of May, 1714, we find the following: "Upon hearing of all parties referring to the meeting-houses of this town, and having seen and considered the grants, agreements, and votes of the said town of Portsmouth referring to the settlements of the Reverend Mr. Rogers, the present minister of the said town or parish, voted that the said Mr. Rogers be established the minister of the said town, and be confirmed in the possession of the glebe land or parsonage lands according to the agreement with the town. It is further ordered and directed that his salary or maintenance be raised by the selectmen from the inhabitants, and paid him from time to time as heretofore."

The General Assembly, at its same session, goes on to say, "And further considering of the great increase of the inhabitants of the said town of Portsmouth, that there be two ministers, two meeting-houses maintained in the said town, and that the two meeting-houses now in being are the houses and places directed and agreed upon, and to be finished and repaired at the expense of the whole town; that Mr. Rogers and his maintenance be established as above provided; that the minister of the other meeting-house at the Mill Dam shall be named and chosen by an assembly of all the freeholders in the said town, and have his salary and parsonage house provided and maintained at the charge of said town. And whereas Mr. John Emerson has served in the congregation at the meeting-house near the Mill Dam for some time past, there be made him at his departure a present of fifty pounds with thanks for his services there, the said fifty pounds to be paid out of the town treasury, and to be raised at the next town tax." This present voted to Mr. Emerson was probably with the idea that he was only a temporary supply, but it was soon found he was to be the popular and successful minister of the parish permanently. This order of the General Assembly did not bring peace. Selectmen were chosen now on one side and now on another; petitions were sent to the General Assembly now on one side and now on another. Town officers were chosen at the new meeting-house and also at the old on 7th of June, 1714; and it was left for the Governor to say which should serve. We find at another meeting held the 27th July, 1714, the Indians took up so much time of the General Assembly that it could not further proceed in relation to the selectmen of Portsmouth, but for the present voted that out of nine persons set down in margin (of petition) there be five picked by his Excellency the Governor to do the public service of the said town as selectmen till the 25th of March next. The Governor picked or chose those elected at the new meeting-house; and then the Assembly "voted a concurrence with the order of the Governor and Council, and considering the regularity of the town-meeting at the new meeting-house the 7th of June, confirm the town clerk and all other officers then chosen and the votes then passed about the new meeting-house, and ordered that the officers stand as such until the 25th of March next, and that be the day for annually electing town officers." This of course was but a temporary matter, and as the months went on the town found the necessity and possibility of sustaining two flourishing parishes; but the embittered feelings were not allayed by the votes of the General Assembly; peace did not reign at the Bank or at the Mill Dam. At first the advantage seemed to rest with the new parish, which had the strength of votes, but in January of the next year we find at a meeting of the Council a petition appears from the persistent Capt. Pickering, presenting it personally, and the Council orders the clerk to read a summons to ye town of Portsmouth, to show cause if any there be why orders may not be given in favor of the petitioners belonging to Portsmouth, mostly residents on the south side of the Mill Dam; and the Council, January, 1715-16, "ordered that ye Rev. Mr. Nathaniel Rogers and Mr. Emerson be ye two established ministers of the town of Portsmouth, and that they be each paid one hundred pounds per annum out of the treasury of the town of Ports. aforesaid, according to the orders made by his Excellency Col. Dudley, the Council, and Assembly of this province in May, 1714, and that the selectmen of the town of Portsmouth, aforesaid, for the time being, give out their warrants from year to year to the constables for collecting the same and all such as are inhabitants [ratable at law] of s<sup>d</sup> town in proportion, except those that are of the parish of Greenland; and further y<sup>e</sup> the P<sup>r</sup>sonage house on ye north side of the Mill Dam be built at ye public charge of the town except as before excepted. Also y<sup>e</sup> as ye N. meeting-house was built by a public tax, ye old one be repaired, and both maintained from time to time out of a joynt stock; and that ye two petitions relating to this matter [viz.], ye petition preferred by Capt. Pickering, and ye petition preferred by Mr. Jaffrey, be dismissed."

This vote of the Assembly makes each parish of equal importance so far as public matters were concerned; but then there arose another trouble out of the embittered feelings. In providing the minister's salaries, it seems the selectmen as they were on one or the other side would rate some of the parishioners in the wrong parish and so make them pay a double parish tax, and wardens generally find that most persons are ready to pay at least but one. The redoubtable Capt. Pickering, in the midst of the difficulty, added fuel to the flame by some ways that were at least strange. It seems that a paper was signed, by which for certain advantages some of the parishioners at the new, to bring peace, agreed to contribute certain sums for one year for the support of the minister at the old meeting-house, but afterwards found the paper was drawn up without limitations as to time." Thereupon we find in 1716, May 17th, this vote: "For preventing of any future disturbance & difference that has or may arise in ye town of Portsmouth, about ye minister's salary in ye town, voted, that the subscribers to & constant hearers of ye Rev. Mr. Rogers at ye new meeting-house be impowered and enabled by an act to support him there in the ministry by an equal assessment on themselves, & that they be excused paying anything towards ye support of any other minister in ye town until named & chosen by an assembly of all ye freeholders of ye town according to an act of Gen. Assembly of ye 11 May, 1714, that the hearers of Mr. Emerson have ye same power for raising his salary among themselves." At the same session there came before the Assembly the following petition: "The humble petition of severall of ye Inhabitants of ye town of Port<sup>m</sup> in behalf of themselves & others humbly sheweth; That whereas upon the Removal of Rev. Mr. Rogers unto ye new meeting-house, we, being disposed for one year and no longer to support a minister at the old until matters of ye town were amicably accommodate, did inadvertently sign unto a certain instrument without reading or considering the contents thereof, & being since informed that ye import of the s<sup>d</sup> instrument was without any limitation of time, whereby we & our successors are greatly insured to our unspeakable hurt & prejudice, doe humbly pray that ye said instrument may be produced, whereby the false insinuations of those that insured us may be detected, & that we may be released therefrom."

Still for two years longer the matter came constantly before the Council and General Assembly, and the whole province was affected by the quarrel, until at last the selectmen each year, with the help of the wardens, made out a list of each freeholder and the parish to which he belonged, so that no longer was the same person compelled to pay both, and no longer could any one escape paying to either by claiming a house of worship now at the north and now at the south.

The result of the whole trouble was that the two parishes were declared to be the two parishes of the town, and went on with a prosperity which has hardly known a pause until the present day. The north was the new parish, and made up principally of the new settlers in this part of the town, while the trouble seems to have had little effect upon the old as a parish; it called another pastor at once, paid him the same salary that the whole town paid to Mr. Rogers, and seems to have known no break in its history or its influence or its strength, but there was no such thing as first or second parish or church spoken of. It was always the old meeting-house and the new, or the parish at the Mill Dam or the parish at the Bank. The vote of the majority of the church as a body of communicants, being the more important legal body in that day, gave them the right to take with them the church records and the communion service, perhaps a part of the old service which belonged to Mason and the first Episcopal Chapel, and to compel Mr. Rogers to go with them. But the north was never in any sense the first church of Portsmouth, for that, as we have seen abundantly confirmed, was Episcopal.

The South Parish retained the old meeting-house and a majority of the old parish. Whatever legal rights a majority vote of parish or church may confer, no going away of a part can affect the earlier history which belongs equally to each. The associations which cluster around a locality can never be voted to another place, and around the old South Church clustered and always will the recollection of the early settlement. For a long time the history of the two parishes was the same, that of the church of Portsmouth, and when it flowed into two channels it was fortunately to witness a prosperity for each of which neither need be jealous. The first difficulty was in regard to the location of the church, the next was doctrinal.

their theological inheritances, even at times without being able to give any reason for them, is well illustrated in the re-establishment of Episcopacy in Portsmouth. This element never entirely died out here, but was cherished in a few families or individuals, ready to manifest itself at any opportunity which promised to give it an organization and a home. It was stronger in the Piscataqua than any of the historians have yet acknowledged. It was clearly a part of the early settlers' plan to make this a Church of England settlement, but the ascendancy of the Massachusetts soon put all the interest here in the hands of the Puritans. The first minister, a strong defender of the Established Church, was banished simply for that reason, and for a long time Episcopacy seemed entirely destroyed. In the first quarter of the eighteenth century quite a serious trouble was brewing in regard to the boundary line between the provinces of the Massachusetts Bay and New Hampshire. As early as 1730, Col. David Dunbar was chairman of a commission on the part of this province to meet a committee of the Bay on the adjusting of this line. He was a native of Ireland, and appointed Lieutenant-Governor of this province in 1731, and also surveyor-general of the woods. He had been a colonel in the British service, and being commander of the fort at Pennaquid, he assumed the government of all the inhabitants in that part of Maine; but exercising the military discipline with considerable rigor, he came into collision with the land proprietors, who applied for relief to Governor Belcher, and he issued a proclamation ordering the inhabitants to submit to the Massachusetts instead of Dunbar. The Governor and his lieutenant were in contention as long as Dunbar remained in the country. Dunbar had command of the fort at New Castle, and in retaliation made everything as uncomfortable for Governor Belcher as he could. The latter came into power in 1739, as Governor of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, was ambitious, arbitrary, tyrannical, and unjust, partial to Massachusetts, and unfriendly to New Hampshire, and it is probable that reaction against his counsels and decisions hastened the ecclesiastical as well as the political opposition to his rule.

While Dunbar had charge of the settlement of the boundary line, which threatened to bring the provinces into open war, one Capt. John Thonlinson, a merchant of London well known in New Hampshire, was agent for the matter of the boundary at the court of Great Britain; and in this Thonlinson, Dunbar found a zealous friend of the new church movement. Theodore Atkinson, one of the most prominent citizens, and whose name constantly appears in all political matters, was also foremost in aiding it. It was begun in 1732, and the church was finished in 1735. This church was a frame building, somewhat smaller than the present one, with a steeple like that of the old South, and two entrances, one on the west, the other on the south. On the north side the central of the wall pews was raised above the rest, a heavy wooden canopy built over it bore the royal arms, and red plush curtains were festooned around it. Previous to the Revolution this was called the Governor's pew, and in 1789 was occupied by Washington when on a visit to Portsmouth. The bell was taken from Louisburg at the time of its capture in 1745, and in that year presented by the officers of the New Hampshire regiment to this church. The most valuable relic and ornament of the church, the font, a beautiful piece of porphyritic marble of a brownish-yellow color, was plundered from a church in Senegal, Africa, by Col. John Tupton Mason, and presented by his daughters to Queen's Chapel; but, however interesting for its history, it confers only disgrace upon its capturer, for, according to the general rules of all Christian warfare, the churches are exempt from spoliation.

Rev. Arthur Brown.—On the 18th of August, 1735, and chiefly through the earnest activity of his ardent admirer, Dunbar, an invitation to Rev. Arthur Brown was extended and accepted, and he became rector of Queen's Chapel, the salary being assured by the liberality of the English Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts. His ministry was popular and successful, and lasted until 1773, when, on a visit to Cambridge, he died, at the age of seventy-four, and was interred in the Wentworth tomb of Queen's Chapel graveyard. All the tributes offered to his memory show that he must have been a man of real culture, of unpretentious goodness, of eminent worth. It was not owing to his popular gifts and assiduous labors only that his success was so marked. The times were propitious and helpful to second his own and the enthusiasm of a people gathered with all the interest attendant upon the establishment of a new church. Every official of the government was expected to belong to the Established Church of England; the officers of the army and navy were all really compelled to choose that faith. The Rev. Mr. Brown was as fortunate in his death as in his labors, for it occurred just as the troubles were gathering with England, and the breaking out of the war promised for a time to crush everything which related to English customs and English worship. The parish, which had enjoyed great prosperity for nearly thirty years, suffered a sudden and almost entire overthrow and extinction, and Episcopacy was reduced to a state almost as low as at the close of the ministry of Gibson, more than a century before, and for almost twenty-five years after the death of Mr. Brown the church was almost entirely neglected. After the Revolution, two or three successive rectors were not very successful in their ministrations, and in the winter of 1806 the church was destroyed by fire. At that time the South Parish was without a pastor, and the use of the church was offered to Queen's Chapel, now changed to St. John's, and for some time it was not unusual for the two societies to unite in public worship, the same clergyman frequently officiating for both parishes, reading the Book of Common Prayer one part of the day, and following the simple congregational order of services for the other. The extremely feeble condition of this sect in this part of New England at that period is shown by the fact that there was no Episcopal visitation of the Portsmouth parish from 1791 to 1812. In this latter year we have the first record of the administration of the rite of confirmation.

Dr. Burroughs.—Mr. Charles Burroughs, then in deacon's orders, had been the minister of the parish for three years, but never had the opportunity of being confirmed. The records show that on the day preceding his ordination to the priesthood he received confirmation, together with one hundred and fifty of his congregation, and in order to be ordained as deacon he had been obliged to journey to Philadelphia.

With the establishment of peace and liberty of conscience, and under the attractive ministrations of Dr. Burroughs, St. John's again took its place among the flourishing churches of Portsmouth. Dr. Burroughs was born in Boston on the 27th of December, 1787, and there his early boyhood was passed. He enjoyed and improved the best opportunities of that day for a classical education, in which he made great attainments, and all through life enriched a mind of fair proportions with all the elegant literature of ancient or modern times. He came to Portsmouth as a reader in 1809, and such was his reputation for entering into and rendering the beauties of the church service, and the entire satisfaction he gave as a writer, that many from other parishes, being occasional listeners, confessed to a willingness to remain permanently if Mr. Burroughs could be induced to take the care of the parish. Among all the distinguished men of Portsmouth in his long ministry, Dr. Burroughs was still eminent for his rare gifts of conversation, for his ample culture, for his elegant hospitality at his beautiful home, for his inborn and acquired grace of manner, for his unflinching liberality, for his daily walk in harmony with his altar professions. He was rector until the year 1857, a citizen of Portsmouth until the 5th of March, 1868, when he became a fellow-citizen with the saints.<sup>1</sup>

Rulers until the Revolution.—In 1717, after a good deal of rivalry and disturbance between the Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Assembly, the king removed Vaughan from office, and John Wentworth was appointed Lieutenant-Governor in his place.

John Wentworth.—John Wentworth was the grandson of William Wentworth, the first of the name in this country, whose son, Samuel Wentworth, of Portsmouth, has been already referred to. William was an elder of the church at Dover, and occasionally preached there. John was born in Portsmouth in 1671. Under his rule the town had a period of peace and steady prosperity until 1739, when again a disturbance arose from the appointment of Belcher as Governor of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, who from some petty displeasure turned out of office the friends of Wentworth; but the Lieutenant-Governor died in this same year and Dunbar was appointed in his place, and retained the place under constantly increasing opposition until 1741, when the great dissatisfaction against him as well as Governor Belcher resulted in the erection of New Hampshire into a separate province, with the appointment of Benning Wentworth as Governor in 1741.

Benning Wentworth.—Governor Wentworth was a son of the former Lieutenant-Governor John Wentworth, and was born in Portsmouth in 1696. He became a merchant of prominence and a person of much influence in the colony, and his appointment was received with great satisfaction by the people. He married for a second wife Martha Hilton, his housekeeper, upon which incident is founded Longfellow's story of Lady Wentworth. The expedition against Louisburg was the principal and exciting event during his term of office, which ended in 1766, just as the Stamp Act was arousing the indignation of the American people.

Sir John Wentworth.—Sir John Wentworth, a nephew of Benning, was appointed as Governor in 1766, and also as surveyor of all the king's woods in North America. He was born in Portsmouth in 1736, and, while on a visit to England, became a favorite of the Marquis of Rockingham, through whose influence he received his important offices and entered upon them in 1768, landing at Charlestown, and crossing from that port by land to this town. But the times were growing troublesome for all the English officials; the sense of oppression and the desire for liberty were rapidly spreading, and in 1771, because of the aid the Governor rendered to Gen. Gage, the excitement of the people was so great that he was compelled to take refuge, first, in the fort at New Castle, and then upon an English man-of-war in the harbor. He remained in England until peace was declared, became Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, and died in 1829. He was a friend to education, and gave forty-six thousand acres of land to Dartmouth College, and also a grant to each member of the first graduating class. After he left the country and the war of the Revolution secured the independence of the United States, this settlement, whose history we have sketched in its most important events, became, with New Hampshire, a part of the American Union, and entered upon that marvelous prosperity which has won for this country the admiration and envy of the world.

affairs of this colony was Henry Sherburne, from the beginning an active churchman and a warden of the first church of the Piscataqua settlement. His associate warden, Walford, appears some years later as the husband of the witch Goody Walford, and there may be some reason for the supposition that the charge of witchcraft had a connection with the animosity existing between the Independents and church party. Sherburne appears in this settlement as early as June, 1632, when the Bay Colony came into rule here and it was evidently no longer possible to maintain Episcopacy. Sherburne still took an interest in supporting public worship, as approved by the majority, although by no means to his own mind. We find him appointed by the town to go in search of a minister, and also engaging to entertain the minister when he came. All this was in the faith that the re-establishment of Episcopacy might occur at an early day, and in this faith it doubtless was that we find him in the first list of the subscribers to the support of Moodey while officiating at the old South in 1638; but when his faith by force of circumstances grew less, and it was evidently the intention of the Bay to establish their ecclesiastical system here, with all its vigor, then Sherburne refused altogether to contribute towards the support of doctrines he did not accept, for in a list of subscribers to the maintenance of Moodey in 1671 we find annexed to the names of Henry Sherburne and Richard Sloper, his son-in-law, the note "will not subscribe." Nor is there any want of Christian liberality or Christian charity in that, rather is it to be commended. There are persons enough without any religious connections, and without attachments to any of the various doctrinal systems, and those who deem all equally good or equally poor, can help support all; but it is not the best-placed charity or the most commendable spirit, for the sake of improving a neighborhood, or being regarded as generous, or becoming popular, to contribute to the advancement of views one does not think helpful to a higher religious life.

JOHN PICKERING.—In the list of inhabitants of Portsmouth who, in 1640, made a grant of fifty acres for a glebe land for the use of the ministry we find the name of John Pickering, who in himself and his descendants was to play a conspicuous part in town matters, both civil and ecclesiastical.

The first John Pickering appears in Portsmouth as early as 1635, perhaps as early as 1630. He came here from Massachusetts, and probably was the same person spoken of as being at Cambridge soon after that town was settled. He died on the 18th of January, 1668-69, leaving a large family. It was his son John who became so prominent in church and town affairs. He was born about 1640, and died about 1721. He first comes into notice as a military man, for which his character and talents seem eminently to have qualified him. As captain, he had a command in Portsmouth for a number of years. When John Cutt was appointed first president of the separate government of New Hampshire, in 1680, Capt. Pickering was a representative for the town of Portsmouth, and he was also a member of the Assembly called by Cranfield and dissolved in great wrath because it would not raise the money he desired.

It is mentioned in the early records that during the suspension of government consequent on the imprisonment of Andros in 1689, Capt. John Pickering, a man of "a rough and adventurous spirit and a lawyer," "went with a company of armed men to the home of Richard Chamberlain (who wrote the book called Lithobolia, or Stone-throwing Demon at Great Island, of which we have given an account), & who had been secretary of the province under Andros & clerk of the Superior Court, & demanded the records & files wh. were in his possession, & upon refusing to deliver them up without some warrant or security, Pickering seized them by force, carried them off, and concealed them, and in turn was by force compelled to deliver them to Lieutenant-Governor Usher." Voluntarily or by selection he seems to have been engaged in several such enterprises about records of both church and State. In 1697 he was appointed king's attorney, with Charles Story secretary of the province and clerk of the Council, with all the records and files committed to his care. Story did not attend one of the adjourned meetings of the Council; was reprimanded for neglect of duty, and ordered to surrender all his papers. Upon refusing to do so the sheriff and Capt. Pickering were ordered to take with them sufficient assistance, and to make diligent search in any houses, rooms, closets, chests, trunks, or other places within the province for the said papers. He was a member of the convention which in 1690 recommended a reunion with Massachusetts, and was chosen a member of the Assembly which met at Boston for a number of successive years, and was several times chosen its Speaker. As a lawyer he could not have been without popularity and confidence, for in 1707, when the great cause of Allen vs. Waldron, involving Allen's title to the province of New Hampshire, was tried for the last time, and all the strength of each side was brought out, embracing some of the first men in the province, Capt. Pickering was selected as one of the counsel to defend the houses and lands of the inhabitants. The Hon. John Pickering, LL.D., of Newington, was a descendant of the second son of the first John Pickering, of Portsmouth, but the ancestor of the distinguished Timothy Pickering was a John Pickering, of Ipswich. In the affairs of the church it was this Capt. Pickering who was appointed to build the stocks and pillories for the punishment of offenders, and on account of his remarkable strength, of which stories apparently fabulous were handed down, was chosen at the time of Mr. Moodey's settlement to keep the congregation in order, reserve seats for the distinguished guests; but he let all in before the time, on the theory that at church one person was just as good as another. When the difficulties began in regard to the site for the new church, which ended in the formation of a new parish and animosities which disturbed the peace of the whole province for a generation, Capt. Pickering was the leading spirit in the old South Parish, who carried everything as he willed at the town-meetings, either by persuasion or by force, strenuously opposing building the new meeting house so far up as the site of the North Church, carried the matter again and again to the General Court, and generally with success for his side; was foremost in all matters concerning the old parish, and when at last the old church could be no longer repaired and kept as he made the town vote it should be, "the meeting-house of the town forever," he devised to the South Parish a lot of ground for a convenient site for another meeting-house to be set off to the said parish, "on the highest part of his neck." He was a large real-estate owner at the south end of the town, and what was called "Pickering's Neck" was a part of the land on which the fourth place of worship for the town of Portsmouth was built, being the church of the South Parish until the present stone church was built in 1824.

SAMUEL WENTWORTH.—In the list of subscribers to the support of Mr. Moody, and so, of course, among the worshippers at the old South, we find the name of Samuel Wentworth. This is the first of the family, afterwards so prominent in public affairs, who appears in our town. At that time the vicinity of Point of Graves was the principal part of Portsmouth. For a while Samuel Wentworth lived at Great Island, and afterwards built by Puddle Dock, on the south side of the dock, at the north end of Manning Street, the first Wentworth house, still in good preservation. It was in this house that the first Lieutenant-Governor, John Wentworth, his son, lived, and here was married in 1693, and owned all that part of the town as far as the South Church.

After the gathering of the new or North Parish some of the family of Samuel Wentworth are found in that, while to others belonged an active part in the formation of the Episcopal parish.

When Great Island became a town, under the name of New Castle, in 1693, several of the prominent parishioners at the old South became identified with the church at New Castle, and some still retained a nominal connection and even an active interest in the old parish, as well as in the North after its establishment in 1714. Among these were Cranfield and Barefoot, Robert Cutt and Pendleton, Stileman and Fryer, Atkinson and Story, Sheafe and Jaffrey.

SIR WILLIAM PEPPERELL.—I have now to notice two persons who in a day when titles of nobility or birth in the aristocratic families of Old England conferred a real eminence upon men were conspicuous figures in our early history. William Pepperell became a communicant at the old South Nov. 5, 1696; and his son, who was afterwards created a baronet for the taking of Louisburg, was the last baptism recorded by Mr. Moody, May 9, 1697. I am indebted to a careful and valuable manuscript life of Sir William Pepperell, by the Rev. Dr. Burroughs, which is far better than the printed life of the distinguished merchant by Parsons, for much of the following biographical and historical matter.

William Pepperell was born in 1647, in Cornwall, England, and became a settler at the Shoals in 1670, attracted to the commercial advantages of Appledore and the prominence of its fisheries. Here, about 1680, he married a daughter of Mr. John Bray, one of the leading islanders, who had for some time refused the offer of marriage from Pepperell, but, says Dr. Burroughs, "relented in proportion to the increase of his property." As his business increased the Shoals offered too small a field for his enterprise, and he and his partner, a Mr. Gibbins, resolved to leave the weather-beaten islands, and to resort to chance and determine their separate destination. The story runs that they each set up a long pole and left it to fall as Providence should direct. Pepperell's fell towards the northwest, Gibbins' towards the northeast. Following with obedience and enthusiasm the plan they had adopted and the course pointed out by the fallen sticks, Pepperell established himself on the Kittery side of the mouth of the Piscataqua, and made large purchases of land there, while Gibbins obtained that tract on the Penobscot afterwards known as the Waldo patent. As early as the year 1681 we find the name of Pepperell and his father-in-law, Bray, on the town records of Kittery, then a province of Massachusetts, and here Pepperell spent the remainder of his days. His business enterprises were so successful that in 1712 there were but three persons in Kittery, then including Eliot & Berwick, whose property was estimated to be of more value than his. In this year Pepperell interested himself in organizing a church at Kittery, whose inhabitants attended worship under serious inconveniences of distance, weather, and tide at Strawberry Bank. He was chiefly instrumental in the settlement of the Rev. Mr. Newmarch at Kittery, not far from his own mansion, in 1714, and was one of the first signers of the covenant. Up to this time, William Pepperell, at age of almost seventy, and his son, afterwards Sir William, at the age of eighteen, had been constant worshippers at the old South. William Pepperell died in Kittery in 1734, leaving Sir William the principal heir, and with the care and responsibility of a large property. But even before this he had manifested remarkable enterprise and sagacity as a merchant, and his ships were found in all parts of Europe and the West Indies. One of the first things he did was to build the family tomb, still standing in that open field not far from the old family mansion, but without care and rapidly being desolated by time and intruders. In 1722, at the age of twenty-six, Sir William married Miss Hirst, of Boston, to whom all traditions give the highest praise for natural and acquired powers, for brilliant wit, and sweetness of temper. I have copied a few verses of hers, written upon the death of an infant child, which have never been printed, and were handed down by the memory of one who deemed them worthy, and are certainly of a merit equal to much that is printed:

"A little bird that lately pleased my sight,
Ravished my heart and filled me with delight,
And as it grew, at once my joy and pride,
Beloved by all whose eyes its beauty spied,
I fondly called it mine, nor could I bear
The thought of losing what I held so dear;
For it had just begun, with warbling strains,
To soothe my pleasure and to ease my pains:
Its artless notes and piping melody
Made to my ears a grateful harmony
Least while I heard or dreamed of its decay.
This pretty bird by death was snatched away.
Scatched, did I say? No, I recall the word,
'Twas sent for home by its most rightful Lord,
To whose breast will we must and do resign
That which innocently I claimed as mine.
'Twas Thine, blest Lord, Thy goodness lent it me,
'Twas doubly Thine, because given back by Thee.
Then go, sweet bird, mount up and sing on high,
While winged seraphs wait thee through the sky;
They're clad in glory bright, and sit serene
On boughs immortal, ever fresh and green;
They chant thy praises with a lovely train
Of spirits just, for whom the Lamb was slain;
Touch David's harp with wonder and surprise,
Whilst ours, neglected, on the willow lies."

Sir William had no opportunities for an education, except such as came from a multiplicity of relations with men in all ranks of society; but Dr. Stevens, his pastor, who preached a sermon upon his character soon after his death, says, "Such were his abilities and virtues, so distinguished and admirable his social qualities, that he soon drew the notice and engaged the affections of all." "So elevated were his principles and disinterested his views, and so active was his benevolence, that his fellow-citizens considered him as their patron and friend, and bore towards him the sentiment of filial veneration and affection." To the various duties and large responsibilities of one of the greatest merchants of New England, Sir William had added a number of important civil offices, but it was reserved for his military success to give to him his title of nobility.

The Siege of Louisburg.—The siege and capture of Louisburg were the great warlike achievements in our early history, and the command and success of the whole enterprise belonged to Sir William. Upon his return he was received at Portsmouth, entertained, and escorted to his boat, as it departed from our shore to his mansion at Kittery, with an outburst of enthusiasm from the inhabitants and an oration, both civil and military, even greater than were paid to Washington. As in our late war, there were in this adventure some rivalries and jealousies as to whom belonged the credit of the expedition, and Col. William Vaughan, a grandson of Maj. William Vaughan, who came to Portsmouth about 1650, is said to have first prepared a plan of the capture and proposed it to the government, and Governor Wentworth and others were disappointed, not being given the charge of the enterprise; but all eyes turned to Col. Pepperell, as of well-known and eminent moral worth, of acknowledged military skill, of tried statesmanship, of elevated rank in the confidence of the community, and the best fitted to command the expedition. If the success of an engagement might be always predicted from the character of the principal supporters, we might have foretold the capture of Louisburg, for the number of persons prominent in Portsmouth, under the command of Pepperell, was certainly large.

While Pepperell had the matter under consideration, Whitefield, the celebrated Episcopal and itinerant clergyman, and founder of the Calvinistic Methodists, was on a visit to Maine, and Pepperell became well acquainted with him, and asked Whitefield's advice.

"Your scheme," said the great preacher, "I think not very full of encouragement. The eyes of all will be upon you, and should you not meet with success the widows and orphans will utter their complaint and reflection, and if it be otherwise numbers will look upon you with envy and endeavor to eclipse your glory. You ought, therefore, in my judgment, to go with a single eye, and then you will receive strength proportioned to your necessities." Whitefield furnished the motto for the flag of the expedition, "Nil desperandum Christo."

New Hampshire furnished five hundred men, one-eighth of the whole land force. Among these was the Rev. Mr. Langdon (once the grammar school teacher, and then pastor of the North Church), as chaplain, and Jacob Sheafe, son of Sampson Sheafe, of Great Island, as commissary. There was Nathaniel Meserve as lieutenant-colonel; there was Samuel Hale with the rank of major; there was John Storer, grandfather of George Storer, of this town; there was Rev. Ammi R. Cutter, of the Massachusetts regiment, whose eldest son was Dr. Ammi R. Cutter, of Portsmouth; there was Rev. Samuel Moody, of York, son of our Mr. Moody, remarkable for his eccentricities, and private chaplain to Sir William. The expedition was completely successful, and Pepperell was rewarded with an English knighthood. One by one he was compelled to give up his duties and enterprises, and died at his mansion at Kittery on the 6th of July, 1759.

Champernowne.—There remains for us to notice briefly still another important character, whose life has been so carefully written by C. W. Tuttle, Esq., of Boston, that beyond his thorough researches no one need desire to go. In his sketches of this prominent person, recently printed in The Historical and Genealogical Register, may be found authority for most of the following. Among the early settlers of our province more persons perhaps came from Devon and Cornwall than from all other counties in England, and of all the noble families in the west of England, few if any surpass in antiquity and splendor of descent the family of Champernowne, being connected with the Plantagenets, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, and Sir Walter Raleigh. Capt. Francis Champernowne, one of that family, came to New England in 1636.

In 1636, Sir Ferdinando Gorges granted to Champernowne's father two tracts of land bordering on the eastern shore of the Piscataqua and at the mouth. One embraced what has been for the last hundred years and more known as the Gerrish and the Cutts Islands, and the stream now known as Chamney's Creek for a long time bore the name of Champernowne. To this grant came Capt. Francis Champernowne in 1636, at the age of twenty-two. About 1640, and at the time of the granting of the glebe land, Champernowne bought four hundred acres in Greenland, where he built a house and lived for twenty years. Afterwards he added three hundred acres more, including the farm of Col. Peirce, and seems to have lived in a baronial style. At a later date he preferred his residence on Cutts Island, and went there to live. He was a councilor in the government of Gorges, and for a few years, with his associates, had the sole authority in Maine, and opposed strenuously the usurpation by the Massachusetts Bay. He was councilor to Cranfield, to Dudley, and to Andros. Strange to say, when some examinations were made a few years since about this almost forgotten character, traditions in Greenland were brought to light of the descent from royalty of one Champernowne who used to live there, and in Kittery of one who was "the son of a nobleman." He was a thorough royalist and churchman, and about ten years before his death married the widow of Robert Cutt, of Kittery. He lived a retired and dignified life, was reserved in disposition, and took little interest in matters which did not concern him, but, without seeking for place and power, was in that day of prominence on account of his high birth, and altogether respected. He was doubtless one of the most active supporters of Episcopacy, and from his residence at Greenland a constant worshiper at the first chapel, and thereafter, unless too strict a churchman to take any interest in the services of Puritanism, at the old South for thirty years. He died on Cutts Island in 1687, and a small cairn marks the place of his burial. I am inclined to think he was one who carried out a plan held by many of the leading old families of England, and especially of second or later sons who would not inherit the family estates, to establish themselves in the New World, and for religious and political reasons they turned naturally to the settlement at the Piscataqua.

Successive Ministers at the Old South Parish.—EMERSON. John Emerson, the fourth minister of the South Parish, was the third minister of that name settled in New England. He graduated at Harvard in 1689, and in 1703, as we have seen, was settled over the recently gathered parish at New Castle. After a good deal of inconvenience there on account of arrears of salary and some trouble about a parsonage, he resigned in 1712, and in the midst of the difficulty at Portsmouth in regard to the formation of a new parish, Mr. Emerson was invited to preach to the parish at the old South. It was in a great measure owing to the remarkable pulpit gifts and the pleasing manners of Mr. Emerson that the South Parish seems not to have seriously regarded the secession of the North Parish. Mr. Emerson was born at Ipswich in 1670. In 1708, while over the parish at New Castle, he went to England, spent some time in London, and from his fine presence and courtly manners was handsomely noticed by Queen Anne.

We find in the town records under date of 17th February, 1713, "Whereas, John Plaisted, Mark Hunking, Esq., Capt. John Pickren, & Wm. Cotton, at a legal town meeting called & commenced ye 9th of Sep., 1713, were chosen and appointed to call & agree with a minister of ye Gospel to Preach at ye old meeting-house, & according to s<sup>d</sup> vote, wch call was made to ye Reverend John Emerson by and with ye consent of above s<sup>d</sup> persons; s<sup>d</sup> Emerson came accordingly in ye month of January in above s<sup>d</sup> year; ye Feb. 7 following s<sup>d</sup> Pickren & Cotton, with the consent of approbation of s<sup>d</sup> Hunking & Plaisted, made agreement with him ye s<sup>d</sup> Emerson to be our settled minister, & engaged that he should be paid yearly & every year £100, strangers' contribution, & a Parsonage house at Town charge so long as s<sup>d</sup> Emerson continue preaching in s<sup>d</sup> House."

The next year, June 7, 1714, it seems there was another committee chosen by the town, and evidently by the influence of the new parish, and with three persons from it opposed to the settlement of Emerson, who were to settle an orthodox and learned minister on ye south side of ye mill dam. But when it was found that the South Parish was firm in its choice of Mr. Emerson, and some of the selectmen had been arrested on account of his salary, it was voted by the town the next year "yt if any lawsuit on ye like occasion be again commenced, yt itt be impleaded at ye expense of ye town, for that he Mr. Emerson, is not ye settled minister of the town pursuant to order of ye government & vote of the town, June, 1714."

Then, again, 25th March, 1717, "Whereas, by virtue of a Pretended vote on the 9th Sept., 1713, there is a sham agreement made with Mr. Emerson to officiate as a minister at ye old Meeting-House, ye same being clandestinely put upon record, Voted that ye same be null and Rassed out of ye Town book, for that he ye s<sup>d</sup> Emerson is not a legal settled minister of ye Town."

This contention was ended by the Legislature declaring both to be settled ministers of ye town.

In the South Parish records, under date of March 23, 1714-15, is the following record: "The church belonging to the old meeting-house in Portsmouth having chosen the Rev. John Emerson to take the oversight of them, the Reverend Christopher Toppan, in the presence of the Rev. Caleb Cushing & Theophilus Cotton, gave him the pastoral charge of them and the congregation attending God's publick worship in that place, having been ordained before to the work of the ministry by the laying on of the hands of the Pres-bytery, viz.: the Rev. Mr. John Cotton, John Pike, & John Clark." Mr. Rogers would not assist at the services of installation, and was greatly displeas'd with Mr. Emerson for being settled over the old parish, and carried his bitter feeling all through his ministry.

The ministry of Mr. Emerson lasted from the 23d of March, 1714-15, to the 21st of February, 1732-33, a pastorate of seventeen years, and, after the settlement of the difficulties occasioned by the secession of the North Parish, of undisturbed tranquillity and unexampled prosperity.

A Church on the Plains.—Quite a little village had grown up at and about the Plains, of so much importance that in 1725 a meeting-house was built on the rise of ground east of the training-field, and worship regularly maintained for nearly two years, when, in 1727, it was voted "to free and exonerate them from any tax or charge towards the support of the gospel ministry (at the North Church), or any parish at the Bank for the future, provided they have frequent preaching more for accommodation than at the Bank." The meeting-house blew down in 1748.

Absence of the Spirit of Persecution.—It has often been remarked that our early settlers were singularly free from religious bigotry, and in an epoch fruitful of dogmatism and persecution but few instances of fanatical zeal can be laid at their feet. Themselves strictly of the Church of England, when they could not maintain their own form of worship, the Non-conformist clergymen of the Bay found no hindrance here except when Cranfield instituted proceedings against Moody for refusing to administer the sacrament according to the order of the Church of England. There has come down to us an account of but a single instance of the infliction of violence in the province for heterodoxy, and that was under the law of Massachusetts (for New Hampshire as a separate government never authorized such a penalty), when in 1662 Richard Waldron ordered three Quaker women to be led at the cart's tail through New Hampshire and Massachusetts; out of the jurisdiction and whipped in each town; but Walter Barefoote, afterwards a royal Governor of New Hampshire, by a pious stratagem, obtained the custody of the women in Salisbury, and saved them from further cruelty by sending them out of the province. The refuge of Quakers and Anabaptists in these days was Rhode Island, a State from the beginning to the present day remarkable for its hospitality towards various opinions, but at that time regarded as the drain or sink of New England for the shelter it gave the heretics, so that it has been said of Rhode Island, "If any man had lost his religion he might find it there among such a general muster of opinionists." We have, in 1656, under rule of the Bay, the several enactments against "a cursed sect of hereticks lately arisen up in the world which are commonly called Quakers, who took upon them to be immediately sent of God."

Witchcraft.—There is also but little about the sad delusion of witchcraft, which was then a common belief, and while only a score of miles away men eminent for piety and learning were hurried into all kinds of errors, persecution, and bitterness, only a few instances occur where there were any accusations prosecuted for that offense here, and of these not one reached a tragical conclusion. The only case in our town had a singular and triumphant ending. It occurred in 1656, at Little Harbor, then a part of Portsmouth. The testimony was that on Lord's day, 30th of March, at night, as Susannah Trimmings was going home with Goodwife Barton, she separated from her at the freshold, next her house. On her return, between Goodmen Evens and Robert Davis, she heard a rustling in the woods, which she at first thought was occasioned by swine, and presently after there did appear to her a woman, whom she apprehended to be old Goodwife Walford. She asked me where my consort was? I answered, "I had none." She said, "Thy consort is at home by this time. Lend me a pound of cotton." I told her I had but two pounds in the house, and I would not spare any to my mother. She said, "I had better have done it, that my sorrow was great already, and it should be greater, for I was going a great journey but should never come there." She then left me, and I was struck as with a clap of fire on the back, and she vanished towards the water-side in my apprehension in the shape of a cat. She had on her head a white linen hood tied under her chin, and her waistcoat and petticoat were red, with an old green apron, and a black hat upon her head.

Her husband and others testified to strange things which apparently had been brought about by the bewitching of Goody Walford; but Goody Walford, traduced as a witch, boldly brought her defamers into court to answer for the slanderous words, and actually succeeded in recovering damages.

A New Church.—This was the first and last serious instance of witchcraft in our town. The old South Church was now falling into ruins. It was deemed unfit for worship in 1711, when the whole town had voted to build a new one, but by reason of the separation the diminished numbers at the Mill Dam continued their services there until 1731, when the parish built a new church on a lot of land presented by Capt. John Pickering. This was the South Meeting-house, standing until our own day on the site of the present South Ward Room, which was so important a landmark for mariners coming into Pis-cataqua Harbor, and which, after repairs and remodeling, was finally taken down a few years since. It must have been a great trial to the South Parish, that after the North Parish had their new meeting-house provided for them at the cost of the whole town, and had acquired the legal right to the glebe land and parsonage, it was necessary for the South Parish to depend entirely upon its own contributions; but such was the success of the ministry of Emerson that it seemed to it not too serious a burden.

After the frame was raised, Mr. Emerson made a prayer upon a stage fixed in a frame for the occasion. That prayer was his last public service. He died in the sixty-second year of his age, and was buried in the Cotton burial-ground. The following is the inscription on his tomb. "Here resteth in Hope of a glorious Resurrection ye body of ye Rev. Mr. John Emerson, ye late faithful Pastor of ye South Church, in Portsmouth, who Died January ye 21st, 1731-2, in ye 62d year of his Age. The memory of ye just is blessed."

One of the principal incidents of the ministry of Emerson and Rogers was the great accession of church-members by reason of the earthquake in Portsmouth in 1727, and both to keep in memory that alarming event, as well as alive the interest of the church and gratitude for its prosperity, Emerson ever after preached an occasional discourse on the evening of the 29th of October.

There is preserved a portrait of him painted in London in 1708, during his visit to that city, when his remarkable personal appearance commended him to the favor of the queen. With the great wig, the robe, and bands, it gives also a countenance of striking features, restless eyes, a mouth of rare beauty, and an expression of reverence, benignity, and gentleness. His gifts were equal to his graces, and he was, by all testimony, an agreeable companion, an interesting preacher, a faithful pastor, and a good man.

Shurtleff.—After the records of Mr. Emerson we find the following note: "The Church and congregation in ye South Part of ye Town of Portsmouth, formerly under ye pastoral care of ye Rev. Mr. Jno. Emerson, having called ye Rev. Mr. Wm. Shurtleff to succeed him, he was installed in ye pastoral office on Feb. 21, 1732-3."

This is in the handwriting of Mr. Shurtleff, and thereafter follow many pages of his records, being chiefly those of baptisms and of adoptions of the church covenant. Occasionally there is a record of a baptism in the North Church, during an exchange with Mr. Fitch, or of one by Mr. Fitch in the South Church, showing that the most cordial relations existed between the ministers and parishes.

It was customary in that day for the church to exercise a pretty strict watch over its members,—a custom which, for sympathy or for censure, I fear we have too universally abandoned,—and it is no uncommon thing to find in the records of all the older churches frequent references to the faults and falls of the members and the decreed punishment of the offenders; but during Mr. Shurtleff's ministry, a period of fifteen years, there is but one record of this character, which runs as follows: "Aug. 10, 1736, voted at a church meeting yt Abigail Tobie, a member in full communion with the church, be suspended from communion on ye account of her scandalous Behavior in Boston. Having been convicted of stealing several things, and y<sup>e</sup> she stand suspended till she manifests her repentance and y<sup>e</sup> same."

Whether it is owing to the special emphasis which has always been laid upon the moral duties in the history of this parish, or whether it is owing to any lower discipline we cannot say, but this single instance of ecclesiastical discipline is in striking contrast to most church records of this period.

The Rev. Wm. Shurtleff was a native of Plymouth, Mass., where he was born in the year 1689. He graduated at Harvard College in 1707, and was ordained as pastor of the church at New Castle, which was then the aristocratic part of Portsmouth, the very year that Mr. Emerson was dismissed (1712). As he succeeded Mr. Emerson at New Castle, so he became his successor over the South Parish of this town, where he was installed Feb. 21, 1733. The new church for the South Parish had just been finished, harmony had been entirely restored between the two parishes, and Mr. Shurtleff entered upon his new field of labor with every promise of success,—a promise which was abundantly fulfilled and which ceased only with his death.

Clerical Anecdotes.—Some of the stories which are told of the contemporary ministers, neighbors, and friends of Mr. Shurtleff give us the only glimpses of ministerial life among the scanty records which are preserved to us. There was a clergyman at Newington, Rev. Joseph Adams, who lived, I believe, to a greater age than any minister ever settled in New Hampshire. He is described as a man of fair talents, but of great self-complacency. In praying for a person dangerously sick, who had desired the prayers of the congregation, he prayed very earnestly that the man might be prepared to die, for, added he, "Ye, O Lord, who are skillful, know there is no possibility of his recovery." At a meeting of the association of ministers at Portsmouth, Mr. Adams made the prayer, in which he took occasion to introduce the horses mentioned in the Book of Revelation; but becoming suddenly embarrassed while speaking of the white horse he closed the exercises abruptly, whereupon one of his brethren observed to him that at this time of life he should be particularly cautious in mounting strange horses if he would avoid a fall.

The Rev. John Tucke, settled at the Shoals, was also a contemporary of Mr. Shurtleff. The Shoals was at that time quite flourishing, and Mr. Tucke's salary was one of the highest at that time paid in New England. He was a scholarly and faithful pastor, and, as it reads on his tombstone at Star Island, "a useful physician, both to the bodies and souls of his people." These islands had before and after Mr. Shurtleff two or three quite eminent as well as eccentric men. There was one Rev. Mr. Roach, whose prayers were so touching and whose life was so pure that it was said of him, "He dwelt as near heaven as any man on earth." His congregation were fishermen, and they usually assembled one day in the month, besides the Sabbaths, for public worship. On one of these days he was requested to postpone the meeting to a future time, as it was a fine season for their business, and they must go out with their boats. He endeavored to persuade them, but in vain, and then addressed them: "If you are resolved to neglect your duty to God, and will go away, I say unto you, catch fish if you can; but as for you who will tarry and worship the Lord Jesus Christ, I will pray unto Him for you that you may catch fish till you are weary." Thirty went, toiled all day, and caught four fishes; while the five who attended divine worship, and afterwards went out, caught as many hundred. After that they all regularly attended all meetings the pastor appointed.

After him came the eccentric Moody, son of the minister of Portsmouth of that name, of whom is told that familiar story, that once addressing the congregation on the occasion of a shipwreck, he inquired, "Supposing, my brethren, any of you should be taken short in the bay in a northeast storm, your hearts trembling with fear, and nothing but death before you, whither would your thoughts turn? What would you do?" He paused, and a sailor, supposing he awaited an answer, and attracted by his description of the storm at sea, replied, "Why, in that case, d'ye see, I should immediately hoist the foresail and send away for Squam."

Revival under Whitefield.—The most remarkable ecclesiastical event during the ministry of Mr. Shurtleff was the great revival under Whitefield, of which Mr. Shurtleff has left an extended account. It is interesting for the description he gives of the townsmen, as well as of the revival. He says, "You are doubtless in some measure acquainted with the character which the People of this Town have heretofore generally sustained. They have, I think, been remarkt by strangers for their Politeness in Dress and Behaviour; have been thought to go beyond most others in equal circumstances, if not to excess themselves in their sumptuous and elegant Living, and Things of a like nature; & while they have been justly in Repute for their generous and hospitable Disposition, and for many social habits. Diversions of various kinds have been much in Fashion, & the vices that have been usual in Sea Port and trading Places have been common and prevalent among us. We have, I trust, never been without a number of sincere and serious Christians; but even these wise virgins have slumbered and slept; and as to the generality of Professors, they have seemed for a great while to content themselves with an empty Form, and there has been but little of the Life & Power of Religion to be seen."

Mr. Whitefield came here and preached in the old South Church on the 25th of February, 1745, and while Mr. Shurtleff seems to have disapproved of a good many excesses of the revival, he testifies that he thought "his traveling this way was a favorable Providence, and his preaching was instrumental in making many shake off their heavy slumbers."

As the result of the revival he gives us his opinion that there is not the profane cursing and swearing that was formerly usual; that the Sabbath was more strictly observed; that family worship was set up; that many dishonest dealers had made restitution; that music and dancing were wholly laid aside.

He mentions in all seriousness an incident which, he says, was overruled by God to serve great and good purposes:

"Late in the evening, after services had been held all day, and just as the people were leaving the church, the chimney of an House that stood near to it happened to take fire and blaze out to an uncommon Degree. Upon the sudden appearance of the light breaking in at the several windows there was a cry made that Christ was coming to Judgment, which being really believed by a great many, some that were not before so much affected as others were put into the deepest Distress, great numbers had their convictions hereby strengthened and confirmed. And however distasteful the relating such low occurrences may be to some wise and curious Palates now, I make no doubt but things of a like nature will afford an infinite satisfaction to the Saints hereafter; that it will give them a vast and incoinceivable Pleasure when they get to Heaven to have the Beauty of Divine Providence laid open to their view; to hear and see how some events that are seemingly insignificant, and appear perfectly casual, have been ordered out in infinite Wisdom and made subservient to very great and excellent Designs, and how a bare Imagination and mistaken Apprehension of Things has been so far set Home and made such impressions upon a great many as to be a means of their saving conversion to God."

Mr. Shurtleff married the sister of Hon. Theodore Atkinson, whose only mission seems to have been to develop his patience and weakness. The story is told that once she fastened the door of the room where he was finishing his sermon for church, went to her pew and sat quietly there, while a committee of the church went to see what was the matter. She even left the worthy pastor to prepare his own dinner. "Has this been salted, Mr. Shurtleff?" she said, while he was broiling a piece of fish. "It has," was the meek reply. "Well, then, it needs peppering too," she said, as she threw a shovelfull of ashes upon his ruined meal.

She made some reparation for her treatment of her husband by leaving to all succeeding ministers of the South Parish a fine old silver tankard, which is preserved unto the present day.

Mr. Shurtleff published five sermons, together with a long account of the revival during his ministry, and these show him to be a man of no common gifts. He was "long to be remembered," writes one of his successors, "for his uncommon meekness and patience under great trials, and for distinguished piety as well as pastoral fidelity."

Strong.—After a ministry of fifteen years he died on the 9th of May, 1747, and was buried beneath the pulpit of the old South. At the destruction of that building his remains were removed to the South Cemetery, and a simple tablet erected by the parish.

In the very year that Mr. Shurtleff died there was visiting in the family of the distinguished Jonathan Edwards, at Northampton, Mass., the devoted American missionary, David Brainerd. He had entered Yale College to prepare himself for the ministry, but was expelled for saying of one of the tutors "that he had no more of the grace of God than a chair." Soon after he began his work as a missionary among the Indians, first near Stockbridge, Mass., then in Pennsylvania, and then in New Jersey, where he met with great success.

At Northampton Mr. Brainerd met and was pleased with a young man named Job Strong, and particularly recommended him to the commissioners at Boston as a suitable person for missionary labors among the Indians, a work which greatly interested young Strong, who had that year graduated at Yale. He set out in the latter part of the year 1747 for a settlement in New York, but having gone as far as Schoharie, he was taken ill and was unable to complete his journey. But he had spent about six months on this tour, and returned full of expectations and resolves of a work of future usefulness among the wild men of the wilderness. The South Parish had, however, heard such excellent accounts of Mr. Strong and of his fitness and gifts for the ministry that Matthew Livermore and Henry Sherburne were sent to Northampton to invite him to this place. Jonathan Edwards felt that Mr. Strong was especially fitted to carry on the work which Brainerd, who had just died at his house, had so well begun, and protested against Mr. Strong's going to Portsmouth unless upon the express condition that it should be for a temporary engagement, after which he was to resume his missionary labors, and the gentlemen were obliged to promise Mr. Edwards, who was then the spiritual head of the Church of New England, that they would not use their influence for his establishment here. It was probably with this understanding that Mr. Strong came to the South Parish. Whether the committee faithfully kept their promise or not they did not persuade the parish not to take any interest in Mr. Strong, for his preaching and himself were evidently well pleasing, and he soon received a call to become its pastor. This he declined, and went back to the commissioners at Boston to receive directions about his father's labor among the Indians. His health, however, seemed insufficient to the task, and they thought it best he should relinquish his cherished plans, which involved so much exposure and toil. The parish renewed the invitation, which he now accepted, and the first notice concerning him on the church records is as follows: "The Church and congregation in y<sup>e</sup> South part of the Town of Portsmouth, formerly under the Pastoral Care of y<sup>e</sup> Rev. Mr. William Shurtleff, having called Mr. Job Strong to succeed him, he was solemnly set apart to y<sup>e</sup> pastoral office amongst them on the 28th day of June, 1749."

Jonathan Edwards. The 28th of June, 1749, must have been a day of great interest, not only to the South Parish, but to the whole town of Portsmouth, for, added to the fact of the old parish of the town being about to ordain a new pastor, Jonathan Edwards, then regarded as by far the most eminent theologian in Christendom, was to preach the sermon. Mary Edwards, his daughter, then about fifteen years of age, afterwards Mrs. Dwight, of Northampton, was at the time making a visit to some of her father's friends here. The uncertainty of travel in those days made it necessary to leave a substitute, in case the appointed preacher did not arrive in time. The Rev. Mr. Moody, of York, able and eccentric, had accepted the place. On the morning of that day, Mr. Edwards not having arrived, the Council delayed the ordination as long as they well could, and then proceeded to the church, where Mr. Moody had been regularly assigned to offer opening prayer. That gentleman, knowing that a numerous and highly respectable audience had been drawn together by a strong desire to hear Mr. Edwards, rose up to pray under the not very pleasant impression that he must stand in his place, and offered a prayer which was wholly characteristic of himself, and in some degree also of the times in which he lived. In that part of it in which it was proper to allude to the exercises of the day he besought the Lord that they might be suitably humbled, under the power of his Providence, in not being permitted to hear on that occasion a discourse, as they had all fondly expected, from "that eminent servant of God, the Rev. Mr. Edwards, of Northampton," and proceeded to thank God for having raised him up to be such a burning and shining light, for his uncommon piety, for his great excellence as a preacher, for the remarkable success which had attended his ministry in other congregations as well as his own, for the superior talents and wisdom with which he was endowed as a writer, and for the great amount of good which his works had already done, and still promised to do, to the church and to the world. He then prayed that God would spare his life, and endow him with still greater gifts and graces, and render him still more eminent and useful than he had been, and concluded this part of his prayer by supplicating the divine blessing on the daughter of Mr. Edwards (then in the congregation), who, though a very worthy and amiable young lady, was still, as they had good reason to believe, without the grace of God and in an unconverted state; that God would bring her to repentance and forgive her sins, and not suffer the peculiar frivolities which she enjoyed to be the means of a more aggravated condemnation.

Mr. Edwards, who traveled on horseback and had been unexpectedly detained on the road, arrived at the church a short time after the commencement of the exercises, and entered the door just after Mr. Moody began his prayer. Being remarkably still in all his movements, and particularly in the house of God, he ascended the stairs and entered the pulpit so silently that Mr. Moody did not hear him, and of course was necessitated before a very numerous audience to listen to the very high character given of himself by Mr. Moody. As soon as the prayer was closed Mr. Moody turned round and saw Mr. Edwards behind him, and without leaving his place gave him his right hand and addressed him as follows: "Brother Edwards, we are all of us much rejoiced to see you here to-day, and nobody probably as much so as myself; but I wish that you might have got in a little sooner or a little later, or else that I might have heard you when you came in, and known that you were here. I didn't intend to flatter you to your face, but there's I'll tell you one thing: they say that your wife is going to heaven by a shorter road than yourself," alluding to Mr. Edward's lengthened and metaphysical explanation of the doctrine of the church. Mr. Edwards bowed, and after reading the psalm went on with the sermon.

The text was John xiii. 15, 16: "For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily, I say unto you the servant is not greater than his Lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him."

The subject is "Christ, the example of ministers." It is not a very long sermon according to the custom of that day, for it could hardly have occupied much more than an hour in delivery, and, according to the abilities and reputation of Mr. Edwards, it would have been a disappointment to the distinguished and expectant congregation, if indeed congregations were then disappointed in anything their preachers did. With all due acknowledgment of the vast abilities Jonathan Edwards certainly possessed, and of the logical power manifested in his writings, his sermon at the ordination of Mr. Strong has very little to commend it. It has neither any very great doctrinal nor practical merits, neither depth of feeling, nor strength, nor beauty of expression to make it edifying to a congregation or inspiring to the young minister; it is commonplace and tedious, and wanting in any moral or spiritual fervor.

It may hardly be out of place in this connection to include a part of a letter which Jonathan Edwards wrote to his daughter Mary, while continuing a visit in Portsmouth for some weeks after the ordination, which shows the all-pervading piety of this golly man:

"My dear Child,

"Though you are at so great a distance from us, yet God is everywhere. You are much out of the reach of our care, but you are every moment in His hands. We have not the comfort of seeing you, but He sees you. His eye is always upon you. And if you may but live sensibly near to God and have His gracious presence, it is no matter if you are far distant from us, and have God near to you by His Spirit, than to have you always with us and live at a distance from God. . . .

"I hope that you will maintain a strict and constant watch over yourself against all temptations, that you do not forsake and forget God, and particularly that you do not grow slack in secret religion. Retire often from this vain world, from all its bubbles and empty shadows and vain amusements, and converse with God alone; and seek effectually for that divine grace and comfort, the least drop of which is worth more than all the riches, luxuries, pleasures, and entertainments of the whole world. . . .

" . . . And if the next news we should hear of you should be of your death, though that would be very melancholy, yet if at the same time we should receive such intelligence concerning you as should give us the best grounds to hope that you had died in the Lord, how much more comfortable would this be, though we should have no opportunity to see you or to take our leave of you in your sickness, than if we should be with you during all its progress and have much opportunity to attend upon you and converse and pray with you, and take an affectionate leave of you, and after all have reason to apprehend that you died without the grace and favor of God."

Under such happy auspices, and with the counsel of so eminent a divine, Mr. Strong began his ministry. His notes are written in a small, even, close hand, but contain no reference to any parish or town event, only the list of those who were baptized by him, and those who renewed their baptismal covenant.

In the winter of 1750, one Sunday morning succeeding the death of his infant child, he preached from the text, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil;" before the afternoon service he was taken ill, and died on Monday, the 30th of September, 1751, and was buried by the side of Mr. Shurtleff, under the pulpit of the old South, whence the remains of both were taken to the cemetery at the destruction of that building, and over them a plain and substantial tombstone was erected by the parish.

The period between his death and the choice of another minister was very brief, for immediately after the last baptism of Mr. Strong is this note in the handwriting of his successor: "Sept., 1751, Died the Rev. Mr. Job Strong, Pastor of the South Church of Christ, Portsmouth, and was succeeded in his pastoral office by Mr. Sam<sup>l</sup> Haven, May 6, 1752, by whom is made the following entry: The South Church & Congregation in Portsmouth late under ye pastoral care of the Rev. Mr. Job Strong unanimously elected Mr. Sam<sup>l</sup> Haven to be their Pastor, who was accordingly separated to that office, and received the particular charge of them May 6, 1752."

Mr. Haven was born in Framingham, Mass., in 1727; was graduated at Harvard University in 1749; studied theology with Rev. Mr. Parkman, of West-borough, Mass., and received and declined invitation to settle in Brookfield, Medway, Braintree, and Brookline, which showed the acceptance and promise of his ministrations, and prophesied the abundant success he was to have in the longest pastorate of any minister in this town.

Mr. Haven had been settled but a very few years when it became evident to at least some of his parishioners that his inclinations were towards a theology a little modified from the strictness in which it had been expressed by the common school of the New England divines, for as early as 1757, or only five years after his settlement, we find a church meeting called upon the desire of John Elliot, Abraham Elliot, and Perkins Ayers (and some women), and upon being asked what they had to offer to the church, preferred the following letter:

"TO THE SOUTH CHURCH.

"BRETHREN,—Whereas we, the subscribers, have for some time absent from the communion and from ye public worship of God with you, and as you have not inquired of us the reasons of our so doing, we think it our duty to give you the reason of our conduct, as followeth:

"1. As we look upon it that Congregational churches ought to keep ye rules of Cambridge Platform, and defend ye Doctrines of ye New England Confession of Faith, being agreeable to God's word as we judge, and was established by authority, so we find upon examination you do not practice agreeable thereto, and we have been obliged in conscience to withdraw from you, that we might not any longer partake with you in your suit; the necessity of leaving you being matter of grief to us, for it is not out of any contempt of ye Holy Fellowship which ought to be among you that we have left you, but for our better edification, and that because we cannot profit under Mr. Haven's preaching, for we judge Mr. Haven's preaching generally tends to encourage saints & sinners in a general way to think that if they exercise ye natural strength & power they have, that God will be obliged to have mercy on them for Christ sake; which we judge tends to make persons think that God's Decree in election depends upon ye conduct of ye creature, which would at once overthrow ye Doctrine of free grace Election. God says by ye prophet Hosea, ' & Israel thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help; ' & tho' ye Apostle exhorts man to do good works as commanded by God, yet he says that without Faith it is impossible to please God, & that whatsoever is not of faith is sin, by which it appears that Persons in a state of nature cannot do anything that obliges God to have mercy upon them.

"They further charged that Mr. Haven took in members contrary to the Platform; that the Church Government was not what it ought to be; that Mr. Haven baptized Infants of such as were not members, and that he endeavored to keep the gifts of God from being used by such as God sends among us, by which it appears to us he is not on ye Lord's side (which seems to mean that he did not invite one Mr. Crosswell, who some of these strict theologians desired to hear, to preach for them), and so upon due consideration and as a matter of conscience, they could not worship any longer where Mr. Haven preached, and must enter a church which was conducted according to ye rule and order of ye Gospel, and they close by saying, in what we have done we have aimed at God's glory and a reformation among us, and by God's grace assisting, we are resolved in his strength to pursue."

This paper is signed by three men and nine women, and dated Portsmouth, Oct. 11, 1757.

There followed a lengthy debate upon the important matter, and the pastor having declared his sentiments with regard to these points by doctrine, which are mentioned in the letter, and concerning many others which they were pleased to question him about, the dissatisfied brethren aforesaid signified their full satisfaction and acquiescence in what the pastor had then represented as his faith, and then the church declared that they could not upon recollection remember that the pastor had ever advanced anything contrary to, or inconsistent with, what he had then declared to be his faith in the points questioned.

A committee consisting of Henry Sherburne, Matthew Livermore, James Clarkson, and Deacons Mark Langdon and Daniel Jackson was joined with the pastor to prepare an answer, but John Elliot "in ye meeting addressed himself to ye church" and said, "I assure you I shall never give myself the trouble to read your answer."

Thus ended in writing the first controversy with the young and liberal pastor, to whose views, in harmony with the first trendings of that religious movement which was soon to disturb New England, it is owing that the South Parish was prepared to fully endorse it under the ministry of Dr. Parker, which began in 1808 and closed in 1833.<sup>1</sup>

Ministers at the North or New Parish.—The new parish at the Bank, as it was then always named, and the North Church, since continued under the ministry of Mr. Rogers for nine years, and was succeeded by Mr. Fitch, during whose ministry the feeling caused by the separation passed away, and Mr. Shurtleff then began an interchange of pulpit and pastoral services.

Dr. Langdon.—Next, Mr. Langdon, the school-master in the town, who for a short time had been Mr. Fitch's assistant, and was pastor until 1774, when he accepted the presidency of Harvard College.

Dr. Stiles.—He was succeeded by Dr. Stiles, who after a brief ministry was elected to the presidency of Yale College, and in 1779 by the Rev. Dr. Buckminster, among the most gifted and distinguished ministers New Hampshire has had.

Dr. Buckminster.—The old church, under its sobriquet of "the three-decker," on account of its galleries, was crowded by the eloquence of Dr. Buckminster, justly regarded as one of the greatest preachers of his day, and called upon at every public occasion. Dr. Haven was then suffering under the infirmities of age, and the South Parish had reached its lowest estate. The most cordial relations had for a long time existed between the clergymen and congregations of the two parishes, so that when Dr. Haven died in 1806, Dr. Buckminster officiated at his funeral, and when Dr. Buckminster died in 1812, Dr. Parker, recently settled over the South Parish, preached his funeral sermon to an immense and sorrowing congregation in the North Church. It was during the ministry of Dr. Buckminster that the elements of a great theological change began to appear in all parts of New England, and while the most pleasant interchanges of private and pulpit offices were abandoned, the doctrinal differences only widened. By reason of his eloquence and popular gifts and personal acceptance, Dr. Buckminster was still patiently listened to by those who had grown away from his views, so that after his death, it was impossible for the parish to unite upon a successor for nearly three years; and one of the class-men they invited to settle over them on a strictly doctrinal vote by a majority of one, was a Unitarian, whose settlement was prevented only by the separate action of the church. When the parish failed in obtaining the pastor of their choice, at first protested against the settlement of Mr. Robinson to the number of over sixty legal voters and then withdrew to the South Parish, under the rising popularity of the distinguished Dr. Parker.

The Universalist Parish.—In the year 1784 we have to note another of large importance and influence in the history of church matters in this town. In that year a house of worship was built in Vaughan Street, where Mr. Stoddard's stable now stands, and this should be, in historical accuracy, regarded as the beginning of the sect here instead of the year 1773, from which date the centennial services were reckoned. It is true, Mr. Murray had preached the doctrines of Universalism in Portsmouth as early as the commencement of the Revolutionary war, at the church building of the Sandermanians and of the Independent Congregational Society, and meetings may have been held with some degree of regularity from the year 1782; but the historical beginnings of the parish cannot by any methods of reckoning be carried beyond 1780, and should with greater correctness begin with the ministrations of Mr. Parker, a layman of their own number in 1784. Then for ten years the society had only occasional supplies until Rev. George Richards was invited to become the minister in August, 1783, and was ordained in July, 1799. From that time until 1807 the parish had a prosperous life, and in the following year the present beautiful church edifice was dedicated.<sup>1</sup>

Various Events.—In 1756 the first newspaper published in New Hampshire was printed by Daniel Fowle, and called the New Hampshire Gazette and Historical Chronicle.

In 1764 another weekly paper was started, because the Gazette was regarded as too timid in the cause of liberty, called the New Hampshire Mercury.

In 1758 a State-house was, by direction of the General Assembly, built in this town; there for a number of years Dr. Haven, of the South Parish, and Dr. Langdon, of the North Parish, alternately officiated as chaplains. On the 20th of April, 1761, Mr. John Stavers commenced running a stage from this town to Boston, drawn by two horses and sufficiently wide to carry three passengers, leaving here on Monday and returning to this town on Friday, and the fare about three dollars. It was in the year 1774, in the excitement which, long controlled, was just beginning to break forth in the riotous demonstrations preceding the Revolution, that the Committee of Safety collected a company, and went to Fort William and Mary, at New Castle, occupying the site of Fort Constitution, and brought off the stores of gunpowder and arms, which some of our later historians have shown was one of the first acts of the war, and to be credited to the patriotism or the rebellion of this town before the battle of Bunker Hill or the affairs of Lexington and Concord.

In the year 1775, Governor Wentworth came to the Isles of Shoals, and prorogued the General Assembly, which was his last official act within the province, and the royal government in New Hampshire entirely ceased.

Independence and Peace.—In the year 1783 the articles of peace were celebrated in this town with great enthusiasm and display. Bells were rung, salutes fired, and the North Church crowded for a religious service, at which Dr. Haven and Mr. Buckminster both offered prayers, which were spoken of as most eloquent and pathetic, a prayer in those days not infrequently having all the preparation, characteristics, and effects of a most studied and brilliant orator.

Visit of Washington.—In October, 1789, the President, George Washington, visited Portsmouth, and was received most heartily by the whole population. Full and glowing as our accounts are of this interesting event in our history, we can still depend only upon the imagination to fill out the picture of the enthusiastic oration, and the spontaneous gratitude and respect which were paid to this illustrious general and statesman.

Conclusion.—Since the Revolution there is little in the history of this settlement which one may not find easy of access in the various periodicals by which current events have been minutely described and carefully preserved. The early and struggling colony had become one of the original States of the American Union. For a long time Portsmouth filled an important place in the commerce, business, social life, literature, and culture of New England. Its beautiful old residences were guarded from the destructive inroads of time, and however far its inhabitants wandered, they cherished an unusual fondness for the place of their birth; but for some years the changed and enlarged avenues of trade have drawn its sons to other centres of business which offer greater opportunities, and, like so many of the New England colonial towns, its future seems to be one of commercial decline instead of growth, while the appreciation of the beauty of its situation by the unchanging sea only deepens with its increasing throng of visitors.

CHAPTER XV.

(Churches)—(Banks)—(Press)—(Societies, etc.)

Methodist Episcopal Church.<sup>2</sup>—In the year 1790, Jesse Lee made his first appearance in Portsmouth as a Methodist preacher. From that time there was miscellaneous preaching until 1807.

In the year 1807, Martin Ruter was appointed to Portsmouth and Nottingham.

In the year 1808 the church was permanently organized; the first class was organized by George Pickering, in house No. 12 Washington Street, then occupied by a Mr. Hutchins. Brothers Pickering, Metcalf, and Stevens preached in the town, interchanging their labors on the circuit system. This year they purchased a house previously occupied by the Universalists on Vaughan Street. Rev. George Pickering was the active agent in securing the house of worship. The price paid was two thousand dollars. Pews were reserved to the value of five hundred dollars, so the Methodists paid fifteen hundred dollars. In the same year (1808) an act of incorporation as the First Methodist Episcopal Church was obtained of the Legislature.

In the year 1809, Rev. John Brodhead and Alfred Metcalf chiefly supplied the desk here.

In 1810, Rev. John Williamson and Asa Kent supplied the desk; the latter preached from December to June, and received as salary eighty-nine dollars and twenty-nine cents.

In 1811, Revs. John Brodhead and John Lindsey were appointed to New Market, Durham, and Portsmouth, Deacon Lindsey preaching most of the time in Portsmouth. Every Sabbath a collection was taken, and the amount entered on the book of records. For lighting the house they used candles, and this item amounted to fourteen dollars and fifty-six cents.

In 1812 and 1813, Rev. John Rexford was pastor, and reported sixty members.

In 1814 and 1815, Rev. Thomas W. Tucker was preacher, and received one hundred and twenty-nine dollars and twenty-two cents, including board.

In 1816, Rev. Josiah Chamberlain was pastor, and reported seventy-one members.

In 1817 and 1818, Rev. Daniel Filmore was preacher in charge, and had a universal reformation, and as the house became too small, permission was obtained to use Jefferson Hall for the prayer-meetings, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. A plea was made to Conference for Mr. Filmore's return for the third year, and by a little bending of the rules he was returned; but this was thought to be an error, as there was some unhappy divisions between older members of the church. This year (1818) the Sabbath-school was formed under his labors.

In July, 1820, Josiah Searritt was appointed to Portsmouth.

In 1821 and 1822, Enoch Mudge was stationed here.

In 1823 and 1824, Ephraim Wiley was stationed here.

In 1825, Jacob Sanborn was stationed here.

In 1826 and 1827, Shipley W. Wilson was stationed here, and during his labors here the present house of worship (on State Street) was built, at a cost, including land, of about nine thousand dollars. The vestry is in the upper part of the house over the entry. The new church was dedicated Jan. 1, 1828, by Rev. Wilbur Fisk; his text was Hag. ii. 9: "The glory of the latter house shall be greater than the former." The old house was disposed of in 1829.

In 1828 and 1829, Rev. John Newland Moffit was stationed here, and did good service in collecting money to reduce the debt on the church. On June 10, 1829, the New England Conference met in Portsmouth, and the New Hampshire Conference was formed.

In 1830, Stephen Lovell was preacher.

In 1831, George Storrs was preacher in charge.

In 1832, Holmes Cushman was preacher in charge.

In 1833, Reuben H. Deming was preacher in charge.

In 1834, Elezer Smith was preacher in charge.

July 29, 1835, the New Hampshire Conference for the second time convened in this city, Bishop Emery presiding. Schuyler Chamberlain was appointed to this charge, and assured the people he should stay two years, and he did.

In 1837, Jared Perkins was appointed as pastor.

This year (1837) the vestry in the upper part of the house was vacated, and one fitted up in the basement of the church, which was occupied for twenty-two years.

In 1838, James G. Smith was pastor.

In 1839 and 1840, Daniel T. Robinson was pastor.

In 1841, Samuel Kelley was pastor.

In 1842, Samuel Kelley was reappointed.

In 1843, Jacob Stevens was appointed pastor.

In 1844, the New Hampshire Conference for the third time held its session here, commencing July 10th, Bishop Hamlin presiding.

In 1844 and 1845, Elisha Adams was stationed here.

In 1846 and 1847, Rev. Daniel M. Rogers was stationed here.

In 1848, Rev. James Thurston was stationed here.

In 1849 and 1850, Rev. Samuel Kelley was stationed here.

In 1851 and 1852, Rev. Richard S. Rust was stationed here, and the vestry in the basement was improved by the outlay of four hundred dollars.

In 1853 and 1854, Rev. Justin Spaulding was pastor, and the church was thoroughly repaired.

In 1855 and 1856, Rev. Sullivan Holman was appointed pastor, and under his labors a debt of twenty-three hundred dollars on the church was paid off.

In 1857 and 1858, Rev. Jonathan Hall was stationed here.

May 4, 1859, the New Hampshire Conference for the fourth time was entertained by this church, Bishop Ames presiding.

In 1859 and 1860, Rev. D. P. Leavitt was stationed here. Under his labors a new vestry, costing about fifteen hundred dollars (exclusive of land), was built on Daniel Street. The building committee were John Trundy, John H. Bailey, and William F. Loughton.

In 1861 and 1862, Rev. Richard W. Humphries was stationed here.

In 1863 and 1864, Rev. Sullivan Holman was stationed here.

In 1865 and 1866, Rev. James Pike was stationed here.

In 1867, Rev. Silas G. Kellog was stationed here.

In 1868 and 1869, Rev. H. L. Kelsey was stationed here, and under his administration the church was thoroughly remodeled inside, and improved somewhat on the outside.

In 1870-72, the Rev. Cadford M. Dinsmore was stationed here.

In 1873 and 1874, Rev. Anthony C. Hardy was stationed here.

In 1875, Rev. Nelson M. Bailey was stationed here.

In 1876 and 1877, Rev. James Noyes was stationed here.

In 1878-80, Rev. Charles B. Pitblado was stationed here, and in the last half of his third year asked to be released from labor, that he might visit his friends and the home of his boyhood in Scotland, which was granted, and Rev. Watson W. Smith was employed to supply the remainder of the year. He also was returned to us for the year 1881.

This year (1882) Rev. Joseph E. Robins is stationed here, and our present membership is about one hundred and fifty. The Sunday-school numbers about one hundred and fifty; John E. Leavitt, superintendent.

The trustees for 1882 are William C. Newton, John H. Broughton, Robert B. Adams, James Janvrin, Thomas Reese, John F. Leavitt, A. Milton Gardner, Silas Philbrick, and Daniel McIntire.

The board of stewards are William C. Newton, Daniel C. McIntire, Alfred M. Lang, William Batchelder, George Mallett, Henry D. Marston, John N. Willey, A. Milton Gardner, and Chandler M. Hayford; Thomas Reese, L.D.; Meshac Bell, L.P.

The Free-Will Baptist Church<sup>1</sup> was organized in 1823 by Rev. David Marks, one of the leading men in the denomination in those days. Pastors, Revs. Ezekiel True, J. B. Davis, Isaac G. Davis, William P. Merrill, Arthur Caverns. In the year 1846 the church disbanded. The present church was organized Feb. 17, 1851. Pastors, Revs. John Pinkham, 1851; A. R. Bradbury, 1851-53; the next two years the pulpit was supplied by Rev. S. P. Fernald; 1855-56, Rev. P. Chesley; 1856-57, Rev. Lowell Parker; 1858-59, Rev. Francis Reed; 1859-63, Rev. C. E. Haskell; 1863-66, Rev. L. L. Harmon; 1866-77, Rev. E. Owen; 1878-79, Rev. J. Herbert Yeoman, June 29, 1880, to the present time.

The meeting-house was built on Pearl Street in 1858, and was thoroughly repaired during the pastorate of Mr. Harmon. Number of members, one hundred and thirty-six; Sunday-school scholars, one hundred. Officers: Rev. J. Herbert Yeoman, pastor; Moses Plummer, clerk; Eben Brackett, treasurer; William F. Ham, Eben Brackett, deacons. Moses Plummer, superintendent of Sunday-school; Martin Richmond, assistant superintendent; Willard Young, librarian.

The legal business is transacted by a society distinct from the church organization, which is purely religious. J. Wesley Wilson is president of the society, Martin Richmond is vice president, and Joseph Moore is clerk.

The Middle Street Baptist Society<sup>1</sup> was established in 1826, eight individuals meeting in "the old Assembly House" on Vaughan Street and constituting themselves into a Calvin Baptist Church. The society afterwards worshipped in what is now the Unitarian chapel, on Court Street, and in 1828 built and occupied their present brick edifice, on the corner of Middle and State Streets, when they assumed the above name. Rev. Duncan Dunbar, who was active in the formation of the church, supplied the pulpit for a while. The pastors have been as follows: 1827, Rev. Baron Stow; 1836, Rev. John G. Naylor; 1839, Rev. Freeman G. Brown; 1843, Rev. Silas Hsley; 1848, Rev. William Lamson, D.D.; 1860, Rev. Edwin B. Eddy; 1864, Rev. Henry F. Lane; 1868, Rev. William H. Alden, D.D., the present pastor.

The Christian Church<sup>2</sup> was organized Jan. 1, 1803, by Elder Elias Smith. How many united in the church organization the church record does not say, but evidently it was very small, for the record says, "That so great was the desire of Elder Smith to see such a church, that he thought a labor of twenty years would be a pleasure, if in the end he might see twenty united and walking according to the New Testament." This was seen very soon, "for in March they numbered twenty-two, and obtained leave to hold their meetings in the court-house, and the first Sunday in April, 1803, they held their first communion. The interest continued and baptisms were frequent, not only on the Sabbath but on week-days, and in about one year the little company of twenty-two had increased to about one hundred and fifty. The membership of the church was not confined to Ports-month, but members were received from Newington Hampton, Hampton Falls in New Hampshire, Kittery in Maine, and as far as Haverhill and Bradford in Massachusetts.

In 1807 and 1808 there was the greatest revival ever known in Portsmouth, and large numbers were added to the church. On the 1st of September, 1808, Elder Smith commenced the publication of The Herald of Gospel Liberty. This was the first religious newspaper ever published in this country if not in the world, and is still the organ of the Christian denomination, and is published at Dayton, Ohio. The records are rather imperfect up to 1826. In that year Elder Moses How took the pastorate of the church, their place of worship then being the old temple on Chestnut Street. During the summer of 1834 Elder How baptized sixty-nine persons.

January, 1837, Elder Abner Jones took charge of the church as pastor, Elder How having received and accepted a call from the Second Christian Church at New Bedford, Mass. Elder Jones did not continue as pastor long, for in 1838 we find an account of baptism by Elder David Millard.

In 1839 the brick meeting-house on Pleasant Street was purchased, at which time a division took place and a second church organized.

Elder Millard's ministry was successful, and many were added to the church. The record says nothing of his resignation, but November, 1840, it speaks of Rev. E. N. Harris as pastor. Two years after he resigned. Rev. George W. Kilton was his successor, who remained three years, and was followed by Rev. A. M. Averill, who continued with him for years, preaching his farewell sermon Oct. 27, 1850. Rev. Thomas Holmes, D.D., was then called to the pastorate, which position he held until Oct. 1, 1853, when he resigned to accept the professorship of the Greek language in Antioch College, at Yellow Spring, Ohio. The church then engaged the services of Rev. Charles Bryant for six months; the remainder of the year the pulpit was supplied by Revs. O. P. Tuckerman and A. G. Comings. In 1855 Rev. B. S. Fenton settled as pastor of the church. The church and society vacated the Pleasant Street meeting-house Oct. 26, 1826, and for a while held services in a chapel on Hanover Street. Oct. 4, 1857, Rev. Thomas Holmes, D.D., was again called to the pastorate of the church. Previous to this time Elder Austin Damon, of New York, had supplied the pulpit. Brother Holmes resigned in 1860, and Elder Moses How was again invited to the pastorate. He remained about one year, when Rev. I. F. Waterhouse, of Providence, R. I., was called. Brother Waterhouse remained five years, during which time the present place of worship was purchased.

Rev. C. P. Smith was called to the pastorate early in 1868, which position he occupied until July, 1872. Oct. 1, 1872, Rev. John A. Goss, of Lynn, Mass., was called to the pastorate, and still holds that position (September 20th). The history of this church is deeply interesting. Like most churches it has seen its times of declension as well as its times of prosperity. From 1826 to the present time (Sept. 20, 1882) nine hundred and sixty persons have been connected with it as members. Its membership is now about one hundred and eighty.

Our platform is briefly this: Our name, Christian; our creed, the Bible; our test of Christian and church fellowship, Christian character; the growing issue, loving sympathy for all who love the Lord Jesus.

The Immaculate Conception (Roman Catholic) Church was erected in 1873 at a cost of fifty thousand dollars, corner Clatham and Sumner Streets, Rev. Eugene M. O'Callaghan, pastor.

The Second Advent Church was organized Jan. 4, 1859. The chapel was dedicated June 20, 1859. The church at present has no pastor, the desk being supplied by evangelists. The present officers are Joseph W. White, clerk; Samuel W. Hoyt, treasurer, and Joseph W. White, William Israel, and Samuel W. Hoyt, board of managers.

The North Parish.—The pastors of the North Parish since Mr. Moody have been Buckminster, Putnam, Moore, Gage, Adams, Martin, Hubbell, and the present incumbent, Rev. Mr. McGinley.

Unitarian Church.—Dr. Peabody was pastor from 1833 to 1860. Rev. James De Normandie became pastor of the church in 1862, and has officiated to the present time, a period of over twenty years.

Universalist Church.—The pastors from Rev. Richards to the present time have been Rev. Hosea Ballou, S. Streeter, Edward Turner, Thomas F. King, Moses Ballou, George W. Montgomery, M. Ballou (second pastorate here), S. S. Fletcher, W. A. P. Dillingham, Lemuel Willis, A. J. Patterson, Ambler, Bicknell, Van Ciot, Heberli, Grant, and Haskins.

Banks.—The first banking institution in Portsmouth was the New Hampshire Bank, organized in 1792, with a capital of $160,000. Oliver Peabody was president, and D. R. Rogers cashier. It continued about fifty years.

The second bank was the New Hampshire Union, organized in 1802, with a capital of two hundred thousand dollars.

The Portsmouth Bank was organized in 1803, with Thomas Sheafe, president, and Andrew Halliburton, cashier.

THE ROCKINGHAM NATIONAL BANK is a successor of the Rockingham Bank, which was organized Jan. 3, 1814. It was reorganized as a national bank April 17, 1865. Capital, $200,000. Cashiers: Jacob S. Pickering, Jan. 3, 1814 to 1849; John J. Pickering, September, 1849, to January, 1870; William Tuckerman, January, 1870, to January, 1871; John P. Hart, January, 1871, to present time. Presidents, John Haven, 1814 to 1845; J. M. Tredick, 1845 to 1873; John J. Pickering, 1873 to present time. Present Directors, John J. Pickering, George W. Haven, T. Salter Tredick, J. S. H. Frink, Francis E. Langdon, William A. Peirce. Capital, $200,000; surplus, $40,000.

THE NATIONAL MECHANICS' AND TRADERS' BANK is a successor of the Commercial Bank, which was chartered in July, 1825, with a capital of $150,000. Isaac Walton, president; George Meleher, Jr., cashier; succeeded by Richard Jenness, president; James T. Shores, cashier. This bank was succeeded by the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, chartered 1844. Capital, $150,000. Richard Jenness, president; James T. Shores, cashier. This was succeeded by the National Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, organized May, 1864. Capital, $300,000. George L. Treadwell, president; James T. Shores, cashier. Mr. Shores died in 1871, and was succeeded by G. W. Butler, cashier. G. L. Treadwell resigned in February, 1876, succeeded by John Sise. G. W. Butler resigned in April, 1881; succeeded by John Lighton, who resigned in March, 1882, when James P. Bartlett was elected cashier. The present location has been occupied for a bank nearly sixty years, and some of the present stockholders are the descendants of the original incorporators. The present officers are John Sise, president; J. P. Bartlett, cashier; W. P. Benedict, teller; Directors, John Sise, William H. Rollins, Charles H. Mendum, John S. Pray, and Joseph W. Peirce.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE NATIONAL BANK is a successor of the Bank of New Hampshire, incorporated in 1855. The present bank was incorporated in 1865. Peter Jenness was president from 1855 to 1866, when he was succeeded by Mr. J. P. Bartlett, who remained until 1882, when he resigned, to become cashier of the "Mechanics' and Traders' National Bank, and was succeeded by E. A. Peterson, the present incumbent. J. P. Bartlett was cashier from 1855 to 1866, and L. S. Butler from 1866 to the present time. The present directors are Frank Philbrick, H. F. Wendell, True M. Ball, Daniel Marcy, E. A. Peterson, Thomas A. Harris, Washington Freeman. Capital, $150,000.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK is a successor of the Piscataqua Bank, the Piscataqua Exchange Bank, and the first First National Bank. It was organized first as a national bank in 1863, and was the first national bank organized in the United States under the National Banking Act. Its charter having expired by limitation, it was rechartered in 1882.

Hon. W. H. Y. Hackett was president of the Piscataqua Bank, also of the Exchange Bank and of the National Bank, until his decease, Aug. 9, 1878. He was succeeded by ex-Governor Ichabod Goodwin, who remained president until his death, in 1882, when he was succeeded by E. P. Kimball, the present president.

The rectors of the Episcopal Church since Rev. Dr. Burroughs have been Revs. Hitchcock, Armitage, Davies, Bingham, Clark, and Holbrook.

The present church edifice was erected at a cost of one hundred thousand dollars, and is probably the finest ecclesiastical structure in New Hampshire. It was the gift of Mr. George Marsh.

Samuel Lord was cashier of the Piscataqua, Piscataqua Exchange, and the National Bank until his death, when he was succeeded by Mr. E. P. Kimball, who remained as cashier until the death of Governor Goodwin, when he was chosen president, and R. C. Peirce acting cashier. Directors, W. L. Dwight, John Stavers, W. H. Hackett, E. P. Kimball, and E. H. Winchester. Capital, $300,000.

PORTSMOUTH SAVINGS-BANK.—May 26, 1818, some of the most prominent citizens of the town met and organized an "Institution for the Deposit and Investment of Monies," and applied for a charter, which, however, the Legislature declined to grant. But in 1823 the charter of the "Portsmouth Savings-Bank" was obtained, and this bank is therefore among the oldest of such institutions in the United States.

The bank was first kept in a chamber of the building now occupied by it, and open for deposits and withdrawals only on Wednesdays, from three to five P.M. It was first opened Aug. 20, 1823, and on that day nine deposits were made, ranging from $5 to $240, and amounting in all to $626. One of these accounts has never been closed, and is still on the books of the bank. Another deposit of $20, made Dec. 17, 1823, has been undisturbed from that time, and now amounts by mere accumulation of interest to $618.08. The present amount of deposits is $2,916,242.70, belonging to 8084 depositors. The bank has also a guarantee fund of about $80,000.

The following is a list of the presidents and treasurers of the bank:

Presidents, Nathaniel A. Haven, 1823-31; Henry Ladd, 1831-39; James Rundlett, 1839-40; Robert Rice, 1840-44; William M. Shackford, 1844-69; William Simes, 1869-80; William H. Rollins, 1880.

Treasurers, Samuel Lord, 1823-69; James F. Shores, Jr., 1869-77; Joseph H. Foster, 1877.

The present trustees are Lyman D. Spalding, Samuel Adams, J. S. Pray, J. W. Emery, W. W. Cotton, Joseph H. Thacher, Charles H. Mendum, John Knowlton, John Sise, Benjamin F. Webster, Thomas E. Call, Charles H. Rollins, Daniel Marcy, John Loughton, Marcellus Bullford, Charles M. Loughton, Henry M. Clark, W. Freeman.

THE PORTSMOUTH TRUST AND GUARANTEE COMPANY, a savings-bank, incorporated in 1871, with a perpetual charter.

The presidents have been George L. Treadwell, Ezra H. Winchester, and Jeremiah F. Hall.

The present officers are: President, Jeremiah F. Hall; Vice-President, Frank Jones; Directors, Jeremiah F. Hall, Frank Jones, Ezra H. Winchester, Daniel Marcy, John Sise, Thomas H. Odion, Edwin A. Peterson, William D. Fernald, Calvin Page, and Samuel J. Gerrish; Treasurer, Charles H. Rollins.

Charles H. Rollins was treasurer until December, 1876, when he was succeeded by G. L. Treadwell, who officiated until April, 1879, when Mr. Rollins was re-appointed, and has held the office to the present time.

THE PISCATAQUA SAVINGS-BANK was incorporated in 1877 with the following incorporators: I. Goodwin, W. H. Y. Hackett, E. D. Kimball, W. L. Dwight, John H. Broughton, Robert C. Peirce, Augustus Lord, J. Albert Walker, J. H. Hutchinson, A. P. Howard, J. W. F. Hobbs, E. C. Spinney, and E. B. Philbrick.

The first president was W. H. Y. Hackett, who was succeeded by Governor Ichabod Goodwin.

Mr. R. C. Peirce has been secretary and treasurer from the beginning.

Trustees, William L. Dwight, J. H. Hutchinson, E. C. Spinney (Kittery, Me.), E. P. Kimball, J. Albert Walker, Robert C. Peirce, J. W. F. Hobbs (North Hampton), E. B. Philbrick (Rye), John H. Broughton, A. F. Howard, and H. A. Yeaton.

The New Hampshire Gazette.—This is the oldest continuously published newspaper in the United States. The first number appeared Oct. 7, 1756, and the imprint reads, "Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Printed by Daniel Fowle, where this paper may be had at one dollar per annum, or an equivalent in Bills of Credit, computing a dollar this year at Four Pounds old Tenor."

Daniel Fowle, who was the first printer in New Hampshire, was born at Charlestown, Mass., and began business near the head of King (now State) Street, in Boston, in 1749. In 1754 he was arrested by order of the House of Representatives, on suspicion of having printed a pamphlet entitled "The Monster of Monsters; by Tom Thumb, Esq.," which contained severe animadversions on some of the members. He was cast into jail, but subsequently suffered to depart without trial. Unable to obtain satisfaction for the illegal imprisonment, and disgusted with the provincial government of Massachusetts, Fowle accepted an invitation from several prominent gentlemen of this State to remove to Portsmouth, and the result was the issue of his first number of the New Hampshire Gazette on the date above mentioned.

This number, of which a fac-simile was produced at the centennial anniversary of the introduction of the art of printing into New Hampshire, celebrated in Portsmouth, Oct. 6, 1856, was seventeen by ten inches, and was published in this size until the beginning of the year 1757, when it was enlarged, and in July of that year, and occasionally after, was doubled in size in its issue. In 1797 it was permanently enlarged. But little is known of the location of the office. The paper did not give that information. The first issues were from an office in an old wooden building at the corner of Pleasant, Washington, and Howard Streets, removed a few years since, to be succeeded by the brick dwelling-house recently built on the site by Mr. John E. Coleord. In 1767 we find it published by Daniel and Robert Fowle, "near State House, in the Street leading to the Ferry," now Market Street, and perhaps this was the first removal from the Pleasant Street location, which was until then near the centre of business of the town. An ancient deed of land at corner of Pleasant and Richmond Streets would lead us to infer that Fowle had this site as late as 1772 for his office. In any event the office has been frequently removed, having been in Congress Street, on the site of the present Franklin building, on Daniel Street, and on Pleasant Street opposite to the locality where for the past twenty-one years it has been published. But the fact remains certain that if the office of publication changed, the weekly appearance of the paper has never ceased for more than a century and a quarter of its existence.

Fowle published the Gazette, either alone or with his partner, until 1785, when he sold the paper to two of his apprentices, John Melcher and George Terry Osborne. Fowle died in 1787. The publication up to 1785 was as follows: By Daniel Fowle, from 1756 to 1764, when Robert Fowle became interested in the paper, and continued until 1773. Benjamin Dearborn was publisher in 1776, but two years after, Mr. Fowle resumed the publication, and was succeeded by Melcher & Osborn, in 1785. Mr. Osborn shortly after retired, but Mr. Melcher continued until 1802, when he sold to Nathaniel S. and Washington Peirce, who changed the politics of the Gazette from Federal to Republican. Mr. Melcher was the first State printer,—an office continued to the publishers of the Gazette down to 1814. N. S. and W. Peirce, in connection with Benjamin Hill and Samuel Gardner, published the paper for little more than seven years, when it was sold to William Weeks, who came to Portsmouth from Rutland, Me., and conducted the paper up to 1813. He was followed by Gideon Beck and David C. Foster, whose firm of Beck & Foster was dissolved by the death of Mr. Foster in 1823. From this time to 1834, Mr. Beck was the publisher. Then Albert Greenleaf was admitted as partner, and in 1838 Mr. Beck retired. After this Thomas B. Lighton, formerly a prominent politician of Portsmouth, but who afterwards spent his declining years at Appledore, Isles of Shoals, was for a year or more interested with Abner Greenleaf, Jr., as the imprint informs us, and subsequently from late in 1839, and Mr. Greenleaf alone conducted the paper down to 1841. Then Samuel W. Mores, a practical printer, with Joel C. Virgin acting as editor, and George Greenleaf published the paper until 1844, when Abner Greenleaf (Sr.) is named as editor. Then appears "A. Greenleaf & Son." For the succeeding two years the paper was owned and managed by certain prominent Democrats, who gave no sign of editorship or proprietorship. In 1847, William Pickering Hill, a son of ex-Governor Isaac Hill, came from Concord, where he had been interested in the Patriot, and purchased the Gazette, and also an opposition Democratic paper called the Republican Union, and the Gazette was then enlarged. He also started a daily Gazette, but his efforts were not successful, and he retired after a loss of no little amount of money during his management. Mr. Hill was succeeded by Gideon H. Rundlett, who was an able and fearless writer, and as far as a political paper was desired he supplied the need. He was followed by Edward N. Fuller, formerly of Manchester, who took the paper in 1852, and remained until 1858, when he removed to Newark, N. J. He attempted to publish a daily Gazette, which was a reputable paper, but the enterprise was not appreciated, and it was given up. In 1858, Mr. Fuller was succeeded by Amos S. Alexander, Esq., a lawyer from the interior of the State, who held an office under the administration, but was not always in the line of service acceptable to the party managers. He gave way to Samuel Gray, a native of Portsmouth, and a practical printer, in February, 1859. In September, 1861, Mr. Gray sold out to Frank W. Miller, who had started with others the Daily Chronicle in 1852, and the Gazette establishment became united with the Chronicle office. The New Hampshire Gazette was then removed from the office in Daniel Street opposite the old Custom-House to its present location in Exchange Building in Pleasant Street, and its time-honored name appeared at the head of the weekly paper published at the Chronicle office. Many of its former subscribers continued to take the paper, which now became transformed from a political organ to a newspaper, and its circulation began to increase.

In 1868, Mr. George W. Marston became a partner with Mr. Miller, and the paper was published by Frank W. Miller & Co. Mr. Miller sold his interest in October, 1870, to Mr. Washington Freeman, who has ever since owned one-half of the paper. Mr. Marston disposed of his interest in June, 1877, to William H. Hackett, who, with Mr. Freeman, published the paper under the name of the "Chronicle and Gazette Publishing Company." In June, 1882, Mr. Hackett disposed of his interest to Mr. Charles W. Gardner, a practical printer of Portsmouth. During the proprietorship of Mr. F. W. Miller and his successors there have been in the editorial chair Messrs. Tobias Ham Miller, Mr. Jacob H. Thompson (now connected with the editorial department of the New York Times), and the present editor, Mr. Israel P. Miller. After Mr. Marston purchased an interest in the paper it advocated the principles of the Republican party, but it has of late aimed to excel in serving its readers with general and local news rather than with abstract dissertation upon political topics. During the lifetime of the Gazette about thirty newspapers have come and gone in Portsmouth, the last to cease publication being Miller's Weekly, a temperance journal, which stopped soon after the decease of its founder and owner, the late Frank W. Miller.

The Daily Chronicle, which was started by Messrs. F. W. Miller, Thomas M. Miller, and Samuel Gray in 1852, under the firm of Miller & Gray, has been in turn owned by this firm, F. W. Miller & Co., Marston & Freeman, and by the "Chronicle and Gazette Publishing Company." Since its establishment the local news of Portsmouth has been carefully produced by the papers, perhaps in better shape than in any place of its size in the country, a feature which is appreciated by the many natives of the "City by the Sea," who go to live beyond its borders, and yet cherish a desire for news from home. The next oldest paper in Portsmouth is the Portsmouth Journal, which succeeded the Oracle, established in 1793. It has borne its present name for over sixty years.

The Portsmouth Journal.—The original title of the Journal was The Oracle of the Day. It was established by Charles Peirce June 3, 1793, and published semi-weekly until January, 1798, when it was enlarged and became a weekly, the editor giving as a reason for the change that the public demand was for "one very large paper per week in the room of two." The "very large" paper measured twelve by nineteen inches. The Oracle started and was conducted in the interest of the Federal Republican party. Jan. 4, 1800, on the week that the paper was in deep mourning for the death of Washington, its name was changed to The United States Oracle of the Day. Mr. Peirce sold out July 4, 1801, to William Treadwell & Co., on account of "the impaired state of his health" and "the excessive fatigue attendant in the publication of a newspaper." In October of that year the name of the paper became United States Oracle and Portsmouth Advertiser. The publishing firm became William & Daniel Treadwell Dec. 11, 1802. The name Portsmouth Oracle was adopted Oct. 22, 1803, and Daniel Treadwell left the firm just two years afterwards. Charles Turell became the publisher Sept. 25, 1813.

In January, 1821, the paper was purchased by Nathaniel A. Haven, Jr., who changed its name to The Portsmouth Journal of Literature and Politics. The name and the plain style of the heading have never since been changed. Charles Turell published it until Feb. 7, 1824, when the publication was assumed by Harrison Gray & Co., Mr. Turell continuing to print it. It was made a six-column paper in January, 1823. Nov. 20, 1724, the publishers were H. Gray and E. L. Childs, the latter of whom died at Washington, D. C., about two years ago.

Mr. Haven conducted the Journal four years. He was a gentleman of the best literary ability and attainments, and gave to the paper a high standing in the community.

Miller & Brewster purchased the Journal July 2, 1825, and thereafter edited and published it at No. 3 Ladd Street, where it continued to be published until January, 1870, when the office was removed to its present location.

Oct. 20, 1827, the Journal absorbed the Rockingham Gazette, published at Exeter by Francis Grant; and June 1, 1823, it also included the State Herald, a Portsmouth paper, these names appearing at the head of the paper until Aug. 13, 1836. T. H. Miller retired from the firm April 26, 1834. The paper was enlarged in June, 1838, again in January, 1853, and again to its present size Feb. 29, 1868.

The present proprietor, Lewis W. Brewster, became connected with the publication of the paper in January, 1856, in the firm of Charles W. Brewster & Son. The senior partner died Aug. 4, 1868, and in January, 1869, the publication began and has continued as at present.

The Daily Portsmouth Journal, which we have mentioned above, was started for a week's trial June 4, 1834, but was not a success apparently. It was a little sheet of four pages, the page measuring eight by ten and a half inches.

"The States and Union."—The first number of the States and Union new-paper was issued on Jan. 2, 1863, by Mr. Joshua L. Foster, because (as he announced in his salutatory) of "the indispensable necessity of a sound and thoroughly Democratic journal in this section of the State," the Democracy of Rockingham County having been deprived of an organ by the death of the New Hampshire Gazette, which took place in 1862, having been printed for over one hundred years. The old Gazette presses and material were purchased for the new enterprise, and the paper was issued from the office which had for many years been occupied by the Gazette, No. 31 Daniel Street. At the commencement of the second volume Mr. George W. Guppy's name appeared as publisher in connection with Mr. Foster. The paper was decidedly outspoken and fearless, and because of its views upon the conduct of the war it was mobbed on April 10, 1865, everything contained within the office—type, presses, material, and machinery of every description—being destroyed and thrown into the street. After this the type was set and press-work for the paper done for a few weeks in Manchester, until new material and presses could be procured and brought to Portsmouth, when work was resumed in the office, and the paper has been issued regularly ever since.

The Daily Evening Times.—On March 16, 1868, the Daily Evening Times began to be issued from the same establishment, with Joshua L. Foster as editor and proprietor, George W. Guppy as publisher, and William M. Thayer as local editor, and the paper has been regularly issued ever since. In May, 1870, Mr. Foster sold the establishment to Messrs. Thayer & Guppy, and their connection continued till November, 1873, when Mr. Guppy bought his partner's interest, and was sole editor and proprietor until Dec. 15, 1879, when he sold out to Mr. Alpheus A. Hanscom, who was formerly publisher of the Union Democrat, at Saco, Me., and for the fifteen years immediately previous to his purchase of Mr. Guppy was one of the proprietors and editors of the Union Democrat and Manchester Daily Union, at Manchester, N. H.

ter, secretary; FEDERAL FIRE SOCIETY, organized 1789; HIGH SCHOOL ASSOCIATION; LANGDON PARK ASSOCIATION; NEW HAMPSHIRE MECHANIC ASSOCIATION, organized Oct. 2, 1802; PORTSMOUTH ATHLETIC, incorporated June, 1817. This institution is owned in a hundred shares of $100 each, the institution having the right of pre-emption at half the value of the shares. Thus by the sale of shares it has a regular income. It has a valuable library of 14,000 volumes, and a large number of newspapers and periodicals are also taken.

PORTSMOUTH BOARD OF TRADE; PORTSMOUTH FEMALE ASYLUM. This institution was founded in 1804 by a few ladies, and incorporated in 1808. For several years it was well sustained, and many orphans found a comfortable home, in which was laid the foundation of their after usefulness; but as new objects presented the interest in this association declined, and the asylum was discontinued. A small permanent fund remained and accumulated, the income of which, together with the annual subscription, has been devoted for the last ten or twelve years to the payment of teachers of sewing, at first in separate schools on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons, and since in connection with one of the public schools in each district. PORTSMOUTH HOME FOR INDIGENT WOMEN was established June, 1876, and chartered June, 1877; PORTSMOUTH HOWARD BENEVOLENT SOCIETY was instituted in 1829, and incorporated in 1854. The funds of the society are derived from the annual contributions of $1.00 from each member, and by private donations. Its object is to assist the unfortunate poor, chiefly in the winter. PORTSMOUTH MARINE SOCIETY, incorporated A.D. 1808; PORTSMOUTH MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION; PORTSMOUTH MUSICAL ASSOCIATION; PORTSMOUTH SOCIETY FOR THE P. O. C. T. CHILDREN; PORTSMOUTH YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION; RIVERSIDE BAND, poor children's sewing mission, established January, 1878; ST. MARY'S CATHOLIC BENEVOLENT SOCIETY, founded January, 1875, by the pastor, Very Rev. Canon Walsh; THE CHASE HOME FOR CHILDREN, FORMERLY THE CHILDREN'S HOME; PUBLIC LIBRARY.

THE PORTSMOUTH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.—The Portsmouth Medical Association was organized April 23, 1874, with the following members: Jeremiah F. Hall, Nicholas Leavitt Folsom, Benjamin W. Curtis, Samuel C. Whittier, Daniel W. Jones, John W. Parsons. The first officers were as follows: President, J. F. Hall; Secretary, D. W. Jones; Treasurer, N. L. Folsom; Business Committee, S. C. Whittier, B. F. Curtis, and J. W. Parsons.

The following is a list of officers from its organization to the present time: Presidents, J. F. Hall, Benjamin W. Curtis, N. L. Folsom, and S. C. Whittier; Secretaries, D. W. Jones, and A. B. Sherburne; Treasurers, N. L. Folsom, A. B. Sherburne, and N. L. Folsom.

The following is a list of members who have united with the association since its organization: Brainerd Dearborn, Andrew B. Sherburne, Eli Q. Adams, John C. Stewart, Thomas A. Rogers, John W. Stimson, and John L. M. Willis.

HOMOEOPATHY.—The present homoeopathic physicians are Drs. F. L. Benedict, H. F. Clark, and R. C. Grant.

JOHN LANGDON, LL.D.

Tobias Langdon, of Keyser, in Cornwall, was commissioned as ensign by King James II, and sent to New York. When he came to Piscataqua we do not know precisely, but he was living very early where his son was born. Tradition has it that his remains repose in the sequestered district, a few hundred acres of which, on the southern side of the creek Sagamore, are still in the hands of his descendants. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Sherburne, who came over with Capt. John Mason in 1632. Capt. Tobias Langdon, their son, owned the garrison-house at the head of the creek, and is buried hard by. He married Mary Hubbard, of Salisbury, in Massachusetts. John, the youngest of their seven sons, married Mary, daughter of Kinsley Hall, of the Exeter combination. He has left the name of an honest yeoman; the bringing up of his two sons, Woodbury and John, was, however, taken from his hands by their ambitious mother.

John Langdon, the subject of this sketch, was born in December, 1739, and was in due time sent to the school of the celebrated Maj. Samuel Hale. His memory was truly uncommon, for we have heard him spout Pope's Homer to children with great spirit when past seventy. Turning from his paternal acres to the counting-house of John Moffat, Esq., a merchant in Portsmouth, he so won his confidence that Mr. Moffat in his later years intrusted to him the conduct of his affairs. He then went to sea in vessels of his own building. Having joined the popular party, he helped to seize, in December, 1774, the English military stores in a fort of the Piscataqua, of which the powder was used at the battle of Bunker Hill. In 1775 he was sent delegate to the Continental Congress, and again in 1776. But his name was not affixed to the Declaration of Independence, owing partly to his being sent home again to act as agent of the secret committee for building vessels of war. The "Ranger," in which John Paul Jones started on his dashing career, was built and fitted out by him. As an officer of volunteers he found time to go to the campaign of Saratoga; and after offering his whole fortune to promote the cause, he personally aided Gen. Stark to gain the victory at Bennington.

In the dark days that succeeded the Revolution Mr. Langdon was always in some office. He was twice chosen president of his native State, and delegate to the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, and to the State Convention which accepted it. He was then chosen senator of the United States. The first Congress met in New York in 1789. Senator Langdon was chosen president of the Senate for the occasion, and there being neither President nor Vice-President installed, he thus became the first acting President of the United States, and as such informed Gen. Washington of his election. Mr. Langdon married Miss Elizabeth Sherburne. They had an only daughter, who became the wife of Thomas Elwyn, Esq., of Canterbury, England. After leaving Congress he was chosen Governor of the State five times. Late in life he became a member of the old North Church. He lived for many years in the house built by himself and still standing on Pleasant Street, and died there September the 20th, 1819.<sup>1</sup>

HON. ICHABOD GOODWIN.<sup>2</sup>

Ichabod Goodwin, eldest son of Samuel Goodwin and Nancy Thompson Gerrish, was born in that part of Berwick which is now North Berwick, in the State of Maine. He is descended on both father's and mother's sides from families of very great colonial importance. The great-grandfather of Mr. Goodwin, Capt. Ichabod Goodwin, is said by the writer of the genealogy of the Berwick Goodwins, in the Historical Magazine, to have been the most remarkable man who ever lived in that town. He distinguished himself at the battle of Ticonderoga, and we learn from the London Magazine that he was especially mentioned in Maj.-Gen. Abercrombie's report to Mr. Secretary Pitt.

On his father's side his ancestors figured conspicuously in the wars before the Revolution, and up to the period of the Revolution were of the families upon whom devolved the magisterial work and honor of the times. On his mother's side he is likewise descended from families which for a century, and up to the time of the Revolution, performed a large share of the duties of public office, and some of the most conspicuous names in the colonial history of Maine and New Hampshire are to be counted among his maternal ancestors.

To mention the names of Champernoun, Waldron, and Elliot, none more familiar to those informed upon colonial history, is but to recall the persons from whom, on the maternal side, he is lineally descended, or with whom his maternal ancestors were closely allied by ties of family connection. The ante-Revolutionary importance of the people from whom he comes is well illustrated by the fact that the name of his maternal grandfather, Joseph Gerrish, stands first on the triennial catalogue of Harvard College in the list of graduates of the year 1752, a class which numbered a Quincy among its graduating members. The significance of this fact, as bearing upon the status of his mother's family at that time, is that the names of the members of the classes of that day are published in the triennial catalogue of Harvard in the order of the social importance of the families to which the members respectively belonged.

At the time of Mr. Goodwin's birth, which was just before the beginning of the present century, the state of things which the Revolution had brought about had had ample time to crystallize. Whether it was through the great changes that under the new order of things had taken place in the political, social, and commercial affairs of the country, or whether from those inherent causes under the operation of which families conspicuous and influential in one period drop out of notice and are lost to the eye of the historian, the annalist, and perhaps even of the town chronicler, Mr. Goodwin's family, at the time of his birth, were simply plain farming people, highly respected within the limits of the little country town in which they lived, but no longer among the noted or influential or wealthy people of Maine. The country had by the close of the last century taken a considerable stride onward in prosperity as well as in numerical growth, and the bustle and hum of industry pouring itself into new channels of prosperity had passed by many of the families which in the earlier era had been the foremost in developing the resources of the country, in leading the yeomanry in war, in presiding over the tribunals, and sitting in council as civil magistrates.

Mr. Goodwin's academic education consisted of several years of study at the academy at South Berwick, an institution having at that time a good deal of local importance, and then as now the only school in the vicinity of his birthplace where a fitting for college can be obtained. Shortly after leaving that academy he entered the counting-house of Samuel Lord, Esq., then a very prominent merchant and ship-owner of Portsmouth, N. H., and he became a member of Mr. Lord's family. He here displayed qualities which had been quite conspicuous in his earlier boyhood,—those of energy and assiduity and a very marked capacity for affairs. These qualities, which at the early age of twelve had made him quite a competent and satisfactory manager of the farm of his widowed step-grandmother, who was the grandmother of Mr. Lord, showed later in his conduct as a clerk in the commercial business of the then very thriving shipping port of Portsmouth. Mr. Lord, finding that Mr. Goodwin's business abilities were more comprehensive than the mere duties of a clerk required, placed him as a supercargo in charge of the business of what was then the largest ship owned in the port, the "Elizabeth Wilson." In the present days of railroads, sea-going steamers, oceanic cables, and the commercial complement of these foreign correspondents or agents, it may seem a trivial sign of a young man's capacities to name the fact of his being made the business manager of a ship, especially as ships then went in regard to size; but it is the introduction of these very modern appliances for conducting business which has rendered the responsibility of the delegated management of this species of property comparatively easy. In the days of Mr. Goodwin's early voyaging the whole discretion as to the conduct of the ship's affairs was vested in the supercargo, except in the brief period of her being in the home port, when the owner resumed his authority and control. In foreign places, among strangers, beyond the reach of opportunity for consultation with his owner, the young man must rely upon himself, must decide upon what voyage his ship shall go, and must be ready to account to his principal upon his return for the results of a prosperous enterprise or a disastrous adventure. It was not long before Mr. Goodwin had learned enough of seamanship to enable him to add to the duties of the supercargo the further business of navigating his ship, so that for several years he was both shipmaster and business manager, offices, then as now, rarely combined in one person; for the shipmaster is to-day chiefly the navigator and head seaman of his ship, while the business, involving the chartering and the rest, is attended to by a merchant in the port of destination, who is in ready communication with the owner, both by the fast-going mail of the steamship and the quicker method of the ocean cable. Mr. Goodwin's sea life lasted for about twelve years. During that time he had been so far successful as to become a part owner, and to be enabled to begin business at home. In the year 1832 he established himself as a merchant at Portsmouth. Portsmouth has been his home ever since that time, and there he for many years conducted an extensive mercantile business, his chief business interests lying in the direction of the foreign carrying trade.

Upon retiring from the sea he soon manifested a large public spirit and interest, and became in a short time foremost in the affairs of the day which were of public concern. He was one of the early projectors of the railroad interests of New England, and until within a few years he has taken a large part in all the enterprises of public import in the vicinity of his home, including, besides railroads, the enterprises of manufacturing and banking, and he has been vested always with a large share of the local trusts, both public and private, which devolve upon the public-spirited and trusted citizen. He has of late years been inclined to withdraw from these responsibilities, but of those which he still retains, the presidency of the "Howard Benevolent Society," a position he has held for over thirty years, and the presidency of the "Portsmouth Bridge Company" may be mentioned. He has, however, within the last two years assumed the presidency of the "First National Bank" of Portsmouth, in which he is largely interested as a stockholder, and in which institution he has been a director from its incorporation as a State bank. He was for many years, and at different periods, a director in the "Eastern Railroad Company," and was the first president of the "Eastern Railroad in New Hampshire," which position he held for twenty-five years. He was also of the first board of direction of the "Portland, Saco and Portsmouth Railroad Company," and was the president of that corporation from the year 1847 to the year 1871. But it is unnecessary to mention all the public trusts of a corporate nature which have been confided to his care. His chief claim to public esteem, and that which will secure to him its most enduring recognition, is derived from his services as the first "war Governor" of New Hampshire.

Upon Mr. Goodwin's settling as a business man in Portsmouth, he did not confine his energies to his private business and to corporate enterprises, but soon acquired a large interest and influence as a member of the Whig party. He served in the Legislatures of New Hampshire, as a member of that party, in the years 1838, 1843, 1844, 1850, 1854, and 1856. He was also a delegate at large from that State to the conventions at which Clay, Taylor, and Scott were nominated by the Whigs for the Presidency, and was a vice-president at the two first-named conventions, and he has twice served in the Constitutional Conventions of New Hampshire. He was the candidate of the Whigs for Congress at several elections before the State was divided into Congressional districts. New Hampshire was in those days one of the most powerful strongholds of the Democratic party in the country, and a Whig nomination for any office determined by the suffrages of the whole State was merely a tribute of esteem by that party to one of its most honored members. Upon the establishment of Congressional districts, Mr. Goodwin received a unanimous nomination of the Whig party for Congress at the first convention held in his district. This nomination bid fair to be followed by an election, but the circumstances of his private business prevented his acceptance of the candidatureship. In the great political convulsions which preceded the war of the Rebellion the power of the Democratic party in New Hampshire began to decline, while the ties which through years of almost steady defeat in the State at large had been sufficient to hold together the Whig party now came to be loosened, and out of the decadence of the former and the extinction of the latter party there was built up the Republican party, which gained the supremacy in that State, and which has ever since, with a brief exception, maintained that supremacy. Mr. Goodwin, while in full sympathy with the cause of the Union, which he believed the politicians of the South were striving to dismember, yet felt that perhaps the impending crisis could be arrested through the means of the old political organizations, and he remained steadfast to the organization of the Whig party until he saw that its usefulness, both as a State and as a national party, was gone. He was the last candidate of the Whigs for the office of Governor of New Hampshire, and received in the whole State the meagre amount of about two thousand votes. This lesson did not require to be repeated. He immediately did all in his power to aid in the establishment of the Republican party in that State, for although the old-time issues between the Democrats and the Whigs had gone by and new questions had arisen, involving the very integrity of the nation, he did not regard the Democratic party as one capable of solving or disposed to solve those questions in a patriotic and statesmanlike way. He was chosen the Governor of New Hampshire, as the Republican candidate, in the year 1859, and was re-elected by the same party in the following year, his second term of office having expired June 5, 1861.

The military spirit of the people of New Hampshire had become dormant and the militia system of the State had fallen pretty much to decay long before the first election of Mr. Goodwin to the office of Governor. A slight revival of that spirit, perhaps, is marked by the organization in his honor, in January, 1860, of "The Governor's Horse-Guards," a regiment of cavalry in brilliant uniform, designed to do escort duty to the Governor, as well as by a field-muster of several voluntary organizations of troops, which went into camp at Nashua in the same year. But when the call of President Lincoln for troops was made, in the spring of 1861, the very foundation of a military system required to be established. The nucleus itself required to be formed. The Legislature was not in session, and would not convene, except under a special call, until the following June. There were no funds in the treasury which could be devoted to the expense of the organization and equipment of troops, as all the available funds were needed to meet the ordinary State expenditures. The great confidence of the people of New Hampshire in the wisdom and integrity of Mr. Goodwin found in this emergency full expression. Without requiring time to convene the Legislature, so as to obtain the security of the State for the loan, the banking institutions and the citizens of the State tendered him the sum of $680,000 for the purpose of enabling him to raise and equip for the field New Hampshire's quota of troops. This offer he gladly accepted, and averting delay in the proceedings by refraining from convening the Legislature, he, upon his own responsibility, proceeded to organize and equip troops for the field, and in less than two months he had dispatched to the army, near Washington, two well-equipped and well-officered regiments. Of this sum of $680,000 only about $100,000 was expended. On the assembling of the Legislature that body unanimously passed the "Enabling Act," under which all his proceedings as Governor were ratified, and the State made to assume the responsibility.

During the period of this gubernatorial service there was a reconstruction of the bench of the highest judicial tribunal of the State, and during that time nearly every position upon that court was filled by his appointment. It is sufficient to say that the exalted rank which that tribunal has ever held among the courts of last resort of the States of the nation suffered no diminution from his appointments to its bench, such was the good sense and discernment of Mr. Goodwin in making the different selections, although himself not versed in the law.

In Waite's "History of New Hampshire in the Rebellion" we find the following estimate of Mr. Goodwin as a public man and as a citizen and business man: "His administration of State affairs met with universal approval, and he left the office (that of Governor) with the respect of all parties. As a member of the Legislature and of the Constitutional Convention, he took a leading part on committees and in debate. His speeches were never made for show. He spoke only when there seemed to be occasion for it, and then always to the point, and was listened to with great respect and attention, for his conservatism and practical wisdom in all matters of public policy were well known. In all public positions he has discharged his duties with fidelity, industry, and marked ability. As a citizen and business man he is public-spirited, liberal, high-minded, and enjoys the unbounded confidence and respect of all."

Mr. Goodwin has always been noted for his kindness to young men, aiding them without stint, both with his purse and his advice, in their business difficulties, and he has ever been ready to extend to all his townsmen who needed aid the assistance of his influence, his counsel, and his pecuniary means.

In 1827, Mr. Goodwin<sup>1</sup> married Miss Sarah Parker Rice, a daughter of Mr. William Rice, a wealthy and prosperous merchant of Portsmouth. Of seven children, one son and two daughters survive.

JOHN LANGDON ELWYN.

John Langdon Elwyn, eldest son of Thomas and Eliza Langdon Elwyn, was born at Clifton, near Bristol, England, Feb. 1, 1801. He was graduated at Harvard College in 1819, and was admitted to the bar after having studied law under the Hon. Jeremiah Mason. He began the practice of his profession in Boston, but soon renounced it and returned to his ancestral acres to devote himself to farming pursuits and the study of the languages and literature of many nations. "No one could converse with him a few minutes without being satisfied that 'he was a scholar, and a ripe and good one.' He was a true lover of 'reverend antiquity,' and he knew better than any one else the history of the Piscataqua and its families. It was amazing to hear him talk of persons six and seven generations distant. He seemed to have had actual personal acquaintance with them, so thoroughly was he informed of their actions and motives, owing to long familiarity with the identical scenes through which they passed two hundred years before. As he himself says of his grandfather's memory, so his own 'was truly uncommon.' His attachment to the home of his maternal ancestors and his fondness for its local history did not prevent his having large acquaintance with that of the discovery and colonization of America. Of the history of England and of the genealogies of its noble families his knowledge was extensive and accurate. It was impossible to hear him discourse on any subject without receiving some information or some hint that was new and useful. He knew something of everything and everything of something. His noble gravity, his dignity, and his venerable appearance will not soon be forgotten."

Mr. Elwyn died in the house built by his great-uncle, and now forming a part of the Rockingham House, in Portsmouth, on Jan. 30, 1876.

WILLIAM SIMES.

William Simes, the honored subject of this sketch, dates his ancestry in this country to John Simes, who came to Portsmouth from England in about the year 1736. He died, leaving six children, one son and five daughters. The son, Joseph, was a prominent citizen, and was chairman of the Board of Selectmen in 1776. He had ten children, six sons and four daughters. The sons were as follows: John, Thomas, Mark, William, George, and Joseph.

William Simes, the subject of this sketch, was the eighth child of George Simes and Nancy Hardy, and was born in Portsmouth, N. H., April 9, 1806. Early in life he manifested an unusual degree of business activity, and after serving an apprenticeship in Portsmouth and Boston, in 1827 he went to Pernambuco, South America, where he was in business about one year. On his return to America, in October, 1828, he commenced the grocery business in his native town at No. 1 Market Square. His enterprise and straightforward dealing soon placed him in the front rank of the leading business men of Portsmouth, an honor justly deserved. This was in a day when a very large country trade came to the city, and the wholesale department of his business was a leading feature. As an illustration of his activity and alertness, it is related of him that when in business on Market Square, the farmers from the neighboring towns, however early in their arrival on summer mornings, would find Mr. Simes ready to take their produce in exchange for his goods, and before the majority of his townsmen had breakfasted he had often done a no small amount of business.

He continued this business, occupying the same store, until 1860, over thirty years, when he disposed of his interest to Messrs. Moulton & Blaisdell, and purchased a farm in the neighboring town of Greenland, where for a short time he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. He returned to Portsmouth in 1867.

He was elected mayor in 1861, and again in 1862, declining positively a nomination for a third term. He presided over the affairs of the city during that trying period, the breaking out of the Rebellion, and assisted with the same energy that had marked his business career in raising the quota of troops to send to the defense of his imperiled country. Never was a man more conscientious and faithful in the discharge of a public trust. He attended all appointed meetings of the Board of Mayor and Aldermen when in town, frequently sending to remote parts of the city to secure a quorum for the transaction of important business.

Politically he was originally a Whig, and later a Republican. He was not, however, a partisan, and in his administration of city affairs was guided solely by the principle that the city should be served by the best men.

He was chosen one of the corporators of the old Portsmouth Savings-Bank in 1850, a trustee in 1855, and in 1869 was elected its president. He devoted himself with rare diligence to the interests of this institution, and every depositor felt that his money was as carefully used and as safely kept as though he handled it himself. During the savings-bank panic of 1878 many large sums of money were left on deposit, not because the depositors felt great security in the savings-bank system, but because Mr. Simes assured them personally that the bank was sound. They did not doubt his word, knowing full well that nothing would tempt him to misrepresent the true state of affairs. He was also a director in the Rockingham National Bank, and president and treasurer of the Faith Home. Like his father, and in fact nearly all his ancestry for three generations, he was an active member of the Universalist Church, and at the time of his death was warden and treasurer of the parish, and a deacon and treasurer of the church.

It may be truly said that William Simes was loved and honored by his native city. In the various positions which he was called upon to fill, whether of a business, trust, or political character, he was always noted for his unswerving integrity and un-deviating honesty. Firm in his convictions of right and wrong, he never entertained a thought of compromising his well-defined principles in any relation whatever. He was one of the most courteous and pleasant of men, and was in all respects an estimable gentleman and good citizen. He was the open hand in every time of calamity and need, the ready giver to those private charities which enlist so deeply the sympathies of true men. He gave cheerfully, as though it was God's treasure which he was permitted to disburse. He belonged to no order or association; his home and his church were his sufficient rest. A long life, growing steadily upward from deep roots of religious principle, genial and kind in its outward expression, and without a stain of doubt or dishonor, leaves to the world its precious memory, while it seeks the wider and higher services and fulfillments of the life eternal, which even here was more real to him than mortal sight.

He died May 15, 1880, from the effects of a fall received the day previous.

Oct. 2, 1831, Mr. Simes married Olive Bourn Loughton, eldest daughter of Capt. James Loughton, of Portsmouth. She died June 9, 1871. Their family consisted of six children, three daughters and three sons. The daughters and James T. are deceased, the sole survivors of the family being Joseph S. and William, who are merchants and importers of tea in the city of Boston.

JOSHUA WINSLOW PEIRCE.

The late Col. Joshua Winslow Peirce was born in Portsmouth, N. H., on the 14th of May, 1791, and died in the same town on the 10th of April, 1874.

Col. Peirce would have been a man of mark in any community, from his strong and manly character, his sterling integrity, and his intellectual superiority. Of striking appearance, of polished and dignified manners, he realized one's ideal of the gentleman of the old school, and of a type more frequently found in England than in our own country. He was descended from a family which for more than two hundred years had occupied an eminent position; whose successive representatives had been men of high intelligence, of unblemished character, and of large possessions. Endowed with a vigorous constitution both in mind and body; encompassed from his childhood with every favoring influence; brought by the position and connections of his family into relations of familiar association with the best people of his day; trained in the well-known academy of Exeter, and afterward in the counting-house of an eminent and successful merchant; receiving the advantage, then far more rare than now, of an extended sojourn and travel in Europe,—it is but simple truth to say that he made good use of his many opportunities, and from the outset of his career to its close occupied and maintained a position second to none in the community in which he lived. His manhood fulfilled the promise of his youth. He lived and died respected and honored by all, and greatly beloved by those who knew him best.

No one who knew Col. Peirce could fail to be impressed by his strong and vigorous character. It showed itself in all he did and said. There was thoroughness and indomitable energy in all his undertakings, coupled with habits of strict method and a great love of order. He was well read in the current literature of the day; always deeply interested in the progress of the arts and the discoveries of science; having a great liking for, and unusual skill in, mechanical pursuits. His clearness of mental vision gave strength to all his convictions; his opinions were not hastily formed, but were tenaciously held, and, when occasion required, fearlessly expressed, whether upon social or political or religious subjects. If his prejudices were sometimes strong, they were not invincible, for he was open to argument, and candid in weighing the reasoning of his opponents. His independence of nature made him superior to the love of popularity and to the pursuit of it, and kept him through life from accepting public place or official position. He was impatient of all that was vulgar and pretentious and merely for show; intolerant of shuffling, prevarication, and meanness. His dislike of ostentation led him to veil, beneath a somewhat cold exterior, a generosity of character and a tenderness of feeling which were among his most striking traits, and which will be borne witness to by all who were admitted into the intimacy of his friendship. He was a sincere Christian, one of the firmest of friends, one of the most thoroughly honest and upright of men.

The first of the ancestors of Col. Peirce, of whom we find mention as settled in this country, is Daniel Peirce, of Watertown, afterward of Newbury, Mass. He had two sons,—Daniel, who died in Newbury in 1704, and Joshua, who died in Woodbridge, N. J., in 1670. From the "Rambles about Portsmouth," by the late Charles W. Brewster, Esq., to whom every citizen of that old town is under deep obligations for the preservation of interesting facts of its local history, and from an appreciative sketch of Col. Peirce in the Boston Daily Advertiser, we learn that Daniel Peirce, the first of the name, with his son Joshua, purchased in the year 1666 a tract of land in New Jersey, covering a large part of Perth Amboy. Hither he removed for a time, but afterward returned to his home in Newbury, where he died in 1677. His son Joshua established himself in Woodbridge, N. J. He married Dorothy, daughter of Major Robert Pike, of Salisbury, Mass., who, after his death, became the wife of John Knight, of Newbury. Joshua Peirce died, as has been said, in New Jersey in 1670, seven years before his father. He left behind him one child, Sarah, and subsequently to his death, in the year 1670, was born his posthumous son, Joshua. This Joshua, in or about the year 1700, after ineffectual attempts to recover the estate of his father in New Jersey, settled in Portsmouth, N. H. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Hall, of Greenland, N. H. From this family of Halls were descended the Marches, of Greenland, and Governor John Langdon, of Portsmouth. By inheritance from Joseph Hall came to the Peirce family a considerable part of the noble farm in Greenland, still retained in their possession, and long the home of Col. Peirce. "The original Hall house," says Mr. Brewster, "was on the preises of Col. Peirce, near the spot where the sharp-roofed cottage now stands."

Joshua Peirce established himself in Portsmouth as a merchant, on the corner of Market Square and High Street. He was largely concerned in navigation, was a ship-owner, and left a good estate. He was a man of untiring industry, and "in the course of his life held the several offices of town clerk, parish clerk, proprietors of the Portsmouth commons' clerk, selectman, representative, and for many years before his death was a member of His Majesty's Council, and also recorder of deeds for the province; all which offices he held with credit to himself and gave general satisfaction." "Most of these records are extant, and, together with many private records, especially those of births, marriages, and deaths in Portsmouth, which he kept for his own use, are valuable memorials of the times. After a life of strict integrity and varied usefulness, he died in 1743, having been the father of four sons and five daughters."

Daniel, the third son of Joshua Peirce, was born in Portsmouth in May, 1709, and was graduated from Harvard College in 1728. He married, in 1743, Anna, daughter of John Rindge, merchant, of Portsmouth, and a man of large estate, as appears from the list of 1727, where his name stands third in the number of those who paid the highest taxes, that of Joshua Peirce being the second. Daniel Peirce studied law, but never entered upon its practice. He succeeded his father as recorder of deeds for the province, holding this office until his death, and was also for several years a member of the king's council for New Hampshire. He is described as having been "a man of very great natural parts, as well as acquired abilities; he had likewise a great mechanical inclination, and worked very ingeniously with his own hands." He was proverbial for his strict integrity, and died Dec. 5, 1773, leaving behind him three children, a fourth having died before him.

John, the second son of Daniel Peirce, received his mercantile education in the counting-house of Daniel Rindge, then one of the prominent merchants of Portsmouth, where he was a fellow-clerk with John Langdon, afterward Governor of New Hampshire. At an early age he was intrusted with the charge of the business affairs of his uncle, Mark Hunking Wentworth, Esq., son of Lieutenant-Governor John W., and brother of Governor Benning W. This he retained until the war of the Revolution. He was also charged with the important interests of the Masonian proprietors. He was the principal agent in constructing the Piscataqua bridge in 1794; was one of the originators of the Portsmouth aqueduct in 1797, and was loan officer under the Presidency of the elder Adams. He established an insurance office in Portsmouth, and conducted its affairs for many years preceding his death.

"Always open, honorable, and correct in his conduct, and liberal in his charities, he enjoyed the respect and confidence of men of all parties." He married Mary, daughter of Peter Pearse, merchant, a native of Solecombe, near Lydemouth, Devonshire, England, who came to this country at the age of fourteen. The wife of Mr. Pearse was the daughter of the Hon. Jotham Odiorne, who died, a member of His Majesty's Council, in 1761, and who in 1720 married a daughter of Robert Cutt, of Kittery. Mr. John Peirce was the father of six children, four sons and two daughters, and died on the 14th of June, 1814.

Joshua Winslow, the third son of John Peirce, was born on the 14th of May, 1791. He passed his childhood under the paternal roof until 1803, when he was entered at the Phillips Academy, in Exeter, where he remained until December, 1807, taking a deep interest and bearing an active part during his pupillage in a military company made up of the students of the academy. On his removal from Exeter he was placed in the counting-house of the Hon. James Sheafe, representative and senator in the Federal Congress from New Hampshire. Here he was soon promoted to the charge of the books, and to the oversight of the shipping, in which Mr. Sheafe was an owner, thus acquiring a thorough familiarity with the details of maritime and mercantile pursuits.

While yet with Mr. Sheafe he became a member of "the Gilman Blues," a military company, at that time of considerable distinction, under the command of Joshua Haven. He received his commission as captain from Governor John Taylor Gilman in 1833; was promoted to be major of the First Regiment of State militia in 1816; lieutenant-colonel in 1819, and colonel in 1820. He resigned his commission in 1823. In 1818 he was elected into "the Federal Fire Society" of Portsmouth, and at the time of his death was its senior member. In 1816 he made a voyage to the Mediterranean as supercargo for Mr. Sheafe, and was absent from home a year. Having disposed of the cargo he parted from the ship at Leghorn, and visited the principal countries and cities of Europe. Upon his return he continued his business and residence in Portsmouth to January, 1825, when he accepted an appointment as agent of the Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company, removing thither the next month and remaining till the destruction of the mill by fire in 1834. He devoted himself with his wonted energy and enthusiasm to his new pursuit, making many journeys of observation to distant places in order to study improvements in machinery and manufacture. After the burning of the mill, and while it was not yet decided whether it should be rebuilt, Col. Peirce returned to Portsmouth, and employed himself in improving the estate in Greenland. In December, 1836, he yielded to the solicitations of the company and returned to Salmon Falls, where he remained for nearly two years longer, during which time he superintended the erection of a new mill and the purchase of a large portion of its machinery. In August, 1838, he removed to the farm in Greenland, a considerable portion of which, as has been before mentioned, had come by inheritance from the Hall family nearly a century and a half before. This estate had been largely added to by the purchase of the Packer farm,<sup>1</sup> next adjoining it, by his father in 1809. Here Col. Peirce passed the next twenty-eight years of his life, and "here he was able to gratify his taste and indulge his passion for independent country life. Here he brought up his family, and dispensed those liberal and elegant hospitalities which made his house the cherished resort for a large circle of devoted friends. To see him at the head of his table, or in his drawing-room, always the chief object of interest and attraction, was to realize what is seldom witnessed in this country now, and rarely in former times except in Virginia in her colonial days. Those who have seen his large estate in Greenland and Newington, lying along the southerly shore of the Great Bay, with its broad acres of inexhaustible soil, in meadow, upland, and orchard, its quaint houses and spacious barns, its fruit and shade trees, its strong fences of wood and faced stone, its herds of pure blood stock,<sup>2</sup> its constant aspect of skillful husbandry, need not to be told that Col. Peirce was a model farmer."<sup>3</sup> In November, 1866, he removed to his town house in Portsmouth, and resided there until his death, April 10, 1874.

Col. Peirce through life was a devoted churchman. Early in the episcopate of Bishop Griswold he received confirmation from the hands of that venerable prelate, and for nearly fifty years was a devout and constant communicant at the altar. Previous to his residence in Salmon Falls the services of the Episcopal Church had been unknown in that village. He was largely instrumental in the erection of Christ Church, and when a clergyman could not be obtained regularly officiated himself as lay-reader. While living in Greenland, though at a distance of more than four miles from his parish church of St. John's, Portsmouth, his place in the house of God was rarely vacant. He was always ready to serve the church which he so ardently loved, at whatever sacrifice of personal convenience or expenditure of labor or money. He succeeded his brother, the late Mark W. Peirce, Esq., as treasurer of the trust funds of St. John's Church, and retained the office until the infirmities of age compelled him to relinquish it. He was many years a church warden, and a delegate to the diocesan conventions.

Thanks to his strong constitution and the perfect regularity and temperance of his life, Col. Peirce preserved until fourscore the vigor and almost the activity of youth. The last three years, however, were those of failing strength and increasing feebleness. During the more than two years of his close confinement he was attended with the most unrelenting affection, both by night and by day, by his devoted sons and daughters. No strange hands were allowed to minister to his necessities. Filial love watched over him to the last. His end was peace. He died firm in the faith of the church, with an humble trust in the mercy of his God through Jesus Christ our Lord. His remains were taken to St. John's Church, where he had so long worshipped, followed by his daughters, his surviving sister and brother, and a multitude of friends. They were borne thither by his sons, and after the performance of the solemn rites of the church were carried thence and laid in the family tomb in the churchyard by the same filial hands. There may they rest in peace until the day of the resurrection!

Col. Peirce was married on the 4th of May, 1823, to Emily, daughter of William Sheafe, Esq., of Portsmouth, and Anna Wentworth, his wife. Mrs. Peirce died March 9, 1871. They had twelve children, of whom six are now living, viz.: Sarah Coffin, married William M. Kennard, Sept. 14, 1877; Ann Wentworth; Joseph Wentworth, married Annie L. Sise, Oct. 28, 1879; Joseph Rindge, married Marcia Robinson, Oct. 26, 1859, and has children, Mark Wentworth, Emily Milnor, Anne Burroughs, Joseph Parish, and Elizabeth Wentworth; William Augustus, married Mrs. Susan M. Smith, July 16, 1878, and has child, Joshua Winslow; Robert Cutts, married Marianna Hackett, Nov. 14, 1877.

DAVID KIMBALL.

The venerable and honored subject of this sketch was born in Topsfield, Mass., Feb. 26, 1799. His childhood was passed in his native town, where he attended a common school. Subsequently he was a pupil at Dummer Academy, Byfield, where he endeavored to qualify himself for teaching school, in which honorable vocation he afterward engaged at Newbury, Mass. In 1822 he went to Portsmouth, N. H., entering the drug-store of William Norwood as a clerk. At the outset of his career, wishing earnestly to qualify himself for what he considered a very responsible business, he went to Boston to attend a course of lectures of the medical college in chemistry and materia medica. About two years later he purchased Mr. Norwood's interest in the apothecary business, and from that time until 1880 devoted himself assiduously to its duties, spending probably more hours in his store than any man living in the community has devoted to any one calling.

This is a rare instance of a successful business career of over half a century, and during this long period his life has been one of unblemished integrity and conscientious uprightness. He was ever honest in all transactions,—not because honesty was the best policy, but because of his sound principles, which he never for one moment compromised. He sought no means of obtaining wealth by any speculative or hasty methods, choosing rather to labor in his vocation with an untiring zeal and cheerful industry, hoping to deserve and maintain the confidence of the community in which he lived. His knowledge of his business, his rare and watchful interest in the young men who one after another began, grew up, and graduated from his store to situations in other cities, his public spirit, and his kindly traits need no mention among those who have long known him as a neighbor and friend. It may be stated that there may now be seen in one of the best pharmaceutical establishments in Boston four individuals who took their first lessons in the drug business in his store. Although now having practically retired from active business life, he still retains his office as treasurer of the gas company, which position he has held since the incorporation of the company, in 1851.

In politics Mr. Kimball is a conscientious Republican, always endeavoring to vote for those who will best promote the public good.

He was one of the first in Portsmouth to espouse the Anti-Slavery cause when such an avowal involved the possibility of loss of friends, and an almost certain loss of patronage in business. He has been a constant attendant on the services of the Congregational Church, and has been ever ready to promote its interests.

Mr. Kimball's family on the maternal side have been distinguished for longevity. Mr. Kimball remembers seeing his great-grandmother in the year 1805, then one hundred years old. The centennial birthday of his own mother was celebrated Oct. 2, 1879. On that occasion her children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren were present. About this time a photographic group of herself and three sons was taken, they having passed their threescore years and ten. She died December, 1879, retaining her faculties in a remarkable degree. She was a woman of rare good sense and sound judgment, ever forgetful of self in her earnestness to do for others. Her husband died in early life, leaving one only of a family of twelve brothers and sisters, the most of whom died of consumption.

David Kimball was married to Caroline R. Swett, of Newburyport, Nov. 4, 1828. Their family consisted of three daughters and one son. The daughters survive. Although now at the advanced age of over fourscore years, he retains in a remarkable degree the vigor and elasticity of youth.

FRANK JONES.

Frank Jones was born in Barrington, Strafford Co., N. H., on the 15th of September, 1832. He was the son of Thomas Jones, who had inherited from his father one of the best farms in that township. The family consisted of seven children,—six sons and one daughter. Frank was the fifth son. As the family grew up, with the characteristic independence of New Englanders, they went out into the world to earn their own living, and by integrity, industry, and frugality to amass that competence due to every honest man which enables him to live above the whips and scorn of time and circumstances. Among the pursuits of a New Hampshire farmer in those days was that of lumbering, and from his earliest recollection young Frank, when not engaged on the farm, was employed in the woods, where he grew up hale and hearty, sound in mind and body. In the fall of the year it was customary for lumbermen to make charcoal of all the superfluous timber lying around on the farm, as in that condition it found a much readier sale in the neighboring cities. This is doubtless the origin of a story concerning the New Hampshire charcoal burner and the poor boy who sold his first load in Portsmouth. The facts are these: Young Jones, in the absence of his father and elder brothers, always, even from a very early age, assumed control of affairs on the farm. The foreman, Caswell, had loaded up a four-tier wagon with charcoal to take to Portsmouth. Frank, who was then about fourteen years old, thought he would like to go there too. Accordingly, he took considerable interest in this particular load until it came to yoking up the three pair of steers which were to draw the load to Portsmouth. One pair of steers, being young, were very lively. These were Frank's favorites, and he would have them placed first in the team. To this the foreman objected, thinking they wanted the benefit of age and experience, and so proposed to put them behind. But no; Master Frank would have them in front or nowhere. It was no wheelbarrow load that had to go over those New Hampshire roads to the city, and he believed the young steers would have the best heart and get there soonest. He therefore insisted upon having the young steers placed first. Caswell, the foreman, rebelled, threw down the goad, and told young Frank to take the load himself, which he did, starting off on a moonlight night, traveling along as best he could, until at three o'clock in the morning he arrived at Wiggins', a wayside inn about a mile from Portsmouth, where he saw written up "accommodation for men, horses, and oxen." Here he halted, but could find no living soul around, so he tied up the team and composedly lay down to rest in a crib in the shed by the stable. At six o'clock Wiggins, the proprietor, rudely awoke the young adventurer, who, rubbing his eyes, perceived for the first time the sun rising like a golden globe out of the waters of Portsmouth harbor. The memory of that morning will never be effaced. Wiggins, after due inquiry, finding the boy to be farmer Jones' son Frank, of Barrington, sent the cavalcade on its road to Portsmouth rejoicing. Arriving at the city the first customer who cast eyes upon the four-tier wagon of charcoal was Sam Coburn, who kept the Rockingham House. He inquired as to quality and price, and finally bought the load at twelve and a half cents per bushel, subject to survey. Young Frank assisted at the survey, and also the storing of the load, and afterwards partook of a hearty meal at the Rockingham. On the site of Wiggins', where he first rested, stands his country residence, the pride of the county, known as "Gravelly Ridge," and where he took his first meal in the city is the house he has done so much to make a credit to that city.

Such was Frank Jones' first visit to the city of Portsmouth. It may be well imagined that the narrow limits of the farm amid the hills and woods of Strafford would not long retain such a venturesome and self-reliant spirit as was evinced by the boy. His elder brother was engaged in business in Portsmouth, having a considerable store on Market Street for stoves and hardware of every description. At the age of seventeen years, in spite of every inducement offered to him by his father to stay on the farm, Frank insisted on coming to Portsmouth to assist his brother. Those who recollect the methods adopted in New Hampshire during the first part of the present century by tradesmen to cultivate trade will admit that it was not the easy task it is to-day. Farmers would visit the cities very seldom; the roads offered no inducements for them to travel for pleasure. Inhabitants were sparsely scattered, farms were few and far between, and if business was to be done the goods had to be presented at the very doors, as it often took more than two or even three to make a bargain. The stoves, hardware, and tinware went around in caravans itinerantly, and it required a rare combination of daring, pluck, and acumen to make a success of such peripatetic stores. Young Jones was eminently successful, for in four years he had amassed sufficient capital to purchase a share in his brother's business, so at the age of twenty years we find him one of the merchant traders of Portsmouth. Shortly afterwards he purchased the entire business, which he continued alone, adding thereto, in 1857, the partnership in the Swindels brewery. In 1861 he sold out the hardware business to a younger brother and an employe in the establishment, devoting himself entirely to the brewing and malting business. At this time he lived in a two-story frame house near the brewery, content to devote his utmost energies to that he foresaw would ultimately become a great business, and his sagacity in this particular has been amply verified.

The brewing business, of which the immense establishment now owned by Mr. Jones is the outgrowth, was commenced by an Englishman named John Swindels in 1854. In 1858, Mr. Jones purchased an interest in this pioneer brewery, and soon after became sole proprietor, and has continued as such to the present time. The purchase of the old Swindels brewery ushered in an important era in the life of Mr. Jones and in the history of Portsmouth. He at once threw his whole energy into the development of this business, and the result may be briefly told. The small brewery of 1858 has expanded from year to year until at the present time it is one of the largest establishments of the kind in the land, covering an area of five acres, and has a capacity of one hundred and fifty thousand barrels of ale annually. In addition to the brewery proper Mr. Jones added a large malt-house in 1863, and a still larger one in 1879. This immense establishment is the most extensive of its kind in the United States, and is furnished with all the modern improvements known to the art. To carry on this large and rapidly-increasing business requires the services of about one hundred men, yet Mr. Jones has been from the first fully conversant with all the details of the business, including the stock purchases, sales, general management, and practical oversight of the work. Thoroughness has been the rule in every department, and the superior quality of the production, constantly maintained, has established its reputation as the best in the market.

In 1875 Mr. Jones became the leading member of a company which purchased the well-known South Boston brewery of Henry Souther & Co., under the firm-name of Jones, Johnson & Co., Hon. James W. Johnson, of Enfield, being a member of the firm. Subsequent changes have occurred, and this establishment is now known as the "Bay State Brewery," and is operated by Jones, Cook & Co., Mr. Jones remaining at the head. The production of this establishment is nearly equal, both in quantity and quality, to that of the Portsmouth brewery.

Mr. Jones always took the greatest interest in the affairs of his native State and his adopted city. In the year 1868 he was chosen mayor of Portsmouth, and was again re-elected the following year. His administration was marked by many progressive improvements consistent with proper economy and due consideration for the burdens imposed on the taxpayers. The salary of his office he refused to appropriate, devoting it like a good citizen to public purposes. His salary for the first year he gave to the city to hold in trust, the interest to be devoted annually to the purchase of books for the library of the High School. The second year's salary he placed in the hands of trustees on the condition that five thousand dollars more could be raised in five years, he would then add another thousand dollars for the purpose of establishing a public library to be presented to the city. He was also for two years the candidate of his party for State elector, and though failing of an election very nearly overcame the decided Republican majority in the district.

In 1875 Mr. Jones received the Democratic nomination for member of Congress, and defeated the Republican nominee by a plurality of three hundred and thirty-six, although at the previous election the Republicans had carried the district. He was re-nominated for the next Congress in 1877, when the Republicans made a powerful and determined effort to secure his defeat, selecting as their candidate one who had won distinction in military as well as civil life, and had been three times elected to the same office in past years; yet so great was Mr. Jones' popularity, and so well satisfied were his constituents with his services for the previous term, that his opponents were unable to compass his defeat, and he was returned by a plurality of forty votes over the formidable candidate who had been pitted against him. At the close of his second term in Congress, although strongly importuned to be again a candidate, he positively refused, the demands of his business being such that he could not longer neglect them.

In 1880, against his own emphatic protest, and with a unanimity never before equaled, he was made the candidate of his party for Governor, and although the defeat of the party was known to be inevitable, after the result of the Indiana election in October had turned the political current throughout the country in favor of the Republicans, he received not only a larger vote than had ever before been cast for a Democratic candidate, but larger than had ever before been received by the candidate of any party in a State election.

In Congress Mr. Jones was a true and faithful servant of the people, and was one of the most efficient committee-men in the House. Speaker Randall, in referring to Mr. Jones, says, "He was a faithful representative, an honor to himself and the country, bringing to the discharge of his duties a business knowledge that made him very valuable as a committee member."

Every movement looking to the welfare of his adopted city has received his earnest support. He has been president of the Dover and Portsmouth Railroad since its incorporation, the building of which was mainly due to his energy and persistency. He was a director in the Eastern Railroad, and is now a director in the Wolfboro' Railroad, of which he was one of the projectors. He was also a director in the Portsmouth Trust and Guarantee Company.

It will be perceived from the foregoing personal sketch that the Hon. Frank Jones, in all his successful business career, has never for one moment forgotten his duties to his fellow-men, nor the claims his native State and adopted city have upon him; he has done all in his power to promote the welfare and obtain the good will of all men, and most strenuously labored for the health, wealth, and prosperity of the good old city of Portsmouth and neighborhood.

An elegant structure of red brick and white marble, standing on State Street, in Portsmouth, the property of the Hon. Frank Jones, deserves some attention, being, as it is, associated with some of the most notable events and men celebrated in New Hampshire history.

It is on the site of the original Rockingham House, formerly the residence of the Hon. Woodbury Langdon, judge of the Supreme Court, and brother of Governor Langdon, born in 1739. He was also noted for his commercial success and his firm patriotism. When the first great fire in Portsmouth broke out in the year 1781, this house with many public buildings and several hundreds of other houses was consumed. It was rebuilt on the same spot in 1786, and in 1830 it was purchased by a joint-stock company, and converted into a house of public entertainment. In 1870 it was enlarged and remodeled by Mr. Jones, and is now one of the best appointed and most regal hotels in New England.

Very many of the leading people who visit New Hampshire make this house their summer home, while in winter under its hospitable roof is gathered a goodly company of strangers, officers of the navy and their families, and persons visiting Portsmouth for business or pleasure. The house is delightfully located, and commends itself to the summer tourist. The "Wentworth," another palatial hotel, located in New Castle, is also owned by Mr. Jones. (See history of New Castle.)

Sept. 15, 1861, Mr. Jones united in marriage with Martha Sophia Leavitt, the widow of his brother, Hiram Jones, who died in July, 1859, leaving one child, Emma I., now the wife of Col. Charles A. Sinclair.

Frank Jones' life has been one of steady and active devotion to business, and his success is the natural result of his ability to examine and readily comprehend any subject presented to him, power to decide promptly, and courage to act with vigor and persistency in accordance with his convictions.

Being of a social and genial nature, he has hosts of warm personal friends, and no man is held in higher esteem by the people at large, regardless of party or condition. No man has contributed more to advance the material prosperity and the general welfare of the city of Portsmouth than Hon. Frank Jones.

JOHN HORACE KENT.

John Kent, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was of English origin, and went to Durham, in Strafford County, from Cape Ann (probably Gloucester), and was the father of two children,—Nancy and John. He died while the latter was an infant.

John grew up, and married Temperance Laphis, daughter of Capt. Robert Laphis, of Durham, formerly of Great Island, now New Castle. Capt. Laphis was a ship-builder and owner, sending a number of vessels to sea on his own responsibility. Notwithstanding the fact that he was the father of ten children, not a representative of his name is in existence. He was of Irish or Scotch extraction.

Nancy married Maj. William Cutts, of Kittery, whose son William died at Exeter in 1880.

John Kent and Temperance Lapsch had five children,—Melittable, Temperance, Nancy, John, and Kinsman,—of whom only one is living at this day, Nancy. These children were all born at Rochester, Strafford Co., N. H. Nancy has buried two husbands,—the first, Nathaniel Hobbs, of North Berwick, Me. By him she had a son, Nathaniel, who is now judge of probate of York County, Me., with whom she makes her home at North Berwick. Her second husband was Dr. Daniel Hodsdon, of the same town. She is now eighty-four years of age and in most excellent health.

John, the grandfather of John Horace, moved from Rochester to South Berwick, Me., and thence to Somersworth, N. H. While making the passage from Portsmouth to South Berwick, in the year 1816, the packet was capsized in a squall near "Boiling Rock," and, though an expert swimmer, his heavy clothing was such a hindrance to his efforts that he was drowned, at the age of forty-five.

John Kent, his son, and brother to Nancy, and father of the present John Horace Kent, of whom we write, was born at Rochester in October, 1799. He attended the South Berwick Academy, and came to Portsmouth, and was clerk for Joseph Wiggin at the age of fifteen. He removed to Barnstead (then in Strafford County, but now in Belknap) in 1823, and engaged in business there in his own name. In 1827 he married Ruhamah Dearborn, of Portsmouth, the daughter of Asa and Ruhamah Choate Dearborn. Asa was born in Kensington, Rockingham Co., in August, 1771, and was the son of Jeremiah Dearborn, who was the son of Nathaniel Dearborn, who was the son of Samuel Dearborn, who was the son of Henry, whose father, Godfrey Dearborn, came from England.

The father of Ruhamah Choate came from Salisbury, Mass., and was a relative to Rufus Choate.

John Horace Kent was born in Barnstead, Oct. 10, 1828, and was an only child. He attended the district school, Pittsfield and Strafford Academies, and the high school at Portsmouth (John True Tasker, of Barnstead, being principal of the latter). On the 23d of September, 1843, his father died, and young Kent went to New Bedford, Mass., and attended the high school in that city, boarding with Rev. Moses Howe (who married his mother's sister), formerly of Portsmouth.

In 1845 he went to New York City, where he remained two years in a wholesale establishment. At the expiration of this time he went to Western Pennsylvania and engaged in the steam tannery business with his uncle, Daniel G. Dearborn. In 1849, when the "gold fever" broke out, he disposed of his interest in the business to his partner, and wended his way to California via the Isthmus of Panama, leaving New York on the steamer "Crescent City." Arriving at Panama, he with thousands of others were obliged to wait for transportation on the Pacific side. Intent upon doing something, he found a Boston printer named Esterbrook, whom he employed, and obtaining type at the Spanish newspaper office, established and started a paper called the Panama Star, a successful property for many years, and for aught we know to the present day. From here he took passage in the steamer "Senator," arriving at San Francisco in October, 1849, at the age of twenty-one years.

While a resident of California, Mr. Kent made several trips to the Atlantic States, on one of which, in December, 1852, he was married to Miss Adeline Penniman, youngest daughter of Bethuel and Sophia Penniman, of New Bedford, Mass., who returned to the "Golden State" with her husband.

Mr. Kent's maiden vote was cast in California in November, 1849, when the Constitution for the new State was submitted to the people for adoption or otherwise. The Constitution prohibited slavery, and his first ballot was cast for the code as submitted, this action being in thorough accord with the general sentiment of the '49ers," the immigration from the Northern, Western, and New England States predominating.

Mr. Kent was a member of the Society of California Pioneers, to which any person arriving in California prior to January, 1850, was eligible to membership. He was at one time a director of said society.

He was also a member of the first "Committee of Vigilance," organized in June, 1851, who executed John Jenkins, an ex-convict from Sydney, who was caught in a boat while trying to get away with a small safe he had obtained by burglary from a store on Long Wharf. He was caught about ten o'clock in the evening, June 10th, and immediately tried by the committee at its rooms. The evidence being conclusive, a verdict of guilty, and sentence of death pronounced. This was immediately announced to the multitude waiting outside, who heartily approved the finding, and at two o'clock in the morning Jenkins was hanged to a beam of the public building in Portsmouth Square, San Francisco. They made no secret that they had violated the law and were leagued together to violate it in the future, but sincerely avowing that they were faithful servants of the cause of justice, for whose sake they assumed very severe personal responsibilities. They soon found more work to do, and hung James Stuart, a professional murderer and robber, who confessed to a multitude of capital crimes, and who asked for a chew of tobacco as the noose was being placed around his neck.

Samuel Whittaker and Robert McKenzie, two desperadoes, were taken from jail and hanged by the committee on Sunday, Aug. 24, 1851. This was the last public act of this committee other than ordering many professional criminals from the State. It never formally disbanded, though ceasing to hold meetings until May, 1856, at the killing of James King, editor of the San Francisco Bulletin, by James P. Casey. Many of the old members were solicited to become leaders in a new organization, there being a demand for another vigilance committee. This was a swift organization, which in a few days took Casey and Charles Cora, a noted gambler, who murdered U. S. Marshal Richardson, from jail, tried, convicted, and executed them. They also executed two others, Hetherington and Grace. "Yankee" Sullivan committed suicide in the committee's rooms while awaiting their action. Mr. Kent, being coroner at this time, was not a member of this last committee, but, in his official capacity, held the inquests on the bodies of those above named. He says the committee made no dangerous use of their power.

In politics in California Mr. Kent belonged to the "Northern faction" of the Democratic party, known as the "Mudsills," and in hostility to the "Southern faction," known as the "Chivalry." At the head of the former was Hon. David C. Broderick, and of the latter Hon. William M. Given. Broderick was elected United States senator in 1856, and took sides with Stephen A. Douglas in the matter of "popular sovereignty," thereby making the slave party in California, who had long been his bitter opponent, stronger in their animosity and opposition, and also incurring the ill will of President Buchanan, who claimed that the laws of the United States carried slavery into the Territories, and that it could not be excluded after the Territory had been admitted to the Union as a State. Growing out of this, Broderick was twice challenged to a duel, first by D. W. Perley, and again by Judge David S. Terry, of the Supreme Court, and on meeting the latter met his death. The wound was mortal, and he lingered only a few days, saying on his death-bed, "They have killed me because I was opposed to the retention of slavery and a corrupt administration," referring to Buchanan's.

Mr. Kent was secretary of the Broderick wing of the Democratic City Committee of San Francisco.

We quote from the San Francisco News-Letter of Oct. 20, 1857, referring to Mr. Kent's retirement from the office of coroner: "Coroner Kent has fulfilled the duties of his office faithfully, conscientiously, and honestly, and it must be a source of consolation and sweet reflection for him in years to come to know that his fellow-citizens have said upon his retiring from office, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant!'"

After leaving the coroner's office, and prior to his return to the Atlantic States in 1860, Mr. Kent had been connected with the press of San Francisco, and went to British Columbia during the "Fraser River" mining excitement as special correspondent; and as the telegraph made rapid strides over the Southern Overland Mail Route, he accompanied the builders thereof as the correspondent of several San Francisco papers, interrupting the stages on the plains, and making up the news from the Atlantic papers, and sending the same to San Francisco by wire.

Mr. Kent returned from California to the Atlantic States permanently in 1860, making the journey home in a stage via the Overland Route, through Lower California, Arizona, Cherokee Nation, Texas, Arkansas, and Missouri, thence to New York by rail, his family—wife and one son, born in San Francisco—having returned by steamer via Panama. He left his oldest child, John Horace, Jr., a son born at New Bedford, in the grave at San Francisco.

In 1862, when the Southern army was making the raid on McClellan, with the cry of "On to Washington!" Mr. Kent was at Prince Edward's Island; and at that time the people of the provinces espoused vigorously the Southern cause, while Kent as resolutely stood up for the North, and while in a heated discussion resolved to return to the States and volunteer his services. On his arrival at Boston he enlisted in a Massachusetts regiment, and leaving his family in New Bedford, proceeded to the Department of North Carolina, and thence to the Army of the Potomac.

In the fall of 1863 he was mustered out of service, and appointed a special agent of the Provost-Marshal Department for the District of New Hampshire upon the establishment of that service of the government, remaining therein until its abolition.

After his service in the army Mr. Kent became a warm and active Republican, and after the close of the Provost-Marshal Department he was appointed to a clerkship in the navy-yard at Portsmouth. In 1867 he was elected city marshal of Portsmouth, and while serving in such capacity was appointed to a position in the "Secret Service of the Treasury Department," and in 1871 was again elected city marshal of Portsmouth.

In the fall of 1872 he was made special officer and claim agent of the Eastern Railroad, and in 1873 was appointed a special inspector of customs for the District of New Hampshire, under Collector Howard, and in the fall of 1874 the head of the Secret Service at Washington telegraphed Mr. Kent to meet him at Boston, and tendered him the position of chief of the New England Division (comprised of all the New England States) of that force, which was accepted, and Mr. Kent established his headquarters at Boston.

He was a member of the Portsmouth delegation in the New Hampshire Legislature in 1873 and 1874, representing his city in the House. Upon the election of Hon. P. C. Cheney as Governor of New Hampshire, he appointed Mr. Kent upon his personal staff with the rank of colonel, and in July, 1876, while on government business pertaining to the Secret Service at Bangor, he received a telegram that the Governor and Council had appointed him sheriff of Rockingham County for five years. The next Legislature changed the law, and the office of sheriff was made elective, and Col. Kent, for he may now be so classed, received the first nomination for sheriff of Rockingham County at the hands of his party, and was elected by a handsome majority. He can proudly point to a repetition of these honors in 1880. He is also a deputy United States marshal under Gen. Patterson, and does a large independent business in the way of investigating fraud and crime and bringing public and private offenders to justice.

Col. Kent is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and belongs to St. Andrew's Lodge, F. and A. M., Washington Chapter, Davenport Council, and De Witt Clinton Commandery Knights Templar. He is also a member of Osgood Lodge of I. O. of O. F., Sagamon Lodge, Knights of Honor, Washington Temperance Association, of which he has twice been chosen president. The above are all local institutions of Portsmouth. In addition to the above he is a member of Trimout Temple of Honor of Boston, New England Reformed Men's Association, and New Hampshire State Temperance Association, and he has served as president of the two last named.

Since joining the Republican party he has been an active politician, is a member of the Republican County Committee, and one of the Executive Committee of the Republican State Central Committee.

Col. Kent's first connection with the United States Secret Service brought him into prominence with the leading men of business and influence throughout the Union. His services were in constant demand in the principal cities of the country, and he soon came to have a very large circle of acquaintances throughout the United States. Possessing a social nature and having a large, open heart, he was gradually led into the habit of using intoxicating liquors to excess, and the "hotel life" that he was obliged to lead only served to increase the evil. His steps downward were rapid, and his many friends began to despair of a reform, though some of them never ceased their efforts in his behalf.

At last Col. Kent seemed himself to realize his condition in a measure, and readily consented to try the experiment of a sojourn at the Washingtonian Home in Boston, which has accomplished so much for so many victims of strong drink. This experiment, to the great joy of his friends, proved his salvation, and from that time until now, with a will and force of character which has been the admiration of all who know his history or have heard his story, he has resisted that appetite which was so nearly his ruin.

He soon after reorganized the Washingtonian Total Abstinence Society of Portsmouth, and became its president, and in the winter of 1872 inaugurated a series of temperance meetings. Here as well as elsewhere his labors were rewarded with marked success, and his eloquent recital of his own terrible experience and his pathetic appeals to the victims of intemperance in the many places where he has spoken upon this subject have had a marked effect in checking the evil.

His efforts may justly be credited with having inaugurated the great temperance reform movement that swept through this State.

Col. Kent has never abated his zeal in the cause of temperance, and never ceased to lend his purse and a helping hand to all whom he has found struggling against the demon that cursed the best years of his life. He was actively interested in the Portsmouth Temperance Reform Club during its period of usefulness, and was of great service to it; but in May, 1879, being unable to approve its course in the introduction of to him dubious methods of promoting temperance, in company with others he withdrew from the club, and his public work in this direction ceased. In his private life, however, both by his daily example and his friendly aid and advice, he is constantly reclaiming the fallen and starting them anew in the right path.

This sketch, so far as bearing upon the temperance life of Mr. Kent and the causes that led to its adoption, would be very incomplete without some allusion to the helpmeet of the subject. Mrs. Kent has shown the love and devotion of a true wife in its noblest conception, and it is not an easy task to credit her with the praise she deserves. With a trust in God and a never-erring trust and confidence in her husband, she bore up under the sorrow and affliction that must come hand in hand with the cup. Appeals of love seemed slighted, yet she swerved not a line in the happy duty of reclaiming her husband. And now in these after-years, though late, comes the sweet consolation and satisfaction, bringing with them the perfect joy and happiness she sought.

Mr. Kent has an only child, Horace Penniman Kent, who at present holds a position under the United States government at Boston, whose clear head and skillful abilities already developed bid fair to place him in prominent ranks wherever he may cast his lot.

Col. Kent is a brave, true, and honest man, of much intellectual force, great sagacity, energy, and persistency, exceptional fidelity to friends and principles, and of aims high and worthy in every respect, a true philanthropist, and generous to a fault. He has done much good service for his city, county, and State, and won victories which attest more than usual strength of character.

MARCELLUS ELDRIDGE.

Marcellus Eldredge, one of the successful business men and leading brewers of New England, was born in Chatham, Mass., Nov. 24, 1838. His boyhood was passed in his native town, sharing the advantages of the schools of those days. In 1852 he came to Portsmouth with his father, the late Heman Eldredge, who conducted a mercantile business in corn and flour, and entered the store as clerk.

In 1858 Mr. Fisher and Heman Eldredge formed a copartnership for the brewing of ale under the firm-name of M. Fisher & Co., and Marcellus Eldredge was given the position of clerk. His native energy here manifested itself in a remarkable degree. He took an active interest in the development of the enterprise, and a few years later found him the active manager of an industry the growth of which had been almost phenomenal. The firm of M. Fisher & Co. continued until 1870, when Fisher's interest was purchased, the firm then becoming H. Eldredge & Son, by whom the business was continued until 1875, when it was organized as a stock company, Marcellus Eldredge being chosen president and treasurer. Illustrative of the rapid growth of this business, it is stated that from a small brewing of twenty-eight barrels, the first made by M. Fisher & Co., it has increased from time to time until the present establishment has a capacity of three hundred barrels per day of ale and lager.

Mr. Eldredge, although manifesting a lively interest in his adopted city and the public welfare generally, has uniformly declined various overtures to official position, the only exception being in 1877, when he was chosen senator from this a Republican district. He is Democratic in politics, but enjoys the respect of all parties.

ALFRED WOODWARD HAVEN.

There is no prouder or more enduring personal record than the story of a self-reliant, manly, and successful career. It declares that the individual has not only understood his duty and mission, but fulfilled them. The following biography is highly suggestive of these facts.

Alfred Woodward Haven was born in Portsmouth, March 14, 1801, and is a worthy representative of one of the oldest and most honored families of this old commonwealth. He is a son of John Haven, and grandson of the Rev. Samuel Haven, D.D., both of whom were prominent and influential citizens.

Mr. Haven was educated for the legal profession, and in 1825 was admitted to the bar. He retired from the active practice of law in 1834, since which time he has been largely engaged in attending to real estate interests, both for himself and others.

He has ever manifested a lively interest in the welfare of his native city, and all measures tending to advance the material and religious interests have found in him an earnest supporter. He was an early advocate of the Concord and Portsmouth Railroad, and was president of that corporation from 1847 to 1857, and upon the reorganization of the road in 1859 he was again elected its president, and officiated in that capacity one year. He has also been a director in the Rockingham Bank. Although not an active politician, he has ever taken a deep interest in public affairs, and for four years was chosen by his fellow-citizens to represent the city in the Legislature. He was a member in 1864-65, 1867-68, and discharged his duties with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

Mr. Haven has been twice married,—first, May 11, 1827, to Louisa Sheafe, daughter of James Sheafe, Esq., by whom he had one child. Mrs. Haven died Jan. 31, 1828. Aug. 8, 1832, he united in marriage with Margaret Houston, daughter of John Houston, of Exeter, and their family has consisted of six children, four of whom survive.

CHARLES WARREN BREWSTER.

Charles Warren Brewster was born in Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 13, 1802, and died Aug. 4, 1868. He was the son of Samuel and Mary (Hann) Brewster, and a descendant of Elder William Brewster, of Pilgrim notoriety.

The following extracts from a biographical sketch prepared by Hon. William H. Y. Hackett for the second series of "Rambles about Portsmouth" comprehend the life and character of the subject of this sketch.

Having completed his school education, in his sixteenth year, on the 16th day of February, 1818, he began to learn the business of a printer in the office of the Portsmouth Oracle, then published by Charles Turell, and his connection with that paper continued from that day until his death,—a period of more than half a century. When the name of the paper was changed in 1823 to The Portsmouth Journal, it was edited by Mr. Nathaniel A. Haven, Jr., a gentleman of extraordinary literary taste and ability. During his apprenticeship Mr. Brewster wrote more frequently for other papers than for that with which he was connected. He took pains with his articles, regarding the exercise as a preparation for the position of an editor. He put most of Mr. Haven's editorial articles into type, and had an admiration for his style as a writer, and a veneration for his character as a man, traces of which were seen in his subsequent writings and life.

In July, 1825, Mr. Brewster and Tobias H. Miller assumed the joint proprietorship of the Portsmouth Journal. This connection was maintained for about ten years, when, in 1835, he became sole proprietor and editor. In 1853 he associated with him his son, Lewis W. Brewster, in these positions, who upon his father's death became sole proprietor.

Mr. Brewster married, May 13, 1828, Mary Gilman, daughter of Ward and Hannah Gilman. They had nine children. His wife and four of their children, Lewis W., Charles G., Mary G., and Helen A. G., survived him. At about the time of his marriage he became a member of the North (Congregational) Church, a position which he adorned through the remainder of his life.

To the Journal he gave his thoughts, his labors, and his talents. The forty-three volumes of that paper, commencing in 1825 and ending in 1868, are at once the record of his industry, the illustration of his taste, the photograph of his character, his real biography. During the whole of that period he was the principal writer, and every volume, every number, shows his taste as a printer, his ability as a writer, and his discriminating judgment in making selections. It has been well remarked that the success of an editor depends quite as much on what he keeps out of his columns as what he puts into them. It would be difficult to find a newspaper more free from everything offensive to good taste. He aimed to make, and he did make, his Journal a good and valued family paper. Although it was always decided in its political principles, yet it supported them in a manner so free from bitterness, and was in other respects so judiciously managed, that it went into many families in which there was no sympathy with its politics.

Although his paper was the organ in this part of the State of the party to which he belonged, and although he gave to his party a firm and uniform support, yet he found more satisfaction in getting up the miscellaneous than the political part of his paper. I have, says his biographer, called upon him more than once in the midst of an exciting political campaign, and found him absorbed in writing a "Ramble," or delighted with an ancient manuscript, or some scrap of history or biography.

Mr. Brewster did not regard his paper only or chiefly as a means of making an income, but he viewed it as an instrument through which he was to perform important social duties. He felt as much responsible for the influence that his Journal exerted upon the community as for his personal example in his family or upon his employés. And he used every available means to make his influence felt for good. He thought not only the tone of his paper should be pure, but he believed that a correct style in arranging the matter, and beauty in the printing, aided in improving the taste and elevating the morals of his readers. He not only made the duties, toils, and routine of life minister to the formation of his own high character, but he also made them the medium of a healthful and beneficent influence upon others.

The publication of a weekly newspaper for a half-century tends to form habits of regularity and routine. In him the tendency to regularity pre-existed; his occupation merely developed and established it. The idea that he could be away from his newspaper appeared not to have occurred to him. It would be safe to say that in forty-three years he was not absent from his office on Friday at the making up of his paper more than a dozen times. He allowed himself no relaxation. He did not seem to desire any. He found his pleasure in his toil, his relaxation in his duty, and his happiness in his home. He did not carry the cares of business or the unfinished labors of the day to the fireside. Like most editors, he worked most easily and freely at his office-desk. He was as regular in attending church on Sunday as he was in publishing his paper on Saturday. Although not averse to improvements, his tendency was to adhere to old habits, old principles, old friends, old books, and old ways of making money. For more than forty years he occupied the same office and the same dwelling-house.

To the benevolent organizations he gave his sympathy and cordial and liberal co-operation. For more than half his lifetime he was the secretary of the Howard Benevolent Society, one of the best charitable organizations in the city, and for many years treasurer of the Portsmouth Bible Society. He was for some time superintendent of the Sunday-school connected with the North Church.

The "Rambles about Portsmouth" were a labor of love, and, while indicating the direction of his reading, they afford a fair and favorable specimen of his style and taste. Plain Anglo-Saxon language flowed naturally from his pen. He commanded an easy and direct mode of expression, which formed an excellent narrative style. A pleasing story or a bit of romance always attracted him. He rescued it from the past, and lent it fresh charms by the simple, graceful mould in which he cast it. It is worthy of marked commendation, however, that he avoided the temptation of giving credence to pure fiction. Whatever was of doubtful origin never gained currency from him without being stamped as such. There was the quaint humor of the chronicler, the fidelity of the historian.

His labor in obtaining biographical facts, anecdotes, and incidents, as materials for history, was such as no man would perform unless his heart were in his work. These articles were originally prepared for and published in his paper, and were compiled, through many years, from all accessible sources, manuscripts, letters, family records, city records, old newspapers, old deeds, wills, tombstones, and the recollections of aged people who have passed away. He was a long time in collecting the materials—some parts of a "Ramble" would be prepared years before a fact or incident necessary to complete it was obtained. He compared the statement of one aged person with that of another, and, when to be found, consulted contemporaneous accounts and incidents as well as collateral facts.

From these and other sources he obtained merely the elements,—the data and crude material from which he worked. But as piled up on his desk, stowed away in drawers, or bound up for future use, they no more resembled a "Ramble," as the reader now sees it, than the paper-maker's uncleaned rags resembled the fair sheet upon which it is printed. Those unacquainted with like undertakings can form no adequate idea of the labor, patience, and perseverance necessary to prosecute such a work, of the interruptions and delays which attend it, the research and discrimination requisite to discover and reproduce a trait of character, a telling anecdote or incident, or to confirm or confute a tradition. In all this the family and friends of Mr. Brewster saw him often employed for years. But much of the inward work, which was from time to time, amidst the cares and toils of life, moulding the matter thus elaborated into narratives so life-like, so attractive, so genial as often to remind one of the writings of Washington Irving, gave no outward token of its process. The structure of these narratives, which is the blending of history, biography, and romantic incidents, and constitutes the great merit and attractiveness of both volumes of the "Rambles," was in preparation while the writer appeared to others to be doing something else or nothing,—walking the street, making up his paper, or sitting by the fireside.

Mr. Brewster was a man of marked ability, untiring industry, and high-toned character, but of diffident and retiring habits. He was called, literally called, to fill several positions of trust. At the time of his death he was one of the trustees of the Portsmouth Savings-Bank. He served for two years as president of the Mechanics' and Manufacturers' Association. He was for thirty-four years secretary of the Howard Benevolent Society, was for several years in one or the other branch of the city government, was representative in the State Legislature in 1846-47, and in 1850, with Governor Goodwin and Ichabod Bartlett, was a delegate from his ward to the convention to amend the State Constitution. He declined being candidate for other positions, among them that of mayor. In these and the other positions which he filled he discharged his duties with diligence and ability and to general acceptance. He occasionally delivered addresses before the Lyceum, the association of which he was president, and other public bodies both at home and abroad. These addresses were always heard with pleasure, and were marked by good taste and sound thought.

He was not only a good writer, as his forty-three volumes of the Portsmouth Journal and his two volumes of "Rambles" will abundantly show, but he was an historian, a lecturer, a biographer, and a poet. His favorite reading was biography and poetry. He was very discriminating and just in his biographical sketches of prominent men and of his townsmen. He had considerable poetic ability, which he exercised too rarely, occupying a prominent position in the "Poets of Portsmouth."

It was formerly the custom among the publishers of newspapers to circulate in or with the number of the paper issued on the 1st of January in each year a poetical address to their patrons, called the "carriers' address." Many years ago, and while the late Isaac Hill published the New Hampshire Patriot, he offered a set of Sir Walter Scott's "Poetical Works" for the best "carriers' address" for the then approaching 1st of January. Mr. Brewster, with several others, competed for this prize. Among the many addresses offered was one to which Mr. Hill, himself a poet, gave the decided preference, and it was the same to which the committee afterwards awarded the prize. Mr. Hill, supposing the successful address to have been the production of a lady, remarked that this circumstance would somewhat moderate the disappointment of the unsuccessful competitors. When the award was made and the opening of the envelope revealed Mr. Brewster as the writer, Mr. Hill was quite as much disappointed as any of the authors of the "rejected addresses." He was not more surprised to find that the prize was not to be given to a lady than that it was to be given to an editor and a political opponent. The reader will see that he judged much better of the merits than of the source of the successful address. The prize was duly forwarded, and is now a cherished treasure in the library of the family of Mr. Brewster.

The successful address was the "History of News—Birth of the Press."

From necessity and practice, Mr. Brewster early acquired the habit of writing rapidly. He also had the power of abstraction, and the current of his thoughts and the preparation of his editorial matter were not disturbed or impeded by the clatter of a printing-office. He wrote as he lived, from the light within. Sedate and retiring as he was, he had a fund of humor and wit which he sought rather to repress than exhibit, but which at times enlivened his friends and his paper.

His habits and tastes made him averse to newspaper controversy. What editor in the country of his extended experience has so generally avoided it? When forced into it, however, he was quick to "make the opposer beware" of whom he had attacked. His criticisms were pungent, his wit not seldom caustic. He undoubtedly possessed great powers of sarcasm. That they were used so sparingly, and never by way of display, but invariably in defense of what he was convinced was the right, or in exposing error and deceit, is characteristic of the man.

Mr. Brewster, like many of our prominent and able men, was educated in a printing-office and at the editor's desk. There is something in the constant and powerful pressure upon an American editor, obliging him to record and comment upon the events as they occur, and to discuss those principles which are growing and ripening in the public mind, and bringing him daily to a searching examination of the moral, social, economical, and political problems which crowd and succeed each other with such rapid succession, that tends to quicken his powers and concentrate his energies, to give a decisive and practical cast to his character, and to force him into prominence and success.

This pressure developed Mr. Brewster. He was naturally retiring, unwilling to be before the public. His position compelled him to write, and he was found in this, as well as in all other positions in which he was placed, equal to the demands made upon him.

This discipline made him a good and able writer and author and a successful business man, and gave him the tastes and habits of a scholar, a wide influence, and a high position. The life of an editor makes some persons aggressive and irritable, but Mr. Brewster yielded to no such influence. He never alienated a friend or made an enemy. He early formed a plan of life, and faithfully acted upon it to the end. He was more anxious to be right than to be thought so, more intent upon doing his duty than in obtaining a reward for it, thought more of publishing a good than a profitable paper, more of being a useful than a prominent man, and at his death the universal feeling of respect for his memory was his best eulogy.

But the great, rounded, and ripened feature in Mr. Brewster's character, that which as years passed over him in his quiet walk of labor and usefulness, gained, deepened, and fixed the public confidence and respect, was his integrity and purity. He was a remarkable man, not only for his industry and ability, his purity and success, but for his self-culture and wise self-control. His life was harmonious and symmetrical. His impulses were so under subjection that he appeared not so much to resist temptations as to avoid them. He was so diligent in the line of duty that he had as little opportunity as inclination to depart from it. Such a life, sweetening and cementing the domestic and social relations, was as full of happiness as of beauty. He died as calmly and serenely as he had lived, in the enjoyment of the affectionate respect of his townsmen and of the public.

CHAPTER XL.

ATKINSON.

Early History—Ecclesiastical History—Educational—Atkinson Academy—Individuals who have entered Learned Professions.

ATKINSON is situated in latitude  $42^{\circ} 51'$ , longitude  $71^{\circ} 8'$ , and is about four miles in length and three in breadth, containing six thousand eight hundred acres, and is bounded north by Hampstead, east by Plaistow, south by Haverhill, Mass., and west by Salem and Derry. It is thirty-six miles from Concord and thirty-six miles from Boston, on the Boston and Maine Railroad.

It originally was a part of Haverhill, which was settled in 1640. It comprises a portion of the territory conveyed to the inhabitants of Pentucket (now Haverhill) by the Indians Passaquino and Saggahew, with the consent of their chief Passaconaway, by their deed now in existence, dated Nov. 15, 1642.

No settlement was made till eighty-five years later, when, in 1727 or '28, Benjamin Richards, of Rochester, N. H., Nathaniel, Jonathan, and Edmund Page and John Dow, from Haverhill, moved into the present limits of the town. When the dividing line between New Hampshire and Massachusetts was settled, Atkinson, then a part of Plaistow, was assigned to New Hampshire.

Plaistow was incorporated Feb. 28, 1749. Atkinson was separated from Plaistow Aug. 31, 1767, and incorporated by the Legislature September 3d of the same year.

The increase of population from the first settlement of the town was rapid, and in 1775, eight years after the incorporation of the town, it numbered five hundred and seventy-five, more than the average from that time to the present. The population by the census of 1880 was five hundred and one.

The soil is of an excellent quality, yielding large returns for the labor spent upon it, and the town has long been noted for its superior fruit.

The location of the town is very high, commanding a view of the spires of sixteen villages and of many mountains on every side around it. The air is dry and pure, and Dr. Bowditch, the distinguished physician, has long recommended it as one of the most favorable resorts in New Hampshire for those afflicted with pulmonary complaints.

In the Revolution, which occurred so soon after the incorporation of the town, the people of Atkinson showed themselves truly patriotic. This they did by spirited resolutions and by furnishing men and money for the army.

Mr. Nathaniel Cogswell, who had been a merchant thirty or forty years in the adjoining town of Haverhill, and had moved into Atkinson in 1766, alone gave eight sons to the service, besides loaning money to the town to be expended in bounty and military equipments, the greater part of which money, by the depreciation of currency, he lost. These eight sons performed more than thirty-eight years of service, a greater amount of service, it is believed, than was rendered by any other family in the country.

They all survived the Revolution and settled in life, and were the Hon. Thomas Cogswell, of Gilmanston; Hon. Amos Cogswell, of Dover; Capt. Nathaniel P. Cogswell, of Atkinson; Moses Cogswell, Esq., of Canterbury; Dr. William Cogswell, of Atkinson; John Cogswell, Esq., of Landaff; Dr. Joseph Cogswell, of Yarmouth; and Mr. Ebenezer Cogswell, of Wiscasset, Me. Gen. Nathaniel Peabody, by the important services he rendered to the country in this crisis of affairs, was a host.

In all the wars in which our country has been engaged Atkinson has been prompt to do its whole duty. In the war of 1812 she sent quite a number of men to guard the forts along the coast, and Capt. William Page, commander of a company of cavalry, in response to a requisition from the Governor, tendered the services of this entire company. Forty residents of Atkinson served in the war of the Rebellion, very few towns in New Hampshire furnishing so large a number in proportion to their population.

Ecclesiastical History.—The reasons assigned by the petitioners for a separation from the town of Plaistow were "that by reason of the great distance of their dwellings from the meeting-house they undergo many and great difficulties in attending the worship of Almighty God there, and that the said meeting-house is not large enough to accommodate more than half of the inhabitants of said town."

Before the erection of the church services were held at the house of Mr. Nathaniel Cogswell. The first meeting-house was built in 1768-69, and remained until 1845.

The town extended a call to Mr. Stephen Peabody, Feb. 26, 1772, and voted to give him "160 pounds lawful money as a settlement, upon condition that the salary begin £66 13s. and 4d. lawful money the first year, and add on 40 shillings per year till it amount to 80 pounds per year." They also voted to give him "ten cords of wood per year as long as he carry on the work of the ministry in Atkinson." Mr. Peabody accepted, and was ordained Nov. 25, 1772, at which time the church was organized at the house of Mr. Samuel Little.

The covenant of the church adopted at its organization was evangelical. Mr. Peabody continued pastor of the church until his decease. (See sketches.)

After the death of Mr. Peabody the pulpit was supplied by the following gentlemen: Rev. Jacob Cummings, born at Warren, Mass.; D. C. 1819; Andover Theological Seminary, 1822; preached at Atkinson 1822-24, being at the same time preceptor of the academy, afterwards at Straham, Southborough, Mass., Hillsborough, and Exeter, where he died June 20, 1866, in the seventy-third year of his age.

Rev. Stephen Farley, born at Hollis; D. C. 1804, was settled at Claremont, 1806-18; at Atkinson, 1824-31, being at the same time preceptor of the academy; died at Amesbury, Mass., Sept. 30, 1871, aged seventy-one.

Rev. Luke A. Spofford, born at Jaffrey, M. C. 1815; pastor of the church in Gilmanton, 1819-25; Brentwood, 1826-29; Lancaster, 1829-31; Atkinson, 1831-34; then of the churches at Scituate, Mass., and Chilmark, Mass., when he removed to Indiana, and died at Rockville, Oct. 10, 1855. He was the father of Judge Henry M. Spofford, of Louisiana, and Amsworth Spofford, librarian of the Congressional Library, Washington, D. C.

Rev. Samuel H. Tolman, born at Dorchester, Mass.; D. C. 1806; settled at Shirley, Mass., Dunstable, Mass., South Merrimac, Atkinson, 1836-39, Sempster, and Hillsborough Centre; died at Atkinson, April 2, 1856.

Rev. Samuel Pierce, born at Haverhill, Mass.; D. C. 1835; Andover Theological Seminary, 1840; commenced preaching at Atkinson in 1842, and died March 27, 1844.

Rev. Jesse Page.

Rev. C. F. Morse, born at Salem, Vt.; A. C. 1853; Andover Theological Seminary, 1856; missionary to Turkey, 1857-70; pastor at Atkinson, 1872-75, then at Thetford, Waterford, and McDunor's Falls, in Vermont.

Rev. C. T. Melvin, born at Chester; D. C. 1856; Andover Theological Seminary, 1859; pastor at Columbus, Elk Grove, and Sun Prairie, Wis., Emporia, Kan., Atkinson, 1875-80; died at Walpole, Mass., 1880.

Rev. E. B. Pike, born at Hiram, Me.; M.D. at Bowdoin Medical College, 1857; Bangor Theological Seminary, 1862; pastor at Stowe, Me., and Chatham, N. H., Brownfield, Me., Boothbay, Me., Atkin, 1880-82.

Rev. J. O. Barrows, born at Mansfield, Conn.; A. C. 1860; Andover Theological Seminary, 1863; pastor at North Hampton; First Church, Exeter; Missionary American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Turkey, 1869-80; pastor at Atkinson, 1882.

In March, 1819, three months previous to the death of Mr. Peabody, the town "voted to let the Universalists have the privilege of using the meeting-house the present year their proportion of Sundays, according to the taxation." This vote was repeated in subsequent years.

Deeming it expedient, on account of the inconvenience which attended the worship of God in connection with those of other denominations, the church and orthodox part of the community formed, Feb. 19, 1834, a society for the support of Christian institutions, called the "Congregational Society in Atkinson." During the year 1835 a meeting-house was erected by this new society from subscriptions by themselves and others. It stands on land given for this purpose by Joseph B. Cogswell.

In 1845, Mrs. Judith Cogswell, widow of Dr. William Cogswell, gave to the Orthodox Congregational Church and Society a bell weighing thirteen hundred pounds. A pipe organ was procured in 1866. A fine parsonage was erected in 1872. The meeting-house was remodeled in 1879 at an expense exceeding its original cost.

In 1872, Francis Cogswell, George Cogswell, Nathaniel Cogswell, and Jesse Page gave to the Congregational Church a thousand dollars each, "The interest to be expended, under its direction, for the support of preaching and sustaining the gospel ministry;" and Joseph B. Cogswell, another brother, a similar amount for the support of preaching and repairs on the house of worship. Donations to the preaching fund have also been made by John Pettengill and Eliza W. Noyes.

It may be well to remark that the singing in the church has always been by a volunteer choir. To one family, children of Mr. Henry Noyes, has the church been especially indebted. Four sisters of this family sat side by side for more than forty years preceding 1865, and several brothers nearly as long, and the husband of one of the four sisters sang in the choir more than fifty years, a great part of the time as the leader.

A UNIVERSALIST SOCIETY was incorporated June 18, 1818, by the name of the Universalist Society of Atkinson and Hampstead. The old society was given up, and the present one formed in 1839, and is known by the name of the Atkinson Universalist Society. The society erected a meeting-house in 1842.

For the years 1843 and 1844 the Rev. Josiah Gilman resided in the town, and supplied the pulpit half the time. Since then the society has had preaching only occasionally.

Education.—The early settlers seem to have been people of intelligence, and one of their first thoughts was the education of their children. March 29, 1774, according to the records of the town, it was voted to hire a schoolmaster eight months the ensuing year, an unusual length of school for so small a population at that early period. Jan. 30, 1775, the town was divided into three school districts and subsequently into six; the present number is five. The people, however, were soon dissatisfied with the advantages of the common district schools, and in 1788 erected a suitable building and established Atkinson Academy, which is entitled to an honorable place among the educational institutions of New England from its antiquity and usefulness.

The first four academies of New Hampshire were Phillips', at Exeter, incorporated 1781; New Ipswich, incorporated 1789; Chesterfield, incorporated 1790; and Atkinson, incorporated Feb. 17, 1791. As the one at Atkinson, however, went into operation several years before its incorporation, it is really the second in the State in point of age. The origin of the academy is due mainly to the efforts of three men,—Hon. Dr. and Gen. Nathaniel Peabody, Rev. Stephen Peabody, and Dr. William Cogswell.

The first academy building, one story in height, was erected in the centre of the town, where the road to Salem diverges from the main street. It was burned in 1802, and the present building was erected in 1803, after the model of Phillips' Academy, in Exeter. It is sixty feet long, thirty-four feet wide, and two stories high, and is a well-proportioned, handsome structure, situated on elevated ground, and commanding an extensive view of the country around.

In 1850 the old plank seats were exchanged for modern desks, and a fine bell procured by subscription. A good library and suitable philosophical and chemical apparatus have also been obtained.

When first established the academy, through the scarcity of such institutions, soon gained an enviable reputation, and was largely patronized from a distance, fitting young men for college, and giving instruction in the higher English branches. It early became a mixed school, when but little attention had been paid to female education, and has so continued to the present time, being the first academy, according to Rev. Dr. Foll, himself one of the pupils, where the sexes were educated together in the higher branches.

It is interesting to note, in comparison with the present educational expenses, how small were the charges of the school in its early history. The tuition for the first two years was only 6s. for a quarter of twelve weeks; then 9s.; in 1797, $2.00; in 1805, $3.00; in 1839 it was raised to $4.00; in 1854 it was $4.80. Board at first was 4s. 6d., including lodging and washing. Then for many years it was 6s.; in 1830 it was 7s. 6d. for the whole week, including washing and lodging, and 6s. for those who spent the Sabbath at their homes; in 1850 from $1.50 to $2.00 per week, including room-rent and washing.

The academy has had no permanent funds till recently. In 1855, Mr. James Atwood, of Westchester, Pa., a native of the town, gave one thousand dollars, and his son-in-law, Dr. Almon Z. Barlin, five hundred dollars. In 1865 it received a legacy of two thousand dollars from Rev. Dr. Joseph B. Fell, one thousand for himself and one thousand for his wife, and in 1877 two thousand dollars as a legacy from Quiney Tufts, one of the first pupils of the academy. Mr. William Johnson, an old resident of the town, who died in 1880, gave a prospective bequest of above eleven thousand dollars. He was a man of great native good sense and much industry, and he lived to the advanced age of nearly ninety-three years.

It is not a little remarkable that an institution entirely self-supporting should have so long maintained itself, which is due to its healthy location, its ease of access, and the wants of a large rural surrounding population. The academy is now in successful operation, and, with a fund and other advantages recently secured, bids fair in the future to surpass its past usefulness.

Very many have enjoyed its privileges who would otherwise have secured no instruction beyond that of the common district schools. To the town where it is located it has been of priceless value.

The Rev. Dr. Cogswell, good authority, stated that through its influence Atkinson had given more of its sons to the learned professions than any other town in the State, in proportion to its population.

Among the many pupils of the old academy are not a few who have attained eminence. There may be mentioned the names of Levi Woodbury, noted in youth as in manhood for his untiring industry; Governor Kent, of Maine; Jonathan and Joseph Cilley; President Brown, of Dartmouth College; Gen. James Wilson; Judge White, of Salem; President Hale, of Hobart College; Benjamin Greenleaf, author of many mathematical works; Edmund R. Peaslee, LL.D., the distinguished medical professor and practitioner, of New York City; Judge Greenleaf Clarke, of the Supreme Court, Minnesota. To these should be added, besides others previously mentioned, a large number of clergymen of great usefulness.

Grace Fletcher, the first wife of Daniel Webster, was educated here, and has been described by her schoolmates as a pale, modest, retiring girl.

The following is a list of the different principals of the academy:

Moses Leavitt Neal, of Londonderry, H. C. 1785, attorney-at-law, clerk of New Hampshire House of Representatives, and register of deeds of Strafford County, lived at Dover and elsewhere. Died 1829, aged sixty-two.

Daniel Hardy, of Bradford, Mass., D. C. 1789, studied divinity; tutor in Dartmouth College; taught at Chesterfield and Bradford, Mass. A distinguished linguist. Died at Draeut, Mass., Nov. 25, 1833, aged sixty.

Samuel Moody, of Byfield, Mass., D. C. 1790, teacher at Hallowell, Me., where he died April 6, 1832, aged sixty-seven.

Silas Dismore, of Windham, D. C. 1791, purser of United States navy; Indian agent, with the rank of colonel, to the Choctaw and Cherokee Indians, and collector of the port of Mobile. A man of much energy and intelligence. It was to him that a cabinet minister wrote to ask, "How far does the Tombigbee run up into the country?" His reply was, "It does not run up at all, it runs down." The result was his dismissal. He died at Bellone, Ky., June 17, 1847, aged eighty.

Stephen Peabody Webster, of Haverhill, Mass., H. C. 1792, was the first person that entered college from the academy; clerk of the courts of Grafton County, and representative, senator, and counselor of the State of New Hampshire; taught at Haverhill, where he died, 1841.

John Vose, of Bradford, D. C. 1795, preceptor of Pembroke Academy; representative and senator of New Hampshire Legislature; author of several addresses and two valuable and original works on astronomy, died at Atkinson, May 3, 1849, aged seventy-three. He taught at Atkinson twenty-three years, and at Pembroke eleven years. He was a worthy man, a devout Christian, a superior teacher, of more than ordinary ability and scholarship. He was offered the position of judge, which he declined.

Moses Dow, of Atkinson, D. C. 1796, settled as a clergyman at Beverly, Mass., and York, Me., died at Plaistow, May 9, 1837, aged sixty-six.

William Cogswell, of Atkinson, D. C. 1811, principal of Hampton Academy, settled as a clergyman in Dedham, Mass.; secretary of the American Education Society; professor in Dartmouth College, and president of Gilmanton Theological Seminary; editor of American Quarterly Register, and author of several theological works; died at Gilmanton, April 18, 1850, aged sixty-two. He was a man of great industry and usefulness, and few clergymen of his time were better known, or filled so many important positions.

Francis Voce, of Francistown, D. C. 1817, teacher at Colchester, Conn., Hampton, N. H., Newburyport, Topsfield, and Haverhill, Mass., and Bloomfield Academy, Me., died at Pembroke, Aug. 8, 1851, aged sixty-two.

Jacob Cummings, of Warren, Mass., D. C. 1819, preceptor of Hampton Academy, settled as a clergyman at Stratham, N. H., Sharon and Scarborough, Mass., and Hillsborough and Exeter, N. H., died at Exeter, June 20, 1866, aged seventy-three.

Stephen Farley, of Hollis, D. C. 1804, clergyman, settled at Claremont and Atkinson, died at Amesbury, Mass., Sept. 20, 1851, aged seventy-one. He was the author of several theological works, and was an excellent belles-lettres scholar.

Enoch Hale, of Alstead, University of Vermont, 1826, teacher at Alstead and New London, took orders for the Episcopal Church, died at Atkinson, Nov. 16, 1830.

John Kelly, of Plaistow, A. C. 1825, preceptor of Derry Academy, attorney-at-law in Plaistow, Chester, and Atkinson, died 1877.

Joseph Peckham, of Westminister, Mass., A. C. 1837, clergyman, settled at Kingston, Mass.

Joseph Allen Taylor, of Granby, Mass., H. C. 1839, died at Atkinson while a member of Andover Theological Seminary, 1842, aged twenty-eight.

Benjamin A. Spaulding, of Billerica, Mass., H. C. 1840, missionary in Iowa. Malachi Bullard, of West Melway, Mass., D. C. 1841, clergyman, settled at Winchendon, Mass., died May 10, 1849, aged thirty-one.

John Wason Ray, of Auburn, D. C. 1843; teacher in Manchester, Derry, and Eastport, Me.; clergyman, settled at Vernon, Conn., and Goffstown.

Edward Hanford Greeley, of Hopkinton, D. C. 1845, clergyman, settled in Haverhill, Nashua, and Methuen, Mass.; secretary of New Hampshire Home Missionary Society.

Joseph Garland, of Hampton, B. C. 1844, physician in Gloucester, Mass., of which city he has been mayor.

Charles Darwin Fitch, of Greenfield, D. C. 1837, teacher in Phillips' Academy, Andover, Amherst, Derry, and elsewhere, physician.

William C. Todd, D. C. 1844, principal Female High School, Newburyport, Mass., in which city he now resides.

Charles Prescott Parsons, of Gilmanton, D. C. 1853, teacher in Gilmanton, Biddleford, Me., and Evansville, Ind., where he died, 1880.

John Webster Dodge, of Newburyport, Mass., A. C. 1857, Congregational clergyman, Yarmouth, Mass.

Justin White Spaulding, of Plainfield, D. C. 1847, teacher in West Boscawen, Meriden, Bradford, Vt., and Taunton, Mass.; died in Atkinson, Sept. 28, 1865, aged forty-two.

Nathan Barrows, of Hartford, Conn., W. R. C. 1850, A. B. 1853, A.M. and College of Physicians and Surgeons, N. Y., M.D.; principal of Huron County Institute, Ohio; South Berwick Academy, Me.; Claremont High School; and teacher in Kimball Union Academy.

William Ellingwood Buntin, of Dunbarton, D. C.

1860, teacher in Danbarton and Gloucester, Marblehead, and Waltham, Mass.; was captain in the war of the Rebellion.

Bartlett Hardy Weston, of Georgetown, Mass., D. C. 1864, teacher in Hampton Academy; Wheaton Academy, Ill., Golden Gate Academy, Cal., and at Reed's Ferry.

E. C. Allen, of Colosse, Oswego Co., N. Y., Madison University, 1844, professor in Collegiate Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., and principal of Penacook Academy, Fisherville.

ATKINSON.—(Continued.)

Lawyers—Physicians—Sketches of Individuals—Longevity—Miscellaneous—Military Record—Representatives.

THE only lawyer who ever practiced in the town was John Kelly, who had formerly been preceptor in the academy. He removed here from Chester, and practiced till his death. He was also distinguished as a surveyor.

Physicians.—Dr. Nathaniel Peabody was the first physician who ever settled in Atkinson, where he soon acquired a very extensive business, and was accounted an able and successful practitioner. (See sketches.)

Dr. Kendall Osgood was born at Andover in 1757, and was settled as a physician in Atkinson about 1785. He removed to Peterboro' in the summer of 1788, where he spent the remainder of his days. He was one of the original Fellows of the New Hampshire Medical Society. He died Aug. 19, 1801, aged forty-four.

Dr. William Cogswell. (See sketch.)

Dr. Thomas Wallace, born at Bedford, Jan. 14, 1793, commenced practice in Middleton, Mass.; practiced for a time in Atkinson; soon removed to Derry.

Dr. Isaac Burnham Hovey, born in Derry, May 1, 1790, pursued a partial course at Dartmouth, received his medical degree at Brown University, Sept. 6, 1820. His license to practice was obtained from Massachusetts Medical Society July 3, 1822. He removed to Atkinson, October, 1822, and continued in the practice of his profession for nearly half a century, till his death, Jan. 6, 1872. He was a man of strong good sense, an excellent practitioner, and, aside from the practice of his profession, took a marked interest in education, in farming, and in civil affairs. He was a magistrate, and served the town for many years as town clerk and represented it one year in the Legislature. He lived and died much respected. It may be worthy of remark that during his whole professional career, his charge was only fifty cents a visit.

Sketches of Individuals.—Nathaniel Peabody, the first physician of the town, was born in Topsfield, Mass., that cradle of the Peabody family, March 1, 1741. He was the son of Dr. Jacob Peabody, and by his mother, Susannah Rogers, daughter of Rev. John Rogers, of Boxford, a descendant of Nathaniel Rogers, of Ipswich, Mass. As a physician he was successful and prominent in the organization of the New Hampshire Medical Society. At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war he took an active part and was appointed, Oct. 27, 1774, lieutenant-colonel of the Seventh New Hampshire Regiment. March 25, 1779, he was elected a delegate to the Continental Congress. Subsequently he was Speaker of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, State senator and councillor, and major-general of the militia. About the commencement of the present century he became involved in debt, and for many of the last years of his life he was imprisoned at Exeter, and died within the limits of the jail-yard June 27, 1823, aged eighty-two years. He was a man of much energy and ability, and prominent in the early history of New Hampshire. He took much interest in education, and in 1791 he received the degree of Master of Arts from the trustees of Dartmouth College.

REV. STEPHEN PEABODY was born in Andover, Mass., Nov. 11, 1741; was graduated at Harvard College 1769, a classmate of Theophilus Parsons. He died May 23, 1819. He was chaplain in the army during the Revolutionary war. His first wife was Miss Polly Haseltine, of Bradford, Mass., aunt of the distinguished teacher of that name, also of the first Mrs. Judson. His second wife was the widow of Rev. John Shaw, of Haverhill, Mass., daughter of Rev. John Smith, of Weymouth, Mass., and sister of Mrs. President John Adams, a lady of great accomplishments, whose influence in refining the people of her husband's parish is still felt. By her first husband she was the mother of William Smith Shaw, long connected with the Boston Athenæum, and of Mrs. Abigail Adams Felt, wife of Rev. Joseph B. Felt, well known for his historical and genealogical researches.

To Mr. Peabody more than to any other one man the academy is indebted for its establishment. He became personally liable for its debts, and to secure funds obtained an act of the Legislature authorizing a lottery, no unusual method in those days of procuring money for benevolent objects. Application was made to the Legislature of Massachusetts for permission to sell tickets in that State, as by an act of the Legislature in February, 1801, the sale of lottery tickets from other States was forbidden except by legislative consent. This permission was refused, not from any moral scruples but from a desire to protect home industry, a trait carefully handed down in the old Bay State. Parson Peabody, or Sir Peabody, as he was usually termed, was a pastor of the old school, kind and affable, yet always in dress and manner preserving the dignity of his profession. Every Sunday he announced what families he would visit during the week to catechize the children, and at the appointed hour with much trembling the little ones were gathered by their parents into the best room in their Sunday clothes, to pass the trying ordeal of an examination in the Westminster Catechism, happy if successful, covered with unspeakable shame if they failed. At the church the whole congregation rose as the minister and his lady entered, and at the close of the services all remained standing till they had left, bowing as they passed along the aisle and out of the sanctuary. He kept open doors, and was known to all the countrymen who from Vermont and the upper part of New Hampshire passed through the village with country produce to exchange for groceries. A large fire burned in his sitting-room, and often it is said the stranger would enter, warm himself by the grateful fire, talk with his host, and depart, the face of the guest unseen, and, with the courtesy of the old days of chivalry, his name unasked. The name of his good pastor is still green in the town of his long labors, and a fine monument has recently been placed over his remains. Requiescat in pace.

DR. WILLIAM COGSWELL was born in Haverhill, Mass., July 11, 1760. He was a descendant of John Cogswell, who came from London and settled in Ipswich, Mass., in 1635. He was appointed surgeon's mate at West Point in 1781, and continued in the service till the close of the war. In 1784 he was promoted to the charge of the hospital at West Point, where he remained till Sept. 1, 1785, when he commenced practice in Atkinson. He was active in his profession, in the cause of education, and in public affairs. An excellent citizen, he was decided in his opinions and energetic in every good work; he tolerated no wrong in the community around him, and trained up a large family of children by obedience at home to be good men and women. He died Jan. 1, 1831.

REV. JESSE PAGE was born in Atkinson, N. H., Feb. 23, 1805. His great-grandfather was Edmund Page, one of the first settlers of the town; his grandfather, Capt. Jesse Page, was a brave soldier in the Revolution, and his father, Col. William Page, for thirty years a deacon in the Congregational Church. His early life was marked by sobriety and application. July 10, 1827, he united with the Congregational Church in Atkinson with his younger brother, Rev. William Page, for twenty years an earnest and successful minister. He was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1831, when he was appointed to deliver an English oration and public oration before the theological society. Immediately after graduation he took charge of the academy at Limerick, Me., for one year. He then entered Andover Theological Seminary, from which he was graduated in 1835, and the next week was ordained over the Trinitarian Congregational Church in North Andover, Mass. Jan. 14, 1837, he married Ann Poor Little, daughter of Ezekiel Little, Esq., many years a teacher of one of the public schools of Boston, Mass. They had four children,—one daughter, Mary Ann, and three sons who died in infancy. The mother, a superior woman, died Dec. 8, 1846. He was dismissed from North Andover, Mass., June 7, 1843, at his request in impaired health. He removed to South Andover, Mass., and supplied at Litchfield, where a new meeting-house was erected and a church reorganized which had been disbanded. In June, 1845, he became stated supply of the Congregational Church in Atkinson, his native place, which continued till the spring of 1869, when he was prostrated with the pneumonia, which disabled him from constant preaching. During this time in 1860 he was called to preach to a Methodist society in Lynn, Mass., which he organized into the Chestnut Street Congregational Church, and in 1862 he took charge of the Rutgers Female College, New York City, while the president went to the army.

His first care has ever been for the cause of religion, to which everything else has been subordinate; earnest and orthodox as a preacher, faithful as a pastor, no minister has done so much to strengthen the church. His feeling has always been that on religion alone must a community depend for its safety and prosperity. Far-seeing in his plans, he has been wise and persistent in their execution. To but few persons has the town been so much indebted, and no one has been more anxious to have it known and respected. During his long life he has not only been interested in what relates to the church, but has been active in the cause of education, and in all that could benefit the town. He has been president of the board of trustees of the academy since 1848, and no other one has done so much to sustain it. Nor have his sympathies been alone with his native town, but he has ever been anxious to promote the welfare of his alma mater, and other educational and religious institutions. He has a large acquaintance, and his advice is always much sought and prized. He has been foremost in every good work, not only by his counsels but by liberal contributions. His interest in young men is especially worthy of mention. Fluent in speech, with fine conversational powers, social and even in his temperament, he is attractive as a host and welcome as a guest. He has filled a large space in the history of his native town, and when he passes away he will leave a large void behind him.

HON. GREENLEAF CLARKE, son of Greenleaf Clarke, grandson of Dr. William Cogswell, has for many years been one of the most influential citizens of Atkinson. He was appointed on Governor Hubbard's staff in 1842 with the rank of colonel; was member of the New Hampshire Legislature in 1842-43 and 1877; was member of Governor's Council in 1850-51; was member of the Constitutional Convention of New Hampshire in 1876; member of the Senate in 1879; was appointed by the Governor and Council special commissioner on the Boston and Maine Railroad from 1846 to 1856, and again in 1880, which office he still holds. He is treasurer of the board of trustees of Atkinson Academy.

Longevity.—The town embraces an area of six thousand eight hundred acres, was incorporated as late as 1767, and has never contained at one time more than six hundred inhabitants. It has ever been accounted a remarkably healthy place. During fourteen consecutive months there was not a single death. For the two years preceding the date of this history the death-rate has been only twelve in a thousand, and the average age of the deceased has been over seventy. No child has died between the ages of one and eighteen, and but one child has died in twenty years between the ages of one and fifteen. The following persons lived to the advanced age affixed to their respective names: Hannah Belknap, 106; Ezekiel Belknap, 100; Elizabeth Jewell, 100; Moses Belknap, 97; Moses Belknap, Jr., 99; William Webster, 97; Benjamin Richards, 96; Mary Merrill, 96; Susannah Grovet, 95; Lydia Sawyer, 95; Ruth Wright, 94; Joshua Richards, 94; Sarah Webster, 93; Sarah Currier, 93; Elizabeth L. Noyes, 89; Peter Noyes, 89; Lydia Clark, 89, and Sally Richards, 89 (twins); Stephen Webster, 89; Jonathan Perere, 89; Ednah Greenough, 88; Abiah Currier, 88; Sarah Webster, 88; Ezekiel Little, 88; Anna Webster, 88; Nathaniel Foote, 88; Susannah Page, 87; Hannah Richards, 87; James Noyes, 87; James Merrill, 87; Jonathan Whittaker, 87; Samuel Basset, 87; Judith Cogswell, 86; Elizabeth Clement, 86; Betsey Brickett, 86; Lydia B. Nourse, 86; John Greenough, 86; John Kelly, 85; Sarah Webster, 85; Nathan Dous, 85; Tristram Knight, 85; Abigail Knight, 85; Betsey Richards, 85; Abrahm Richards, 85; Henry Noyes, 85; John Webster, 84; Hannah Poor, 84; Sarah Page, 84; Reuben Mills, 84; Nathan Page, 84; Judith Chandler, 84; Hezekiah Merrill, 84; Rosana Whittaker, 84; Hannah Knight, 84; Bethiah Webster, 83; James White, 83; Dorothy Little, 83; Susannah Knight, 83; Richard Wheeler, 83; Silas Noyes, 83; Jonathan Tilton, 83; John Pettingill, 83; Lucy Noyes, 83; David M. Wheeler, 83; Daniel Page, 82; William Page, 82; William Webster, 82; Tristram Knight, 82; Rebecca Jacques, 82; Tamar

The following persons (1882) still living and residing in Atkinson have arrived at the great age affixed to their respective names: Prudence Bradley, 90; Lydia Clough, 89; William Noyes, 85; Clarissa Dow, 85; Sally Little, 84; Abigail Pottingill, 84; Harriet W. Roberts, 82; Dorcas Noyes, 81. Three persons have died the present year whose ages were 83, 76, and 72.

Miscellaneous Matters.—The first house in the town was built by Benjamin Richards, at the end of the lane leading from the main street, a little north of the burying-ground. In this same house Lieut. Ezekiel Belknap died, Jan. 5, 1836, aged one hundred years and forty days. He was a soldier of the old French war, afterwards an officer in the Revolutionary war, and was present at the execution of André.

For many years since the incorporation of the town, and for several years preceding 1882, there has been no pauper maintained by the town.

A temperance society was formed about 1830, and means taken to prosecute all who sold spirits illegally, and no intoxicating drinks have been sold since 1836.

As a proof of the general good morality, it is said no one from the town has ever been imprisoned for crime.

Of late years much attention has been paid to raising milk, some farmers keeping as many as fifty cows; and although the town is one of the smallest in the county in area and population, it sells annually about thirty thousand dollars' worth of milk. It sells, in addition, about eighteen thousand pounds of butter and thirteen thousand dozen of eggs.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AUBURN.

Geographical—Topographical—First Settlers—Ecclesiastical—First Congregational Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Civil and Military History—Petition for Incorporation—"West Chester"—The Opposition—The Town Incorporated—The First Town-Meeting—Moderators—Town Clerks—Representatives—Military History.

AUBURN lies in the western part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Candia and Hoopsett, on the east by Chester, on the south by Derry and Londonderry, and on the west by Hillsborough and Merrimack Counties. The surface is broken but the soil is fertile.

Lake Massabesic, the largest body of water in Rockingham County, is rapidly gaining in popular favor, and is one of the most enchanting summer resorts within the bounds of the "Granite State." The first settler in Auburn was John Smith.

First Congregational Church.—For some reason it was deemed expedient to dissolve the Presbyterian parish and church, and organize a Congregational one. Accordingly, agreeably to an act passed July 3, 1827, "The Second Congregational Society in Chester" was organized June 11, 1842, and a code of by-laws adopted, one article of which was that all moneys should be raised by voluntary subscription. The condition of membership was signing the by-laws and paying one dollar annually. On the 1st day of January, 1843, sixteen members of the Presbyterian Church adopted articles of faith and a covenant, and were organized into a church by the Rev. Samuel Ordway, and assumed the name of The Second Congregational Church in Chester. After the town of Auburn was incorporated, in 1845, the name of the society and church was altered to the First in Auburn. Rev. Samuel Ordway remained until 1846. Subsequent pastors have been James Holmes, Josiah L. Jones, J. S. Guy, Charles E. Houghton, Theodore C. Pratt.

The Methodist Episcopal Church.—Methodism began to make its appearance in what is now Auburn about the year 1800. The first Methodist sermon believed to have been preached in Chester was in 1807 by Rev. George Pickering. Upon the erection of the new school-house in 1827, on the site of the present one, near the bridge across the Blanchard mill-pond, the Methodists had services in it until it failed to accommodate the rapidly increasing congregation, and in 1836 a house of worship was erected. Among the ministers who have labored here are mentioned the names of Revs. Fales, Quimby, Stearns, Smith, Joseph Scott, Marsh, Spencer, Dr. Ferrest, H. B. Copp, R. G. Donaldson, A. Folsom, Nathaniel L. Chase, Jarvis Adams, James Adams, Henry V. Hartwells, Joseph W. Bisby, Isaac G. Price, Simon B. Heath, Frederick E. Whertwell, Henry B. Copp, Nelson M. Bailey, A. R. Lunt.

Civil History.—A petition by John Clark and others having been presented to the Legislature in 1844 to have the town of Chester divided, the west part to be named "West Chester," and an order of notice having been served on the town, there was a committee, consisting of John White, Jacob Chase, David Currier, Stephen Palmer, Abel G. Quigg, and James Brown, chosen to report a line for the division at an adjournment. The question was taken by ayes and noes whether the meeting would consent to a division provided the committee should report a satisfactory line: ayes, one hundred and forty-eight; noes, eighty three. There seem to have been two reports, and the one made by that part of the committee from the westerly part of the town was adopted: ayes, two hundred and ten; noes, fifty-nine.

There was a strong opposition from individuals in the west part, headed by Jesse Patten and Pike Chase, a remonstrance sent in and counsel employed before the committee, but the petitioners prevailed, and the act passed June 25, 1845. Samuel D. Bell, of Manchester, Nathaniel Parker and William Cloate, of Derry, were named in the act to divide the property and debts. Auburn was to pay two dollars and twenty-six cents, and Chester four dollars and two cents, of State tax.

The first meeting of Auburn was notified by John Clark, David Currier, and Stephen Palmer, and holden July 28th, and officers chosen at an adjournment.

Auburn was incorporated June 25, 1845. It was originally that part of Chester known as "Long Meadow."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

CHARLES CUMMINGS GRANT.

Charles Cummings Grant was born in Greenfield, N. H., Feb. 15, 1822. His grandfather, John Grant, lived in Greenfield; was a farmer, and reared a family of seven children,—Charles, John, James, Philip, Joseph, and Polly, and one other daughter, who married one Alcock. He died in Greenfield at an advanced age. Charles Grant, father of Charles C., was born Aug. 18, 1783; had a common-school education, and became a representative farmer of Greenfield. On Nov. 22, 1809, he married Mary Ballard, who was born Dec. 1, 1788. Their children were Mary, born Sept. 25, 1810 (married David Abbott, of Andover, Mass.); Eliza, born June 26, 1812; Hannah B., born Sept. 19, 1815 (married Nathan C. Abbott, of Andover, Mass.); Margaret, born July 26, 1818 (married Aaron N. Lusecomb, of Andover, Mass.); Charles C. (1), born July 9, 1820, died in February, 1821; Charles C. (2); William B., died in infancy; Phoebe C., born July 30, 1826 (married Daniel Trow, of Andover, Mass.); and Josiah A., born Feb. 1, 1829, died November, 1845. He was constable in Greenfield for a number of years, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He removed to Andover, Mass., in 1843, whence he removed to Londonderry, N. H., in 1852, in which town he died April 12, 1847. His wife survived him several years, and died in Andover, Mass., April 17, 1864. In politics he was a Whig. He was an energetic, hard-working man, quiet in demeanor, and respected by all.

Charles Cummings Grant was reared on a farm, had a common-school education, and at the age of fifteen went to Andover, Mass., where he worked for his brother-in-law, David Abbott, four years, after which he worked for George Boutwell, of Andover, for three years. He married Salome V. Center, daughter of Thomas and Lucy (Sawyer) Center, of Hudson, N. H., Jan. 19, 1843. They had three children,—Louisa C., born Oct. 1, 1843 (married John Y. Demeritt in August, 1862. He enlisted in Co. A, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers; died in hospital at Washington, December, 1862. She married James M. Preston, of Auburn, in November, 1866. They had five children,—Mabel S., born June 7, 1867; Emma F., born December, 1868; Marion P., born July 30, 1874, and two children who died in infancy. She died Feb. 15, 1881); Charles H., born July 8, 1845 (enlisted in Co. A, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers; promoted to corporal; in battles Fredericksburg, Bermuda Hundred, Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, Fort Harrison, and Fair Oaks; captured at Fair Oaks Oct. 25, 1863; confined in rebel prison at Salisbury, N. C., where he died Sept. 12, 1865); and Warren S., born Jan. 10, 1848, died April 2, 1848. Mrs. Grant died Feb. 23, 1848. March 26, 1849, he married Frances M., daughter of Alexander Anderson, of Londonderry, N. H. She died June 29, 1856. Their children were Josiah A., born Sept. 17, 1850, died Aug. 19, 1853; Luther A., born April 28, 1853, died Aug. 25, 1853; Addison M., born Sept. 22, 1854, married Mary E. Hall, of Pennsylvania, have three children,—Herbert A., Carrie L., deceased, and Blanche M., and is now in the wholesale meat business in Lawrence, Mass.; and Irving F., born March 25, 1856, married Belle, daughter of Ebenezer M. Leavitt, of Auburn, and is now conducting a farm near his father. He married Vernelia S., daughter of Jonas Brown, of Cambridge, Vt., Nov. 6, 1846. She died June 24, 1871, leaving an adopted daughter, Ella V., born Aug. 21, 1866. Mr. Grant married Hattie S., daughter of Thomas and Betsey (Hall) Coffin, of Auburn, Jan. 16, 1872. She was born in Boscawen, N. H., Aug. 27, 1839. Their children are Charles H., born June 24, 1873; Hattie F., born April 6, 1875; Perley C., born Nov. 28, 1876; Mary B., born Jan. 13, 1879; and George E., born Sept. 29, 1880.

In 1859, Charles C. Grant removed from Andover to Auburn, where he purchased one hundred and fifteen acres of land, to which by steady perseverance and careful management he has added one hundred acres more, and is one of the best farmers in the town. He has been a consistent church-member since thirteen years of age, and has been deacon of the First Congregational Church of Auburn since April 13, 1864. He stands high in the esteem of his fellow-townsmen, and has been honored with the following positions: selectman five years, town treasurer three years, representative two years, and a member of the convention to revise the Constitution of State in 1876. Mr. Grant is a man of strong character, of slow and deliberate action, quiet and retiring in his nature, accepting positions of trust and honor as a duty rather than for personal gratification, and his greatest energy is displayed in matters pertaining to the welfare of his church.

BRENTWOOD.

Geographical—Topographical—Early Inhabitants—Documentary History—Meeting-House—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Baptist Church—Military History.

THE town of Brentwood lies near the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Epping, on the east by Exeter, on the south by Kingston, and on the west by Frenont.

The surface of the town is broken, and the soil is fertile and well adapted to the raising of grass and grain. It is watered by Exeter, Little, and Deer Rivers. There are deposits of iron ore in this town.

Early Inhabitants.—The following is a list of early inhabitants, as shown by a document among the State records under date July 11, 1743. It relates to the formation of the parish, and is as follows:

"BRENTWOOD, JULY 11, 1743.

"We the Subscribers Do hereby signify that we Realy Expect-ed and also Desired to stand by the Act of the General Court in making of a Parish But yet we perceive that the hon<sup>ble</sup> Corte have bin Enfoyned by Sundry Parsons that the major Part of the Parish are Dissatisfy'd in what is done in that affair this is to Shew it is not so.

The following is a Petition of the inhabitants of the north part of Brentwood about a meeting-house:

"Many of us living four or five Miles Distant from Exeter meeting House, have attended the Publick Worship of God at that House for many years past, with great Diligency, & our Families Encreasing made it much more difficult especially in the Winter Spring and fall of the year. Wherefore About eight years ago we with several of the Southerly part of said Parish Elected a House for the Publick Worship of God in the most suitable place as they then tho't and we now do think to Carry on the Publick Worship in And accordingly at our own charge have Carried on the Same in the Winter, Spring & fall of the year ever since as we had for four years, or thereabouts before Erecting said House carryed on the Publick Worship in a Private House Standing neare our Publick Meeting House.

"And about Last February was twice month, the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Southerly part of Brentwood aforesaid Petitioned the Town of Exeter aforesaid to be set off as a Parish contrary to the will & desire of most of us, & said Town of Exeter Granted there said Petition, notwithstanding many of us Dissented therefrom. And there said Petition being Granted, they afterwards applied to your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> for a Charter for said Parish, which was granted them contrary to our Desire, and greatly to our hurt. And we also having Earnestly Petitioned your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> that we might be permitted to Continue to Carry on the Publick Worship of God in our said House, and to be set off by such Boundaries as your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> Should think meet, & to be Ex-empted from all Charge towards the meeting and ministry in the Southerly pt of said Parish, as by our Petition lying before yr Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> in your Hon<sup>ble</sup> Court may appear. Which Petition the Hon<sup>ble</sup> House of Representatives have seen meet to Dismiss And also your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> having appointed a Committee of four Gen<sup>l</sup> two out of Each House to Pexify the place where the meeting House ought to Stand. Three of said Gen<sup>l</sup> have been and made Return but is accounted void by your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup>. For that the Comtee did not all Joy in their Return & for which Reason our Petition was also Dismiss<sup>d</sup>. Wherefore our case at present Seems very hard & Difficult, we having been at such cost to Erect our said House and to maintain Preaching in it hitherto & the Minister also who hath hitherto preached to us being at our Earnest desire willing to Continue with us in the Ministry. If your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> will in your great Wisdom take this our Remonstrance of our Difficult Circumstances in our Present Meeting House not being Established & our aforesaid Petition not being Granted & the great Charges and Difficulties we hitherto have and still do Labour under, under your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> wise Consideration & be pleased to grant us Relief herein as in your Great Wisdom you shall see meet And as in Duty Bound we your Excell<sup>y</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> most obedient Humble servants shall ever Pray &c.

"Petition of Elisha Sanborn about Brentwood 1745.

"To the Hon<sup>ble</sup> the House of Representatives for the Province of New Hampshire in General assembly convened April 29th 1745.

"The Petition of Elisha Sanborn of the Parish of Brentwood In Said Province Yeoman as agent for said Parish Humbly Shews.

"That the Said Parish was made & Incorporated by an act of the Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly made & passed in y<sup>e</sup> sixteenth Year of His Majestys Reign by Metes & Bounds set forth in said act being before part of the old Parish of Town of Exeter. That Since the said Parish was so Incorporated His Excellency the Governor has been pleas'd (& with the advice of the Council) to grant a Charter for Erecting and Incorporating part of the afores<sup>d</sup> parish of Brentwood Into another Parish by the name of Keenborough whereby great part of the Inhabitants of Brentwood have themselves Discharged from paying Taxes & Doing any other Duty within the Parish of Brentwood & Claim the powers authority & Priviledges of a Parish within the Limits given by the said Charter the consequence of which is many persons are doubly tax'd & great Debates & Strifes have & are likely to arise. That the Parishioners of Brentwood apprehend that not only their powers authority & priviledges are made null if the said Charter be good, but the act of Incorporation aforesaid is also defeated & superseded which greatly affects the Rights & Priviledges of this House & in them all the King's subjects in this province. That the said Parishioners foresee a wide Field of Law opening before them hereby (one of their Number having been already Imprisoned for Rates made in Consequence of the afores<sup>d</sup> Charter) which they Should be glad to avoid if it could be without giving up their Just Rights Wherefore your Petitioner in behalf of his principals prays the advancement of this Hon<sup>ble</sup> House in the premises that some scheme may be Pursued In Conjunction with the other Branches of the Legislature as may settle these Disputes (but just beginning) upon such a foundation as is agreeable to the Constitution & on which a lasting peace may be built & Your Petitioner In behalf of his Constituents Shall Ever pray &c.

"To His Excell the Govt and the Hon<sup>ble</sup> the Council May it Please your EX<sup>ty</sup> Honors.

"On the 29th Day of the last month Elisha Sanborn of y<sup>e</sup> parish of Brentwood in sd prov. Yeoman as agent for said Parish represented to the House in way of Petition that the said Parish &c. there recite the Petition at large.

"Which Petition of the said Elisha in Part above recited we have taken into our most mature Consideration together with authenticated copies of the said act and Charter mentioned in said Petition with such other Evidence as the Petitioner has thought fit to lay before this House in support thereof, by which it manifestly appears to us, that there was an act of Law made and past by the Gov<sup>l</sup> Council and represent<sup>ts</sup> of this Province dated the      day of      17      by which a Part of the Town of Exeter was incorporated into a Parish named of Brentwood by metes and Bounds, and that the Inhabitants within said Bounds, were to duty Parish Duty, and to enjoy parity priviledges in said Brentwood, and were exonerated from parish Duty in the Parishes whereto they belonged before the Date of said Law. That Discontent soon arose among the Parishioners of sd Brentwood about the Place of fixing their meeting House, which occasioned a new Petition to the Governor Council and Gen. assembly dated the      day of      17      for a minor Part of said Parishioners prayer, to have the said Parish divided into two Parishes but that which was offered in support thereof appearing frivolous to the General assembly, the said Petition was by them ordered to be dismissed. That afterwards on the      day of      17      The discontented Party petitioned anew to His EX<sup>ty</sup> and Council regarding the General assembly (one Branch of the Legislature) praying again for a Division of sd Brentwood into two Parishes, which your EX<sup>ty</sup> and Council without the Gen<sup>l</sup> assembly were pleas'd to take Cognizance of, and on the      day of      17      to grant a Charter under the Province Seal to the said Petitioners, incorporating another Parish named Keenborough by metes and Bounds and exonerating the Inhabitants of said Keenborough from their Parish Duty in Brentwood which they were obliged to do and perform there by Law, which charter so far this House looks upon as an attempt to abrogate and supersede a Law in Force, and hereby an open Estripation of a Power appertaining to the Gen<sup>l</sup> assy in Conjunction with the Gov<sup>l</sup> and Coun. and a manifest invasion of the Just rights and Priviledges of the People whom we represent, and an Infringent on the rights of the Parishioners of Brentwood, and an oppression of them in particular, which we think ourselves obliged to take notice of in Duty to His Majesty, in faithfulness to our Constituents and in Justice & Honour to ourselves and to remonstrate against it. We do therefore earnestly request your EX<sup>ty</sup> and Honors, seronally to reconsider this matter, and to recall the Keenborough Grant and thereby put an end to the Strifes already commenced, and a stop to others ready to break out in consequence thereof and also to save this House the Trouble of saying or acting further on upon it, for as we are the representatives of a free protestant People and as such the Guardians of their Priviledges, we esteem ourselves obliged to make a stand agt every attempt made to deprive them of their Just Rights, and particularly we shall think ourselves necessary in case your EX<sup>ty</sup> and Hon<sup>ble</sup> should not relieve us if we should not apply to His most Excellent majesty who is graciously pleas'd to esteem his own Pre-rogatives and his Subjects Priviledges equally dear to him for a remedy, and we esteem ourselves more especially obliged to take this step (if your EX<sup>ty</sup> & Hon<sup>ble</sup> don't prevent it) as it is not the first Instance wherein your Excellency has attempted to invade our rights. Witness your Endeavours to get the provincial Records of Deeds into your Hands, or at least to have the Disposal of them, which are no other than the Peoples Evidences of their Titles to their Land Estates and therefore according to the rules of common sense and Reason, ought to be in their own several keepings it could be, but as it can't they ought to be disposed of by them who are the Proprietors of their Evidences as well as of their Estates. Another Instance was your Excellency's Endeavor to augment the number of members of this House by your own near arbitrary Power, without any Law enabling you so to, or any colour of authority from His majesty for your so doing, that was ever made known to us, to which may be added your Excellency's causing a number of men to seat on y<sup>e</sup> west side of merrimack River last summer before a Grant was made for their Pay and Subsistence, and which we humbly apprehend your Excellency could not rationally expect ever would be and the contents remain to this Day without wages and those that subsisted them without their pay for it whether this is not oppressive we leave to the wisest Judges to determine. Proceedings of this nature will cast no blame on us, but it gives us Concern, that any office must bear the Records of such Conduct were it possible for us to entertain so dishon<sup>o</sup> a Thought as that a Vote could be past at the Council Board, and the Voters not be fully apprised of your directions without maturely deliberating on the materials it was built with we should have at Once concluded, that the Vote for Keenborough Charter was such an one. May it please y<sup>r</sup> Ex and Hon<sup>o</sup> we crave Leave to repeat our request to you for a reconsideration of the Keenborough affair and that you will be pleased to do what is just and right therein to quiet the minds of the People to stay the Strifes already begun and to prevent other Divisions as are like to arise—we are Zealously concerned that Love and Peace may be cultivated in the Province and a Harmony in the administration, that the Prerogative may always rest secure that the Intrusions made on our Privileges may be headed, and that they may ever hereafter remain safe and inviolate."

Congregational Church.—Brentwood was originally a part of Exeter, and was incorporated June 26, 1742. Previous to this a meeting-house had been erected in what is now the easterly part of Brentwood. The first pastor of the Congregational Church in Brentwood was Rev. Nathaniel Trask, from Lexington, Mass. He came to Brentwood in 1747. A church was organized in 1748, and Mr. Trask was ordained Dec. 12, 1748. There was a meeting-house built near the centre of the town in 1750, where the present Congregational meeting-house now stands. A church was organized at the Centre July 12th, O. S., or July 23, N. S., 1751. These two churches united in one, and Rev. Mr. Trask was installed pastor of this united church and minister of the town, Jan. 7, O. S., or Jan. 18, N. S., 1756, and Rev. Ward Cotton, from Hampton, preached on the occasion from Col. iv. 17. Mr. Trask was dismissed from his pastoral charge July 30, 1787, on account of inability to preach, arising from a disorder in his head. Mr. Trask's ministry in the town was about forty years. He died in Brentwood, Dec. 12, 1789, aged sixty-eight years. During the time between Mr. Trask's dismissal and the second pastor's settlement there was a large number of candidates employed. Rev. Ebenezer Flint, from Methuen, Mass., was the second pastor of this church, ordained May 27, 1801. He was a man much respected and beloved by his people. He died suddenly, Oct. 12, 1811, aged forty-two years, leaving a wife and four small children. Mr. Flint's ministry here was some more than ten years.

On the 21st of July, 1813, Rev. Chester Colton, from Hartford, Conn., commenced his labors here, and was ordained pastor of this church Jan. 25, 1815. Rev. William F. Rowland, from Exeter, preached from 1 Cor. i. 21. The meeting-house, which was built in 1750, was taken down, and a new one built on the same spot in 1815. The Congregational parsonage house, which is now occupied by Rev. W. C. Jackson, was also built in 1815. The Sabbath-school was organized in the spring of 1817, and Thomas S. Robinson was the first superintendent. Mr. Colton secured to himself the warmest attachment of his people, and his labors were greatly blessed. He was dismissed at his own request, on account of inflammation of the eyes, March 16, 1825. After regaining the use of his eyes, he preached a while in Connecticut, and afterwards as a missionary to the West, where he died Sept. 15, 1850, aged sixty-six years. The fourth pastor of this church was Rev. Luke A. Spofford, from Gilmanton, N. H., installed Feb. 22, 1826, and Rev. Abraham Burnham, from Pembroke, N. H., preached from John v. 35. Mr. Spofford asked and received a dismissal, April 1, 1829. He died in Rockville, Ind., Oct. 10, 1855. After the dismissal of Mr. Spofford this people enjoyed the labors of Rev. Jonathan Ward, from Plymouth, N. H., as acting pastor, until the autumn of 1833. Rev. Mr. Ward died in Brentwood, Feb. 23, 1860. The fifth pastor of this church was Rev. Francis Welch, from Hampstead, N. H. He was ordained Dec. 4, 1833, and Rev. John Smith, from Exeter, preached the sermon. He was dismissed Oct. 4, 1837. The sixth pastor of this church was Rev. John Gunnison, from New Market, N. H., who began to preach here in October, 1837, and was installed June 12, 1837. Rev. Luther F. Dimmick, from the North Church in Newburyport, Mass., preached the sermon. His labors were greatly blessed here. He was dismissed June 8, 1841. He died in Rochester, N. Y. The seventh pastor of this church was Rev. James Boutwell, from Lyndeborough, N. H. Mr. Boutwell commenced his labors here July 11, 1841, and was ordained Nov. 4, 1841, and Rev. John L. Taylor, from Andover, Mass., preached the ordination sermon from 1 Pet. i. 12. James P., son of Rev. James and Mary P. Boutwell, died Oct. 31, 1844, aged four years. In 1847 the interior of the meeting-house that was built in 1815 was remodeled. When this meeting-house was first built the audience-room was two stories high; the gallery was high three ways round the room; the pulpit was so exceedingly high as to tire the necks and eyes of those who sat nearest the pulpit to look at the minister; the pews were square; the seats that kind that had hinges, and of course must be turned up when the congregation rose for prayers. The second story is now a hall, used for town and society business. The pews in the audience-room are long, the pulpit low, the gallery small, exclusively for the choir. Nov. 11, 1847, this meeting-house was re-dedicated to the worship of God, and Rev. Mr. Boutwell preached the dedicatory sermon from Exod. xx. 24. Mr. Boutwell sustained the pastoral office among this people for more than ten years. He continued during his stay to retain his hold upon their affections. He was highly esteemed by them, and his departure was deeply regretted. He was dismissed May 12, 1852. He died in Sanbornton, N. H., April 21, 1865, aged fifty years and eleven months. Rev. Josiah M. Stearns, from New Ipswich, N. H., supplied the pulpit as acting pastor from Sept. 26, 1852, to June 12, 1853, when his useful life terminated in death, aged thirty-four years. Rev. Asa Mann, from Exeter, preached his funeral sermon from 2 Cor. iv. 7. His remains were carried to New Ipswich to be buried.

The eighth pastor of this church was Rev. Charles Dame, from South Berwick, Me., installed May 17, 1854. Charles, son of Rev. Charles and Nancy J. Dame, died Dec. 28, 1854, aged three years. Through the efforts of Mr. Dame, a bell was purchased and put in the belfry of the meeting-house, April 18, 1855, and also a chandelier, which was put in the meeting-house June 27, 1855. Rev. Mr. Dame was dismissed Nov. 12, 1856. Rev. Mr. Allen, from South Berwick, Me., preached the sermon at the installation of Mr. Dame from 1 Peter iv. 11. The ninth pastor of this church was Rev. Hugh McLeod, a native of Nova Scotia, came from Springfield, Ohio, to Brentwood, and commenced his labors here Dec. 13, 1857, and was installed Feb. 17, 1859, and Rev. Leonard S. Parker, from Haverhill, Mass., preached the sermon from 2 Cor. iv. 4. His labors here were greatly blessed. The reason he gave for asking a dismission was that he had a call from the Christian Commission to go and labor in the United States service. He was dismissed Oct. 16, 1865. Rev. Nathaniel Lassell, from Amesbury, Mass., was the acting pastor from July 29, 1866, to Aug. 29, 1869. He died in Amesbury, Mass., Feb. 4, 1880, aged sixty-six years. Rev. William C. Jackson, a native of Madison, N. H., commenced his labors here July 10, 1870, and has been the acting pastor of this church for more than eleven years. Abbie Isabella, daughter of Rev. William C. and Mary A. Jackson, died May 3, 1881, aged twenty-nine years.

Physicians.—The following is a list of physicians who have lived and practiced in Brentwood: Dr. Thomas Peabody, died Nov. 28, 1777, aged thirty years; Dr. Thomas Stowe Ranney, moved to Newport, Me., and died February, 1820; Dr. Joseph Dalton came from Deerfield to Brentwood in 1818, and was the practicing physician in Brentwood and some of the adjoining towns until removed by death Dec. 25, 1856, aged sixty-six years. Dr. Moses W. Caverly came from Gilmanton to Brentwood, Aug. 25, 1857, and has been the practicing physician to the present time, March, 1882.

Baptist Church.—A meeting-house had been erected in the northwest part of the town previous to 1768. May 2, 1771, a church was organized of thirteen members as follows: William Eastman, Stephen Sleeper, Levi Morrill, Edward Smith, Stephen Butler, Alerdo Carter, John Folsom, Jeremiah Ward, Ellis Towle, Martha Marston, Molly Morrill, Abigail French, and Elizabeth Sleeper.

Levi Morrill was chosen clerk, and Stephen Sleeper deacon. Dr. Samuel Shepard was called May 23d to take charge of this church and its branches at Strat-ham and Nottingham, and he was ordained at Strat-ham the last Wednesday of September of that year. Dr. Shepard's pastorate extended over a period of forty-four years, when he died Nov. 4, 1815, aged seventy-six years, four months, and thirteen days, and was buried only a short distance from the place where he had preached so long.

After Dr. Shepard's death the pulpit was supplied by Rev. Jonathan Thyng, Benjamin Pottle, Henry Veasey, Reuben Bell, and Elder Cheney. Rev. Jonathan Thyng died in Brentwood Dec. 21, 1840, aged eighty years. Rev. Henry Veasey, a native of Brentwood, died in Bow, April 4, 1825, aged thirty-nine years and six months. Rev. Samuel Cook commenced his labors in Brentwood June 3, 1827. In 1828 the old wooden meeting-house was taken down and a new brick one erected, but not exactly on the same spot, the new one being on the north side of the road directly opposite from the old site. The new brick church was dedicated Nov. 4, 1828. The first anniversary of the Portsmouth Baptist Association was held at the new Baptist meeting-house in Brentwood, Oct. 7 and 8, 1829. The parsonage house was built in 1832. Mr. Cook was dismissed May 1, 1835. He died in Concord, N. H., Feb. 15, 1872, aged eighty-one years.

Rev. James W. Poland was publicly recognized as pastor of this church May 11, 1836, Rev. Samuel Cook preaching the sermon from Psalms lxxiii. 2. Mr. Poland was dismissed in October, 1838, on account of ill health. In April, 1839, Rev. John Holbrook was obtained as his successor. In the latter part of 1840 a gracious revival was enjoyed. Soon after the pastor resigned. He died in Somerville, Mass., Aug. 13, 1879, aged eighty years. Bro. Horace Eaton, a recent graduate of New Hampton Institution, supplied the desk a while in 1841.

In April, 1842, Rev. Abel Philbrick became pastor, and the next year the Portsmouth Baptist Association held its fifteenth anniversary with this church. The past year this church has been visited by death, three of their valuable members having been called home to heaven.

In October, 1844, Rev. A. M. Swain was the pastor, remaining until 1849. He was succeeded by Rev. J. H. Learned. In the winter of 1853-54 a revival was enjoyed; the pastor was assisted by Rev. John Peacock in holding a meeting of several days, when many were hopefully converted. Much to the regret of his people, Bro. Learned was obliged, on account of ill health, to close his labors with this church in the spring of 1854. In 1855, Rev. A. M. Swain was again called to minister to this people. In 1857 he talks of leaving, but it is hoped he will not. He preached his farewell sermon Oct. 24, 1858; his text was 1 Chronicles xxviii. 9. In the spring of 1859, Rev. William H. Jones was settled here as the pastor of this church. He closed his labors in February, 1861. June 27, 1861, Leonard B. Hatch was installed pastor, and labored there very acceptably for two years, when he resigned, preaching here for the last time May 31, 1863. Jesse M. Coburn was the next pastor, coming here some time in 1863, remaining until July 1, 1866. Rev. H. G. Hubbard was his successor; was here for two years, and preached his farewell sermon Nov. 8, 1868. His departure was deeply regretted by his people.

During the next year somewhat extensive repairs were made on the inside of the church building, and on their completion, in August, 1869, the Rev. Charles D. Swett received and accepted a call to become pastor of this church. He remained here four years. During his ministry the church celebrated their centennial, he preaching a sermon on the occasion. He delivered this sermon Oct. 19, 1871, the church being one hundred years old February 2d previous.

In October, 1873, Rev. J. H. Learned received and accepted a call to become pastor again for the second time, which position he held for three years, and resigned again in the fall of 1876 on account of ill health. Dec. 10, 1876, E. L. Scott accepted a call to this church, and was ordained here March 6, 1877, and closed his labors Oct. 14, 1877. Rev. C. H. Newhall succeeded him, and was pastor for three years, when he resigned. Oct. 31, 1880, Rev. George Ober was given a very unanimous call to become pastor of this old church and accepted; he began his labors Feb. 6, 1881, and is the present pastor.

This church is now (May, 1882) one hundred and eleven years old. Its Great Head has thus far preserved it through its changes. Its present membership is ninety-eight.

In the old records it is not ascertained when the first deacon (Deacon Sleeper) died, but of later ones the following is the record: Deacon Jonathan Veasey died Nov. 9, 1833, aged seventy-five; Deacon Edward Tuck died April 30, 1843, aged seventy-nine; Deacon Benjamin Veasey died March 16, 1868, aged seventy-nine; Deacon Israel S. Tuck died Sept. 25, 1872, aged seventy-one; Deacon Benjamin Veasey, Jr., died April 16, 1879, aged fifty-one. Present deacons, William T. Bean and Ira Thyng. Present clerk, D. O. Waldron.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

ROBERT ROWE.

Robert Rowe was born in Brentwood, N. H., June 12, 1810. He is descended from one Robert Rowe, who resided in Kensington, N. H., prior to 1739. This original Robert was a farmer. He had twelve children, ten sons and two daughters; he was a captain of militia, and it may be mentioned as a remarkable fact that at one time all of his ten sons were members of his militia company. One of his sons was named Robert, born in Kensington in 1726, married in 1749 a Miss Abigail Tilton. They had two sons and two daughters,—Robert and Simon, Lovey and Aphia. He also was a farmer, and came to Brentwood between 1739 and 1749, and settled on the farm which the present Robert now owns. He was many years deacon of the Congregational Church, and was very rigid in his behavior and deportment, particularly so in his observance of the Sabbath. He was selectman of his town, and held various other town offices. Simon, his son, was born in Brentwood 1751, and in 1776 married Mary Morrison, of Haverhill, Mass. Their children were Jonathan, Simon, David, Benjamin, Anna, and Miriam. The last named of the sons is still living in Giltford, N. H. He (Simon) was a farmer, and died in the prime of life. Jonathan, his eldest son, was born in Brentwood, 1777; he married, in 1805, Anna Robinson, daughter of Joseph Robinson, of Brentwood. They had three sons,—Robert, whose portrait appears in connection with this sketch; Simon, born March 28, 1806; and Joseph, born Aug. 6, 1813. Jonathan was a farmer and surveyor; he was also a teacher of music, and for many years a teacher in the common schools. He led the choir in the Baptist Church forty consecutive years. In politics he was a Federalist and Whig, was selectman many years, and was one of the prominent local men of his day. He died 1845, his widow surviving him. The present Robert Rowe received whatever educational advantages the district schools of his town could furnish, and in addition to this private instruction from his father, under whose tutelage he learned surveying and other branches not then taught in the common schools. He resided on the farm with his father until his seventeenth year, when he apprenticed himself to one John Fifield to learn carpentering. This apprenticeship continued three years, when young Rowe went to Lynn, Mass., where he worked at his trade three summers, returning home during the winter months and manufacturing clap-boards, having introduced the first machine for that purpose ever used in the town of Brentwood. He continued this business winters and carpentering summers a few years, when he started business where he now continues. He began by manufacturing clap-boards, shingles, doors, sash, and blinds; this he followed several years, when he added the manufacture of wheels. The business has now grown to large proportions, and under the firm-name of Robert Rowe & Sons they manufacture wheels, bodies, seats, and gears. They employ from fifteen to twenty workmen, and their sales amount to twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars per year. He married, Dec. 25, 1834, Sally T., daughter of Henry Sinclair, of Brentwood; she was born Sept. 18, 1813. Their children are Harriet E. (deceased), wife of Aaron Brown, of Fremont; she died leaving one daughter named Nellie. Jonathan S., who enlisted in Company I, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, and lost his life at the battle of Fredericksburg, Va.; James H., Joseph R., and George R. These three sons are in business with their father, and as an evidence of the standing of the family in the community, it may be stated that the father and each of the three sons are an incumbent of some town office. In politics Mr. Rowe has always been an outspoken Democrat. Belonging to the weaker political party, he has frequently been chosen as its candidate for county offices, and always ran ahead of his ticket, thus showing conclusively the esteem in which he is held by his fellow-citizens. He is a trustee of the Swampscot Savings-Bank of Exeter, and has been from its organization. He is an attendant and supporter of the Baptist Church, and has been through life an enterprising, industrious, persevering man, conscientious in his dealings, economical in his habits, sincere in his friendships, unassuming in his manners; with a justifiable and commendable pride of character and family, he stands a representative of the better type of New England's worthy manhood. Of his three living sons, James H., born Sept. 1, 1844, married, August, 1868, Emma P., daughter of David Little. They have two children, Annie and John M. Joseph R., born Jan. 1, 1846, married, Sept. 6, 1871, Abby, daughter of John R. Robinson. They have one child, Lillian. George R., born Feb. 22, 1849, married, July 3, 1870, Betsy J., daughter of Lewis B. Gordon. They have two children, George Russell and Robert G.

SAMUEL MORRILL.

Samuel Morrill is descended from one Abram Morrill, who came from England to Boston, and belonged to what was then called the "Honorably Artillery." William Morrill, Esq., grandfather of Samuel, was born 1735. He was a farmer; was a Federalist in politics. Married Lydia Trask; they had eight children, viz.: Abram, William, Nathaniel, Jonathan, Nancy, Sarah, Eleanor, and ——. He died Jan. 28, 1812. William Morrill, his son, was born in 1768; was reared on farm; was twice married, first to Mary Gordon, born 1768, died May 26, 1799. They had four children.—Nathaniel, born July 23, 1791, died Nov. 3, 1791; Dolly, born April 6, 1794, married Samuel Dudley, died July 30, 1832; Zebecoe, born July 10, 1796, married Lucy Potter, died Oct. 18, 1854; and Mary, born April 25, 1798, married Capt. John Fifield, died Oct. 4, 1861.

Capt. William Morrill married for his second wife Elizabeth Dudley, born 1775, died 1865. They had seven children, viz.: Sally Dudley, born April 25, 1798, married Henry Marshall; Samuel, born March 29, 1803; John Dudley, born July 25, 1805, married, first, Lavinia Robinson, second, Ruth Stevens, died July 19, 1875; Anna, born July 20, 1807, died Dec. 30, 1869; William, born April 2, 1810, married Mary Ann Tuck, Dec. 20, 1838, died Nov. 7, 1842; Washington, born Jan. 3, 1813; Frederick, born Aug. 24, 1815, married Mrs. Annie Hungerford, died Dec. 29, 1872.

Capt. William Morrill derives his title from having been captain of a militia company. In politics he was a Whig; he held the various town offices in his time, and was a member of the Congregational Church. He died Aug. 22, 1838. William Morrill, Jr., had three children.—Catharine Louisa, born Nov. 5, 1839; Marietta, born March 31, 1841; William Henry, born Oct. 5, 1842, was a member of Company E, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and lost his life in the battle of Williamsburg, Va., May 5, 1862, aged nineteen years.

Samuel Morrill, whose portrait appears herewith, grew to manhood on the farm with his father, receiving only such educational advantages as the schools of his native town afforded. At the age of twenty-one he left the paternal home and went to Gilford, N. H., and engaged in farming, remaining there about twenty years. He married Miss Lydia Sanborn, of Brentwood, born December, 1802. They have two children,—Chester C., born Aug. 3, 1827, and Caroline F., born July, 1831. Chester C. married Arvilla O. Robinson, daughter of Jonathan Robinson, and resides now in Sparta, Wis.

Mr. Morrill is a Republican in politics, and was representative to Legislature in 1851-52. Has held various town offices, and stands high in the respect and esteem of his acquaintances. He is spending life's autumn at the old homestead, which has been in the possession of the family more than ninety years.

JONATHAN MORRILL.

Jonathan Morrill is eighth in line of descent from Abraham Morrill, who emigrated from England and settled in the town of Salisbury, Mass., about the year 1660. He was one of the pioneers of that ancient settlement, a man of sterling character, and noted for his many virtues. Jonathan Morrill was born May 28, 1786, in Brentwood, N. H. He received a fairly liberal education for that day, and as he grew up to manhood developed in a marked degree the many virtues for which his ancestors had been noted. He was a farmer, and also for several years was engaged in manufacturing carding-machines for carding wool. He held the office of selectman thirteen years, between the years 1818 and 1845, and also other town offices. He represented Brentwood in the Legislature two years, and was elected to the State Senate in 1843 and 1844. Mr. Morrill was an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, honest and upright in all his dealings, and highly esteemed for his sterling worth and the strict integrity of his character. In politics he was a Democrat. He died leaving behind him one daughter, Sarah M., born May 27, 1834, died May, 1880. She was a very intelligent lady, and among other effects left at her death quite an interesting and extensive cabinet of natural curiosities and antiquarian specimens.

Justus J. Bean, who inserts accompanying portrait and pays this tribute to the memory of Jonathan Morrill, was born in Danville, N. H., Jan. 28, 1830. He resided there until about six years of age, then went to Raymond, where he remained a while; thence to Fremont, where he lived till the age of twenty-one. He lived with Albert Brown fifteen years, then came to live with Esq. Morrill, and remained with him to the time of the old gentleman's demise. Upon the death of Mr. Morrill his property descended to his daughter, and a few years later she, dying childless, rewarded the constancy Mr. Bean had shown to the family by bequeathing to him the entire estate, valued at several thousand dollars.

SAMUEL PRESCOTT.

Samuel Prescott was born Nov. 10, 1809. His father was Jeremiah Prescott, who was a farmer, and who lived and owned the land where the county farm is now located. He was twice married, and had seven children by first wife and two by latter, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Chase. Samuel was one of the children by this second marriage. His father died when he was about seven years of age, and the family being left in poor circumstances, Samuel at the tender age of eight years stepped from under the ancestral roof to seek and carve his own fortune. He passed through many vicissitudes and changed his home many times before he arrived at the age of manhood. He managed, however, to secure a fair education at the common schools of his town, and on Jan. 15, 1838, he married Mary E., daughter of Eliphalet Robinson, of Brentwood. She was born Dec. 10, 1818, and they were married by Rev. John Gunnison. Immediately after his marriage he went to Newport, Me., and engaged in farming. His health became very poor, however, and after four or five years he gave up farming. He lived in Maine about fourteen years, then returned to his native town and engaged in farming, milling, and also occasionally worked at carriage-building. Their children were as follows: James B., born Oct. 8, 1838; Samuel C., born April 10, 1843, died Dec. 3, 1854; Mary E., born Oct. 31, 1849; an infant, born June 16, 1859, died a few weeks later; Howard L., born April 11, 1864. James B. married Hannah D. Clifford, in Boston, Dec. 29, 1860. They have one child, George B., born Aug. 2, 1862. Mary E. married Charles Snyder, of New York City, Nov. 24, 1870, in Brentwood, by Rev. C. D. Sweatt. Children: Charles B., born June 19, 1872, and Byron P., born Sept. 27, 1874. Charles Snyder was born Oct. 8, 1837, in New York City. When he grew up he learned carpentering, and engaged in business with a partner. They were for a time very successful, but just prior to the civil war, when the great financial panic came and nearly all business in New York was suspended, he closed out his shop. Nothing better offering, he enlisted in the Metropolitan police force. In about a year he was appointed to the position of detective, and shortly after to roundsman. After a year or two he was appointed sergeant of police, which position he held to the time of his death, which occurred very suddenly from paralysis. He died in New York City, Nov. 12, 1880, and was brought to and interred in Brentwood Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Prescott reside with their daughter, Mrs. Snyder, at the old homestead, and to Mrs. Snyder's credit be it said she surrounds them with all the comforts and conveniences calculated to make their remaining days pass as pleasantly as possible.

She has two promising boys, and is giving them the advantages of an education, reasoning rightly that it is the best legacy she can bequeath them.

CHAPTER XX.

CANDIA.

Geographical—Topographical—Names of Early Settlers—Bounds of the Town—First Town Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary History—Ecclesiastical History—Free-Will Baptist Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Educational—Early Roads—College Graduates—Military History.

THE town of Candia lies in the western part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Deerfield; on the east by Raymond; on the south by Chester and Auburn; and on the west by Merrimac County. The surface of the town is elevated, and the soil hard of cultivation.

The town of Candia was settled in about 1743. Among the pioneers were Daniel McClure, William Turner, Benjamin Smith, Winthrop Wells, John, Theophilus, and Jacob Sargent, Dr. Samuel Moore, Enoch Rowell, and Obeladon Hull. William Turner purchased his lot in 1741, and there is a tradition that his daughter Sarah was the first white child born in the town.

A petition was presented to the General Assembly, dated March 22, 1763, praying to be set off as a distinct parish, signed by the following persons, who probably constituted most of the voters in town: Benjamin Bachelder, Samuel Moores, Jonathan Hills, Samuel Towle, Nicklas Smith, Jonathan Towle, Nathl Ingalls, Theophilus Clough, John Karr, Thomas Chretchet, Samuel Eastman, John Clay, Moses Baker, Theop. Sargent, Stephen Webster, Joseph Smith, Jeremiah Bean, Zebedee Berry, Phineas Towle, William Turner, Winthrop Wells, Abraham Fitts, Sherburn Rowe, Asel Quimby, Gilman Dudley, Zachariah Clifford, Enoch Colby, Moses Smart, Nathl Emerson, John Sargent, Jonathan Bean, Benj. Smith, James McClure, Stephen Palmer, Jacob Sargent, Ichabod Robie, Elisha Bean, David Hills.

The prayer was granted and a charter given, dated Dec. 17, 1763. The boundaries were as follows:

"Beginning at the North East Corner of said Parish, on the Line of the Township of Nottingham at a Hemlock tree, at the head of the Old Hundred-acre Lots; then runs South twenty Nine Degrees West, joining to said lots as they are Entered on the Proprietors' Records, about four miles to a stake and stones; then West North West to a Maple Tree, being the North East bounds of the Lott Number forty-three, in the Second part of the Second Division, and continuing the same course by towerhill pond to a stake and stones, which completes five miles and a half upon this course; then North Twenty Nine Degrees East to a Pitch Pipe, which is the South West Boundary of the Eighty acre lott in the Third Division, Number one hundred twenty-three; then North twenty Nine Degrees East to Nottingham Line, and then on that Line to the Hemlock Tree first mentioned."

Samuel Emerson, Esq., was appointed to call the first meeting. The meeting was holden March 13, 1764.

Moderator, Dr. Samuel Moores,
Parish Clerk, Dr. Samuel Moores.
Constable, Winthrop Wells.

Selectmen, Lieut. Benjamin Bachelder, John Sargent, Jeremiah Bean.

Tythingman, John Clay.

Surveyors of Highways, Lieut. Samuel Towle, Moses Baker, Elisha Bean, Zebedee Berry.

Fence-Viewers, Matthew Ramsey, Stephen Webster.

Hwards, Stephen Palmer, Moses Smart.

Deer Inspectors, Theophilus Clough, Jonathan Bean.

Committee to Examine the Selectmen's Accompts, Stephen Webster, Walter Robie, Nathaniel Emerson.

On the first leaf of the old records is the following:

"A Parish Book of Records, No. 1, Kept by Samuel Moores, Esq., from the Incorporation of said Parish up to October, 1763, and at his Decease succeeded by Samuel Moores, Jr., and kept until March, 1798; and then by Walter Rolap, Esq. until March, 1809; and then by Richard Emerson until the month of October, 1806, when he Deceased; and then by John Lane until March, 1820; and then by Peter Eaton until March, 1831; and then by Frederick Fitts until March, 1832; and then by S. A. Sargent until March, 1836; and then by Dr. Samuel Sargent until Feb. 1840."

The old book closed in 1807.

The selectmen the first year charge: "Paid Asahel Quimby for a constable's staff, £4." This was old tenor, equal to about sixty-seven cents. The staff is now in possession of Edmund Hills, Esq. It is of hard wood, about eighteen inches long, and an inch and a half in diameter, stained black, with a pewter ferule about three inches long on one end. It was a badge of office.

The town was formerly called Charmingfare, the first visitors being so well pleased with its site as a place of residence. It received its present name in honor of Governor Benning Wentworth, who was also a prisoner on the Isle of Candia in the Mediterranean Sea.

Building the Meeting-House.—At a meeting of the parish, held Sept. 8, 1766, "Voted, to build a meeting House.

"Voted, that the meeting house shall be set on or near the North west corner of the Parsonage lot, so called.

"Voted, that the meeting house frame shall be Begun upon the 22 Day of this instant September; John Clay, Walter Robie, Esq., Benja. Cass, Moses Baker, Jonathan Bean, Natl. Emerson, and Abraham Fitts, a Committee."

They voted to raise sixty pounds, to be paid in work at two shillings and sixpence per day for common hands, or in lumber, and to hire workmen, etc., the frame to be completed by the last day of October. If any did not pay in work or lumber the constable was to collect it in money. The house was to be forty-five feet wide and fifty-five feet long. Five pounds lawful money was voted to be raised, to be used by the committee, if needed.

At a meeting, Oct. 20, 1766,

"Voted, that the Selectmen shall Assess a Sufficient Sum to finish the meeting house Frame.

"Voted, That there Be Provided for Raising Supper, Codfish, Potatoes, and Butter."

At a meeting, Feb. 5, 1767, it was voted to sell the pew-ground for the wall pews, and William Baker,

Dr. Samuel Moores, and William Turner were chosen a committee to sell it, and take care that the frame be boarded, shingled, and underpinned. The pew-ground was sold Feb. 19, 1767.

Sept. 17, 1767, it was voted "to sell the ground for six more pews behind the men's and women's seats, in order to finish the outside of the meeting-house this fall as far as said pew-ground will go." It was sold Oct. 1, 1767. The purchase was to be paid in merchantable pine boards at eighteen shillings per thousand, and shingles at seven shillings per thousand, by the first day of June. The second sale, the same articles at the market price.

Nov. 23, 1767, it was voted "that the meeting-house shall be glazed this fall, as soon as may be conveniently done by way of assessment," and liberty was given to cut timber on the parsonage and school lots to make red-oak hog-head staves to defray the expense, "to be three feet eight inches long, and delivered at the meeting-house by the tenth day of February next."

Aug. 28, 1769, voted that the meeting-house committee build the men's and women's seats in the meeting-house.

June 15, 1773, voted that there shall be a pulpit built in six months. Jonathan Bagley dissented.

Feb. 21, 1775, it was voted to sell ground for pews in the gallery to the highest bidder, and the finishing the meeting-house to the lowest bidder.

March 9, 1779, "Voted that the Seats Shall be made in the Galleries, and the Brest work lined this season."

July 21, 1783, it was voted "that y<sup>e</sup> Brest work and seats in the Galleries in the meeting house be Built the Present Year." The committee "Shall Build a pew in the front Galleries, from Pillar to Pillar, for the use of Singers."

March 29, 1796, the question was taken about building a steeple and porch, and negatived, fifty-two to fifty-nine, but a vote was passed to give up the stairway and sell it for pew-ground, to go towards building a steeple and porch, provided a sufficient number of men can be found to build the rest of the steeple and porch. They were built.

March 9, 1802, it was voted to raise one hundred and twenty-five dollars to be annexed to what is subscribed towards purchasing a bell. It seems that Maj. Samuel Moore had purchased a weathercock of Mr. Jones, of Newburyport, and had failed to pay him; in 1802 the town voted to pay him.

The old house was burned Jan. 25, 1828, and the present one built the same year.

Hiring and Settling Ministers.—In the selectmen's account for 1764 is an item, "Paid John Clay for boarding the minister, £4."

1765. "Paid Mr. Gilman for preaching fourteen sabbaths £14. Theophilus Sargent going to Exeter after a minister, 5s. Lieut. Bachelder, going to Hampton after a minister, 4s. Theo. Clough, for going after a minister, 5s."

1766. Mr. Gilman, preaching twelve Sabbaths, Mr. Hillard, preaching four Sabbaths. There were some Presbyterians in the parish who probably asked not to be rated, and it was voted, "Concerning those persons that call themselves Presbyterians, past in the negative."

1767. John Clay, Ichabod Robie, and Moses Baker were chosen a committee to hire a minister, and Mr. Webster was paid for fifteen Sabbaths, £18.

1768. The former committee was re-elected, and £20 voted to hire preaching, and Mr. Gilman paid for fifteen and Mr. Hall two Sabbaths. Mr. Clay is paid for boarding Mr. Hall and his horse two weeks, and John Clay, Esquire Robie, Moses Baker, Ichabod Robie, and Abraham Fitts are paid for going after ministers.

June 8, 1768. "Voted, that there Shall be a minister Settled as soon as may be Conveniently done.

"Voted, that the Cant that is appointed to hire Preaching, shall appoint a day of Fasting and Prayer, in order to the Calling of a Gospel minister, and hire a minister upon probation or trial.

"Voted, that the Parish have Pitched upon Mr. Tristram Gilman as a minister, that the Committee shall hire upon trial in order to for settlement."

September, 1768, they voted to give Mr. Gilman "forty pounds for 1769; and two pounds ten shillings per ann. until it amounts to sixty pounds; that he shall have the improvement of half of the parsonage, and to bring more into cultivation, and to build a house suitable for a minister as soon as may be (conveniently done); afterwards, £5 per ann., till it amounts to £70."

November 7th, they voted him the whole of the parsonage. Mr. Gilman declined the call.

June 29, 1769, voted to raise £20, lawful, to be laid out in preaching, and Walter Robie, Dr. Samuel Moores, and Benjamin Cass were chosen a committee to lay out the money. Voted to make choice of one of the three ministers for further trial, and a "universal Choice" made of Mr. Jonathan Searle.

Aug. 28, 1769, the parish gave Mr. Searle a call, and offered him £40 and the use of the parsonage, and bring thirty acres under improvement and find him a convenient dwelling-house. Mr. Searle gave a negative answer.

Mr. Searle is paid for preaching ten Sabbaths, Mr. Joseph Currier for two, and Mr. Thomas Lancaster for four Sabbaths.

Nov. 26, 1770, it was voted "to give Mr. David Jewett a call to the work of the ministry amongst us, and to give him £50, lawful, the first year, and add £5 per year until it amounts to £65 per year, and that to be his stated salary, with the income of the parsonage; to finish the house, build a barn, and dig a well as soon as can conveniently be done." Mr. Jewett's answer was in the affirmative, and is upon the records.

Feb. 5, 1771, it was voted that he be ordained the first Wednesday of September next.

March 11, 1777.

"Voted, that all those persons that have heretofore joined with the Baptist Society in Deerfield, bring a Certificate within two months from this Date, from the assessors of said Baptist Society, that they were rated there, then the Selectmen of this parish are to make a Draw back of the minister rate the present year."

In the parish accounts the rates of the following persons were abated for 1776, they being Baptists: Benjamin Rowel, Benjamin Carr, Capt. John Sargent, Ensign Jonathan Bagley, Robert Smart, Jonathan Woodman, Edward Critchet, Thomas Critchet, and William Turner.

Feb. 8, 1779, "Voted that the Parish Desires Mr. Jewett to ask a Dismission from this People of the Pastoral Care and Charge he has taken upon him."

A committee was at the same time chosen to treat with Mr. Jewett. Money had depreciated in value, and in consequence, probably, Mr. Jewett asked for more salary.

May 27, 1779, "Voted unanimously not to make any addition to Mr. Jewett's Salary for the Present year."

"Voted, to Chuse a Committee of seven to Confer with Mr. Jewett, and see what he will take as to his Civil Contract with this People, and ask a Dismission by way of a Council from the Pastoral Care and Charge he had taken upon him."

Mr. Jewett probably made a communication, for June 10,

"Voted, not to act any thing upon the paper or letter Subscribed to the moderator of this, and Signed by Mr. Jewett, and read at this meeting."

Another committee was chosen and empowered to settle with Mr. Jewett as to the civil contract.

March 6, 1780, a vote was taken respecting making Mr. Jewett satisfaction by making up his salary. Negatived, forty-four to eighteen.

It appears that Mr. Jewett had made a proposition in writing to submit the matters in controversy to a mutual council of five statesmen. The parish chose the latter, and raised a committee of five to give and take bonds. The referees were chosen, but a part of them declined to attend, and Judge Weare advised another trial for settlement. Mr. Jewett made a long communication, and the parish voted to comply with his proposals. The currency had depreciated, and Mr. Jewett had built wall on the parsonage, which he claimed pay for. He was dismissed, and I have no further knowledge of him.

March 13, 1781, it was voted not to raise any money to hire preaching, but the deacons were chosen a committee to lay out the money subscribed.

Jan. 7, 1782, it was voted to employ the Rev. Mr. Prince for the term of six or seven years "to preach amongst us." He was to have the use of the parsonage, and a hired hand six months in each year. He was blind. He preached seven years. His son Caleb resided in Candia, and was a deacon many years.

May 23, 1789, "Voted to hire Mr. How to preach three months."

July 12, 1790, it was voted, seventy-six to twelve, to give the Rev. Jesse Remington a call, and give him the use of the parsonage and sixty pounds lawful money, and draw him twenty cords of wood yearly, with the privilege of cutting on the parsonage what should be sufficient in addition to keep his fires. He was ordained Oct. 20, 1790; died March 3, 1815.

Rev. Isaac Jones was ordained Feb. 7, 1816; dismissed May 12, 1818.

Rev. Abraham Wheeler was installed Jan. 13, 1819; dismissed Oct. 29, 1832.

Rev. Charles P. Russell, ordained Dec. 25, 1833; dismissed May 26, 1841.

Rev. William Murdoch, ordained Dec. 1, 1841; dismissed July 5, 1854.

Rev. William T. Herrick, installed July 5, 1854; dismissed July 2, 1858.

Rev. E. N. Hidden, installed Nov. 2, 1859; dismissed Dec. 31, 1864.

Oct. 10, 1865, a call was extended to Rev. Lauren Armsby, formerly of Chester.

The number of church-members in 1816 was twenty-eight; in 1822, seventy; in 1823, one hundred and eighty-two; in 1824, two hundred and fifteen; in 1857, two hundred and sixty-eight.

In 1869 a church organ was purchased at an expense of four hundred and fifty dollars.

Union or Free Will Society and Church.—There was quite an interest in religion near the mountain in Nottingham in 1799, which extended into the neighboring towns, and in 1802 a church was organized, the members living in Nottingham, Deerfield, Candia, and Raymond. There was another revival in 1810, and another in 1815. Moses Bean, a son of Reuben Bean, of Candia, was ordained at Deerfield, 1810. The first marriage solemnized by him on record is May 1, 1810. He built the meeting-house at the village about 1816, after the revival. In 1818 the church was divided, the brothers and sisters in Deerfield and Nottingham forming one church, and those in Candia and Raymond forming another, but giving to every individual liberty to belong to the church he or she desired. They entered into covenant and constituted a church, which is signed in behalf of the church by Jeremiah Fullerton.

There is a catalogue dated 1821 (although some were added later), containing about two hundred and twenty names, some belonging to Deerfield and some to Epping. In the record of a church meeting, August, 1820, it is said that five were baptized and "above one hundred spoke in meeting." At a church meeting May 24, 1824, it was agreed to divide the church by the town line, and those near the line have liberty to join which church they should desire. Samuel Dudley was chosen deacon, and William Turner, clerk. Sept. 9, 1830, agreed to a new covenant, and sixty-three names are appended.

The new meeting-house was built in 1847. The basement and vestry cost $400, and the superstructure cost $1500. The following are among the preachers employed:

Previous to the division the name of Elder David Harriman is frequently found. Elder Moses Bean was the son of Reuben Bean, and grandson of David Bean, and seems to have been in a sense the father of the church, as he built the first meeting-house, and it was voted Nov. 17, 1824, "to receive Elder Moses Bean as pastor of this church." Nov. 15, 1830, Elder Bean resigned and Elder J. Knowles was called; dismissed, and Elder B. S. Manson chosen; dismissed April 4, 1839, and Elder S. P. Fernald chosen; dismissed, and Elder S. Whitney chosen.

Methodist Episcopal Church and Society.—Moses Colby came from Hawke (Danville) in 1806, and purchased the John Sargent place. He was the first Methodist in Candia, and his children have ever been efficient supporters of that denomination. Others moved into town or became Methodists and retained their connection with or joined the churches of Hawke, Poplin, and Sandown. When the church was organized at Chester, now Auburn, they generally united with that and constituted a class.

A society and church were formed in Candia in 1859, and they then erected a place of worship, with a stone basement for a vestry, at the expense of $1500. There is a membership of about forty, and they have been regularly supplied with a Conference preacher: Henry Nutter, 1859; Lorenzo Draper, 1860-61; James Adams, 1862-63; N. H. Chase, 1864-65; James Adams, 1866; Silas Green, 1867-69.

Schools.—At a meeting April 4, 1764, "Voted £100, old tenor, to Hire Schooling." The selectmen paid Dr. Moore for keeping school, £40. In 1765, £200 was voted and paid Daniel Row for keeping school; £9 3s. 6d. to Zachariah Clifford or his wife for keeping school. In 1766 they voted to raise £250, old tenor, or £12 10s. lawful money, equal thereto, to hire schooling. They paid Master Haselton for keeping school one month, £2; paid Isaac Clifford's wife for keeping school, six weeks and one day, 17s.; Zachariah Clifford's wife, 12s.; Mr. Boweu, for keeping school, £1 16s. 9d.

Money is paid that year to the south quarter, to the southeast quarter, to the centre quarter, to the west quarter, and to the northeast quarter. In 1767 Master Shaw is paid for keeping school in the south quarter, Esquire Moore and Nathaniel Emerson in the centre quarter; and Israel Gilman's wife in the northeast quarter. There was a Paul Jewett who kept school several years; also Richard Clifford's wife, Samuel Buswell, and Ezekiel Worthen. In 1773 a motion was made to hire a grammar school master (that is, one to teach the languages); negatived.

"And likewise it is voted that y<sup>e</sup> Parish Does Except [accept] of a Reading and writing School this Present year, and that Each Quarter Respectively shall have the Liberty to Choose there own School master upon ye Proviso the major Part of Each Quarter Shall be agreed in one Person within the Space of ten Days from this Date, and make application to the Selectmen to Employ him."

In 1744, Abraham Fitts, Master Forsnith, Master Otis, Mrs. Hazzard, Mrs. Rendall, and Mrs. Cram are teachers.

In 1778, £80 lawful was raised for schooling.

In 1782, paper money being nearly worthless, it was voted to raise one hundred silver dollars for schooling.

The present division of Candia into thirteen school districts was made in 1844, but it does not appear by the records what proportion of money each district has had.

Candia has made liberal expenditures for schools; has had, besides the town schools, a high school in the fall a large portion of the time; and the town, as will be seen, has furnished a large number of graduates and professional men.

Votes passed by the Parish of Candia respecting the Revolutionary War.—July 18, 1774, Abraham Fitts was chosen to meet at Exeter on the 21st to join in the choice of delegates to the General Congress.

Jan. 3, 1775, Lieut. Moses Baker was chosen to represent the parish in a meeting at Exeter on the 25th instaut.

Walter Robie, Esq., Capt. Nathaniel Emerson, Dr. Samuel Moore, Mr. Benjamin Cass, and Mr. Jacob Worthen were chosen a committee to inspect all persons who do not conform to the advice of the late General Congress.

"Voted, to buy a barrel of powder, flints, and lead, answerable thereto as a Parish stock.

"Voted, Capt. Emerson, Lieut. Baker, and Ens. Bean desire all the males in Candia, from sixteen to sixty years old, to meet at Some Convenient time at the meeting-house in Candia, in order for viewing with arms and ammunition.

"Voted, that the People, as above mentioned, shall meet at the meeting house in Candia this day fortnight, at one of the Clock in the afternoon."

Feb. 21, 1775,—

"Voted, that the Parish Do Confirm y<sup>e</sup> Transactions of the last meeting and approve of what the Committee of Inspection have Drawn up, Relating to y<sup>e</sup> affairs of the Present Day, and made an addition to y<sup>e</sup> Committee of inspection of four Persons, (Viz, Dea. Nath<sup>l</sup> Burpee, Mr. Abm. Fitts, Lieut. Moses Baker, and Mr. Ichabod Robie."

May 11, 1775, Dr. Samuel Moore was chosen to represent the parish in the Provincial Congress, to be held at Exeter, May 17th.

June 14, 1775, Capt. Nathaniel Emerson, Lieut. Moses Baker, and Dr. Samuel Moores were chosen a committee to consult with the several officers, towns, parishes, or committees out of the same what way or manner shall be thought best to regulate the militia in this regiment according to the direction of Congress.

April 3, 1777, ten dollars each year was voted to each of those eighteen persons who had enlisted for three years, and a committee chosen to collect the money (if any) which had been subscribed.

At an adjournment April 8th ten dollars to each was added to the above. A committee was also chosen to inquire and see how much time and money each person has expended in supporting the war since the Concord fight. The committee reported as follows, which was accepted:

- "Concord men, 1s. per day and extra charges.
 "8 months men, with Lieut. Emerson, 4 dollars each.
 "8 months men, with Lieut. Dustin, 2 dollars each.
 "Winter Hill men, with Capt. Baker, 1 dollar each.
 "1 year's men to York 8 dollars; those to Delaware, 2 dollars each.
 "Ty—men, 12 $\frac{1}{2}$  dollars each.
 "New York men last fall, 2 dollars each.
 "Joseph Bean to Canada, 20 dollars."

May 19, 1777, Moses Baker, Walter Robie, Abraham Fitts, I. Rowe, and Benjamin Cass were chosen a committee to affix and settle the prices of goods and articles in the parish of Candia, in pursuance of an act in addition to the regulation act. (See in the History of Chester for 1779, pp. 142, 143.)

Jan. 19, 1778, a committee was appointed to procure our quota of Continental soldiers for three years or during the war, and at an adjournment in February another committee of five was chosen to make further trial.

April 20th, the committee was instructed to make further trial, and hire money and pursue the business without loss of time.

Aug. 3, 1778, a committee was chosen to make inquiries respecting the families of those in the Continental service for three years, and supply them with the necessaries of life.

Aug. 19, 1779, it was voted to adopt measures similar to the town of Portsmouth, and use the utmost of our power in reducing the prices of the necessaries of life, and gain the credit of our currency. Capt. Sargent and John Clifford were chosen delegates to attend a convention at Concord.

Oct. 26, 1779, it was voted to comply with the prices that the late convention stated, and a committee of seven was chosen to state prices upon articles which the convention did not, and to carry the same into execution.

July 4, 1780, a committee was chosen to hire twelve soldiers by way of a parish tax. A committee was also chosen to make an average of what every person had done in the war since it commenced.

July 10, 1780, a committee was chosen to assist the selectmen in procuring our quota of beef for the Continental army.

Nov. 14, 1781, it was voted that the selectmen make a tax in Indian corn to pay the six- and three-months' men. There had been several votes passed respecting raising soldiers, which had proved ineffectual.

June 17, 1782, it was voted to divide the parish into as many classes as will supply the deficiency, and if any class or person refuse to pay their proportion for hiring a soldier they shall pay double, to be assessed by the selectmen.

College Graduates.—The following were graduates of Dartmouth; David Pillsbury, 1827; Frederick Parker, 1828; John H. Quimby, 1829; William H. Duncan, 1830; Moses H. Fitts, 1831; Ephraim Eaton, Jesse Eaton Pillsbury, 1833; Richard E. Lane, 1841; Lorenzo Clay, 1843; Moses Patten, 1850; John D.

CHESTER lies in the western part of the county and is bounded as follows: On the north by Candia and Raymond, on the east by Fremont and Sandown, on the south by Sandown and Derry, and on the west by Auburn.

This town was granted to a number of residents of the towns of Portsmouth and Hampton. They were known as "The Society for Settling the Chestnut Country," as this section was then called.

At a meeting of the proprietors, held Oct. 15, 1819, the following votes were passed:

"1st, Voted, That Capt. Henry Sherburne be Moderator.

"2nd, Voted, That Joseph Tilton be Clerk of the Society.

"3rd, Voted, That Capt. Henry Sherburne be Receiver.

"4th, Voted, That Joseph Tilton, Ichabod Robie, Caleb Tole, Clement Hughes, Capt. Henry Sherburne, Eph. Denmet and Jacob Stanyan, be a Committee to manage the affairs of the Society; And That the sd. Committee shall have power to call meetings of the Society as often as they shall think necessary, and to act in all other matters that they shall think proper for the good of the whole Society.

Early Families.—The following are names of the early families whose genealogies are given in Chase's "History of Chester": Aiken, Ambrose, Anderson, Arnin, Badger, Basford, Bartlett, Bacheelder, Bean, Bell, Barry, Blake, Blanchard, Blasdell, Boild, Bradley, Bradshaw, Bradstreet, Blunt, Brown, Bricket, Butterfield, Barley, Barpee, Burwell, Calf, Campbell, Carr, Chase, Clark, Clay, Clifford, Colby, Craige, Crawford, Critcher, Crombie, Crossatt, Carrier, Davis, Dalton, Dickey, Dearborn, Dexter, Dinsmore, Dolby, Dudley, Dunlap, Duxtan, Eaton, Elliot, Emerson, Emery, Field, Fitts, Flag, Folson, Forsaith, Foss, Fowler, French, Fullerton, Fulton, Gage, Gamble, Gault, Gilchrist, Glyn, Goodine, Glidden, Gordon, Graham, Greenough, Griflen, Hall, Harriman, Haseltine, Head, Healey, Heath, Hills, Hoyt, Hodgkins, Ingalls, Jack, Kelly, Kimball, Kent, Kittridge, Knowles, Lane, Leitch, Lunt, Locke, Long, Lufkin, Martin, Marden, Marshall, McClenta, McClallan, McClure, McDuffee, McFarland, McFerson, McFarten, McGee, McMaster, McMurphy, McKinley, Melvin, Merrill, Miller, Mills, Morse, Moore, Morrill, Moulton, Murray, Norton, Nutt, Orr, Otterson, Patten, Pearce, Pierce, Poor, Powel, Pillsbury, Prescott, Preson, Quanton, Quimby, Rand, Richardson, Robie, Rowe, Rowel, Russel, Sanborn, Sargent, Scribner, Seavey, Severance, Shannon, Shackford, Shaw, Shirley, Silsby, Silver, Sleeper, Smith, Stickney, Sweetser, Templeton, Townsend, True, Turner, Tyler, Underhill, Yarrum, Waddel, Wason, Webster, Weeks, Wells, West, White, Whittier, Wilson, Witherspoon, Wood, and Worthen.

Pioneer Mills.—The first reference to mills found on the proprietors' records is under date Jan. 11, 1720–21, viz.:

At a general meeting of the proprietors of "Chester," held at Hampton the 11th day of January, 1720–21,

RESIDENCE OF HON. J. W. MOYES, CHESTER, ROCKINGHAM CO., NH.

At a meeting at Hampton, March 16, 1720-21,

"Voted, That the four persons to whom the Stream is granted, Shall give each a bond of Fifty pounds to the Committee, to perform the Conditions of s<sup>d</sup> Grant, and if any of them Refuse to do it, the Committee is Impowred to admit others."

At a meeting of the committee, Sept. 29, 1721,

"Voted, That the propri-tors of the upper Falls on the great Brook have the privilege of the Lower falls also, for their further Incongruent, to build a mill according to a vote of the Society, at a publick meeting held Jan. 13th, 1720-21, and in consideration of which Additional Privilege they are to build a Grist mill as Soon as the Town will need it."

James Basford at one time owned most of the mill. In 1731 he sold Ebenezer Dearborn one-fourth of the "old saw-mill." In 1732 he sold to William Wilson one-eighth of the "old saw-mill." In 1734 he had some difficulty with the proprietors about the mill, and they voted to have a reference.

In 1735 Ebenezer Dearborn decded to his sons, Ebenezer, Jr., Benjamin, Thomas, and Michael, one-fourth of the "old saw-mill."

In 1743, in consideration of twenty-two pounds, bills of credit, Ebenezer Dearborn, Ebenezer Dearborn, Jr., Thomas Dearborn, and Michael Dearborn convey to Thomas Wells four-sixths of the "old saw-mill."

We know little more about the mill or its owners until about 1780, when Hugh Tolford, Jacob Wells, Capt. Clough, Moses Haselton, John Haselton, and Benjamin Haselton rebuilt it. It was rebuilt once after that, and again in 1848.

Jonathan Blunt had a saw-mill previous to 1730.

At a meeting March 7, 1730, it was "Voted, That there be encouragement given for building a Grist mill on the middle falls of the Grate Brook, that is to John Aiken's, and fourteen or fifteen acres of land to the Eastward of s<sup>d</sup> falls, as convenient as can be had of common land, provide s<sup>d</sup> Aiken build a sufficient Grist mill by this time twelvemonth, and ke-ep s<sup>d</sup> mill in good Repair from time to time, and at all times hereafter."

This was probably the first grist-mill in the town.

Pioneer Schools.—The first reference to schools is under date Jan. 25, 1720-21, viz.:

At a meeting of the committee, Jan. 25, 1720-21, viz.:

"Voted, That whereas the number of proprietors is Con . . . and no provision made for a School Master, That the next proprietor that Shall Forfeit his Lot, the Same Shall be appropriated for a School."

"This provision was made after the first grant of the land, but before the charter, and there was hardly a permanent settler there."

The next we find on the records is at an adjourned meeting, April 7, 1737:

"Voted, To Rais thirty Pounds to Hier a Schoolmaster this present year."

"Voted, That the Selectmen shall Remove the said schoolmaster to the several Parts of the town as shall be Convenient."

Though there is no evidence that anything had been done by the town, it is hardly to be supposed that nothing had been done to educate the children for about eighteen years. The schools were held at private houses, and although removed to different parts, all the children in town might follow the master into the several quarters.

At an adjourned meeting, Nov. 2, 1738,

"Voted, That there Shall be twenty Pounds Raised to Support a School in this town."

At an adjourned meeting April 8, 1740,

"Voted, That their Shall be a School maintained in the town this year throught; Partly by School masters, and Partly by School dames, as the Selectmen Shall Judge best for the town."

In the warning, March 9, 1721, is an article

"To act what may appear needful about building a School house or houses."

"Put to Vote, Whether to build a School house in the Senter of the town or no. Passed in the negative."

At the annual meeting, March 25, 1742,

"Voted, That there shall be a school Kept in this town the year throught out, and that the Select men Shall Remove the Said School into the Several Quarters of said town, so that they Shall have their Equal Proportion of the Same, according to what Rates they Pay."

They probably refused to build a school-house in the Centre, because the school might be kept there all of the time.

In the warning for a meeting, March 29, 1744, is an article

"To see if the town will build a School house or houses, or to act and do any thing about Keeping a School, or Schools, or building a house or houses, as shall appear most for the benefit and advantage of the town."

"Voted to Build School Houses."

"Voted, That a Committee shall be Chosen to Divide the town into Several Parts, in order to accomodate School Houses."

"Voted, That Capt. Sam<sup>l</sup> Ingalls, Benjamin Hills, Insin Jacob Sargent, William Haley and Andrew Crage, shall be the Comitte."

In the warning for the annual meeting, March 28, 1745, is an article

"To See if the town will Except of the return of the Committee that was chosen to Divide the town into parts for the Convenience of building School houses; or act and do anything that shall be thought needful and necessary about a school or schools, and a school-house or houses."

At an adjournment of the meeting, April 4,

"Voted, that the Committee's Return that was Chosen to Divide the town into parts, in order to accomodate School houses, be Excepted."

"We have no means of knowing to a certainty into how many parts the town was divided, or their boundaries, but there probably were but three; for if there had been one at the Centre, John Robie, Jonathan Blunt, and Ebenezer Dearborn, Jr., who lived near the Centre, and Benjamin Bacheider and Robert Runnels, who lived within about half a mile up the street, and others—Jonathan Moulton, Enoch Colby, and Samuel Bartlett—within a mile below, would not have dissented. I have conversed with people who remembered the three. One stood on John Sanborn's, opposite Moses Webster's home lot, No. 21, one at Walnut Hill, not far from Robert Shirley's, and the third at the Long Meadows, between Samuel Aiken's (Charles C. Grant's) and David Witherspoon's (the Hardy place). Mrs. Whittier, daughter of Samuel Aiken, recollects this house, or of hearing her parents tell about it."—Chas.

In 1752, Master McNeil is paid £154. Deacon Haselton, Andrew Craig, Enoch Colby, Peter Dearborn, Mr. Carr, Deacon Dearborn, Mr. Knowles, and Mr. Basford are paid for boarding. It seems that this year, though they had no school-house, they had a school in the north part.

In 1753, Mr. Hazelton and Mr. McNeale were the masters, and Deacon Dearborn, Mr. Craig, Jacob Chase, and John Knowles boarded.

In 1754, "master Haseltine, master mcfarson, and master mceual, at the Longmeadows," were masters, and Deacon Dearborn, Jacob Chase, and Thomas Haseltine boarded.

In 1755, "Paid to Mr. Hessard, for teaching school, £132; To Mr. Boies, for teaching school, £28." Capt.

Blunt, Charles Moore, William Tolford, and Bradley Carr boarded, and William Graham and Patten, at the Long Meadows.

At the annual meeting, March, 1748,

"Voted, To Raise two Hundred Pounds, old tenor, the present year for Schooling and other necessary town Charges."

In the warning for the annual meeting, March 25, 1762, was an article,—

"To see what method the Town will take in Respect to their School houses, whether they will think fit to Raise a sum of money of the whole Town to build and Repair school houses; or what method they will take in that Respect."

At the adjourned meeting, May 4, 1762,—

"Relating to the sixth and seventh artikels in the warning of this meeting, They Were Put to Vote and past in the Negative."

The sixth article was respecting building a pound at Freetown.

At the annual meeting, March 31, 1763,—

"Voted, That it be Left With the selectmen to Inquire into and see how much is Justly Due to the North Parish, so Called, for their proportion of the School money Raised in this Town for three years past; and if they have not had their share then to deliver the Same to them; Provided they Lay out the Same for Schooling among themselves; and also all the other parts of the Town that have not had their proportion of the Schooling, nor money as above mentioned, shall be Considered, and have their proportion on the same Conditions."

At the September term of the Superior Court, 1771, Andrew Jack, Nathan Webster, and John Robie, the selectmen of Chester, were indicted because Chester, having more than one hundred families, had no grammar school. At the March term, 1772, Jack and Webster were tried and fined £10, and cost, £7 12s. 4d.

In the warning for the annual meeting, March 25, 1775, there was an article,—

"59. To see of the Town will Choose a Committee to appoint places Where the school houses shall be Built for the Town's Service, and to be Built by the Town"

"Relating to the fifth artikell in the warning about building school houses, put to Vote; Passed in the Negative."

Professional Men not college graduates natives of Chester.—Edward, Cyrus, and Ebenezer Dearborn, Jonathan H. Shaw, John Sargent, Joshua T. Hall, Rufus Shackford, H. B. Burdham, M. E. Cox, and James F. Brown, all physicians. John J. Bell, lawyer in Exeter.

Physicians.—Who was the first physician in Chester is not known. Tabitha Foss, in her administration account, 1747, charges for having paid Drs. Rogers and Bond; and Mary Haselton, in 1759, charges as having paid Dr. John Bond, and they probably resided in Chester. There was a Master Wood who taught school in 1746, 1747, and 1748; and there was a Dr. George Wood in Chester, who removed to Londonderry about 1770, and practiced there until about 1785, but there is no certainty that they were the same.

Dr. Samuel Moore was a school-teacher in 1749 and 1750. He married Mehitabel Ingalls about 1750. He removed to Candia Corner, and was a very prominent man there, though not as a practicing physician. Mrs. Moore was famous as a midwife. He died in 1793; she died in 1818.

Dr. John Ordway was a native of Amesbury, came to Chester and taught school in 1758; married Sarah, daughter of Samuel Robie, in 1760. He died about 1770.

Dr. John Manning is paid for a visit to a pauper in 1781, and is taxed in 1785. Nothing further is known of him.

Dr. Benjamin Face was in town, and his family had the smallpox in 1778. He was in Chester in 1785 and 1787. There was a Dr. Page in Raymond, who lived on No. 122, Old Hundreds, and Dr. Benjamin Page is taxed for the Raymond place several years. His buildings in Chester were burned April 5, 1791. New buildings were put up, which he sold to Joseph Robinson, about 1793, and left town. He died at Hallowell, Oct. 28, 1825, aged seventy-eight.

Dr. Thomas Sargent came to Chester about 1777, and practiced until about 1818, and removed to Canada.

Dr. Samuel Foster was born in Bilerica, Mass.; studied medicine at Woolstock, Conn. He came to Chester and married Mary Colcord, of Brentwood, Feb. 19, 1789. He removed to Candia in June of the same year, and practiced there until 1812. He died at Brentwood, 1826.

Dr. Benjamin Kitteredge came to Chester in 1790, and died 1830.

Dr. Rufus Kitteredge, his son, studied with his father, and practiced in Candia one year, and in Chester until 1849; then removed to Cincinnati, Ohio.

Dr. Frederick Mitchell practiced in Chester from 1815 to 1817 or 1818.

Dr. Josiah Richards came to Chester, June, 1814; M.D. Dartmouth, 1814. He stayed but a short time, and went to Claremont.

Dr. John Rogers graduated at Dartmouth, 1816; studied with Dr. Chadborne, of Concord; M.D., Dartmouth, 1819, when he settled in Chester; removed to Boscawen, 1821 or 1822; died 1830.

Dr. Nathan Plummer, son of Nathan Plummer and Mary Palmer, born Aug. 16, 1787; studied medicine with Dr. Robert Bartley, of Londonderry; practiced a short time there; came to the Long Meadows, 1818; married, first, Sarah, daughter of Rev. Zaccheus Colby; second, Mehitabel, daughter of Robert Dinsmore; alive 1869, but disabled for practice by the infirmities of age. Dr. Albert Plummer, M.D., Bowdoin, now of Hamilton, Minn., is his son.

Dr. Lemuel M. Barker, son of Lemuel and Mary Barker, studied medicine with Dr. R. D. Murray;

M.D., Dartmouth, 1824; commenced practice at Chester, 1825; removed to Great Falls, 1831; thence to Boston; has been superintendent and resident physician of the Massachusetts State Hospital and member of the State Senate; now resides in Malden; married Sarah, daughter of Hon. William M. Richardson, 1826.

Dr. Joseph Reynolds, son of Rev. F. Reynolds, born at Wilmington, Mass., Aug. 2, 1809; studied medicine with Dr. James P. Chaplin, of Cambridge; M.D. at Boston, 1828; came to Chester, March, 1830; thence to Gloucester; thence to Concord, Mass., 1852.

Dr. William W. Brown, son of Ebenezer Brown and Mary Whittier; born in Vermont, Aug. 28, 1804; fitted to the senior class of Union College, but was prevented by sickness; studied medicine with Dr. John Poole at Bradford, Vt., and with Professor Mussey; M.D., Dartmouth; January, 1831, commenced practice at Poplin, had an extensive practice in that and the neighboring towns; removed to Chester, 1834, and remained until 1845; spent the winter of 1845 and '46 at the university and hospitals of New York; then settled in Manchester; was surgeon of the Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers nearly three years. His son, William C., was hospital steward, and died soon after his return. His son, Charles L., was lieutenant in the Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers, died at Folly Island, S. C.

Dr. Darius A. Dow, born at Sugar Hill, Plaistow, came to Chester about 1847; removed about 1850; married a daughter of Abel G. Quigg, and is said now to reside at Westford, Mass.

Dr. Jacob P. Whittemore, son of Jacob Whittemore and Rebecca Bradford, born at Antrim, May 10, 1810; studied medicine with Dr. Gregg, of Hopkinton, and Professor Dixi Crosby; M.D., Dartmouth, 1847; practiced at Hartford, Vt., and Gilmanton; came to Chester, December, 1847; removed to Haverhill, Mass., 1864.

Dr. James F. Brown, son of James Brown and Elizabeth W. Langford, born on the "Neck" in Chester, now Auburn, Sept. 6, 1838; studied medicine with Professor Crosby; M.D., Dartmouth, 1864; settled in Chester, October, 1864, and is yet in active practice there. He married Abbie, daughter of Daniel Scribner and Ann Langford, of Raymond.

Dr. George W. Manter, son of Francis Manter and Harriet Revall, born at Londonderry, Aug. 22, 1824; studied medicine with Dr. William H. Martin, of Londonderry; M.D. at Castleton (Vt.) Medical College, 1854; commenced practice at Auburn, February, 1855; removed to Manchester, May, 1862.

Dr. Hanson C. Canney, son of Paul Canney and Eliza Hanson, born at Strafford, Nov. 17, 1841; studied medicine with John Wheeler, M.D., of Barnstead, and Professor A. B. Crosby; M.D., Dartmouth, 1864; commenced practice in Auburn, 1865.

Dr. John Dearborn resided in Chester several years; he was a botanic physician.

L. Chesley is also a practicing physician in Chester. E. L. Wright, eclectic physician.

The wife of Deacon Matthew Forsaith, the wife of Dr. Samuel Moore, and Mary Bradley, the wife of Caleb Hall, were noted in their day as midwives. These midwives bore the appellation of "Granny." The wife of Joseph Clark bore that appellation and probably officiated in that capacity. Likewise Mary, the wife of Robert Gordon, and mother of David White's wife, who died about 1795 at a very advanced age.

Capt. James Shirley, who died 1796, was a seventh son, and famous for curing king's evil or scrofula by the stroke of the hand.

Henry West, born 1781, was also a seventh son, and people made long journeys to come to him, and he made long journeys to visit patients.

Attorneys-at-Law.—John Porter, son of Asa Porter and Mehitable Crocker, was born at Haverhill; graduated at Dartmouth in 1787; studied law; was introduced into Chester by Toppan Webster to do his collecting; came April 1, 1799; removed April 19, 1793, to Broome County, Canada East; died there, time not known.

Arthur Livermore came to Chester in 1793, and was appointed a justice of Superior Court Dec. 21, 1799, which office he held until 1810; chief justice from 1813 to 1816. He afterwards lived in Holderness, and died there.

Daniel French immediately succeeded Judge Livermore; died Oct. 15, 1840.

Amos Kent came to Chester in 1854.

Samuel D. Bell came to Chester in 1820; removed to Exeter in 1830.

David Pillsbury immediately succeeded Samuel D. Bell, and removed to Concord in 1854.

Henry F. French commenced practice in Chester in 1835, and practiced there till 1840.

John Kelley, son of Simeon Kelley and Elizabeth Knight, born at Plaistow, July 22, 1796, graduated at Amherst in 1825; studied law with Stephen Minot, of Haverhill, and E. Moore, of Boston, and was admitted to the Suffolk County bar.

The Presbyterian Church.—In most of the towns of New England the congregation of the church was co-existent with the settlement of the town. So it was in Chester, but, unlike most other towns, the church here was of the Presbyterian order instead of the Congregational, which in the province history of this country might have been truly styled the "State" church. The first pastor was Rev. Marks Hall, from 1730-34. Subsequent pastors were as follows: John Wilson, from 1734-79; Rev. Mr. Clark, supply; T. Howe, A. S. Stickney, Hutchinson, Pickle, James Davis, D. Anan, David McGregor, Z. Colby, William Harlow, Clement Parker, Abel Manning, Benjamin Sargent, and Rev. Samuel Ordway. In 1843, Mr. Ordway organized the Second Congregational Church of Chester (now Auburn), and the Presbyterian Church of Chester dissolved and passed into history.

The Congregational Church.—The meeting which called Rev. Ebenezer Flagg, the first pastor of this church, was held June 23, 1736. He accepted the call, and remained pastor until 1793. His successors in the pastoral office have been as follows: Rev. Mr. Bradstreet, Leonard, Jewett, Joel R. Arnold, Jonathan Clement, L. Arnsby, H. O. Howland, J. L. Tomlinson, and Rev. Chester Tenney.

In 1728 the following votes were passed by the town concerning the building of a church, etc.:

"Voted, That there shall be a meeting house built according to these Dimensions: Inpp<sup>s</sup>, fifty feet in length, and thirty-five foot wide & twenty foot post, and finish it completely, both inside & outside, in y<sup>e</sup> turning of y<sup>e</sup> key, and set upon y<sup>e</sup> place appointed and before voted.

The Baptist Church.—Although there were individuals who were Baptists in Chester, and might have been occasional preaching, there was no organized church until 1819, when a church was organized by the Rev. William Taylor, of Concord, consisting of sixteen members, of whom Capt. Pearson Richardson, Walter Morse, Jacob Green, and Timothy Smith, of Sandown, were prominent. Col. Stephen Clay and Josiah Chase united afterwards, and were active members. Walter Morse and Josiah Chase were the deacons. They worshipped in Capt. Richardson's hall until 1823, when a meeting-house was built on the west side of the Haverhill road.

They had for preachers, besides Mr. Taylor, Rev. Josiah Davis, of Methuen, and the Rev. Duncan Dunbar, a Scotchman, afterwards of New York City. Gibbon Williams was installed; George Killock and John Upton were ordained pastors. A difficulty arose about a preacher, a part of the society believing him to be corrupt and a part adhering to him, which for a time disorganized the church and society, and they had no preaching, and their early records were lost and the meeting-house went to decay.

At a meeting of the Portsmouth Association, held at Newton, 1845, a committee, consisting of Brethren Ayres, of Dover, Gilbert, of Northwood, Wheeler, of Plaistow, and Swain, of Brentwood, were appointed to visit the church in Chester and attempt to settle their difficulties. The committee met the church Jan. 13, 1846, and recommended to disband the existing church and organize a new one, which was accordingly done, and a church of fifteen members was formed and William Bell chosen deacon and clerk. The old church was sold and a new building was erected near the town-house and dedicated Aug. 29, 1861.

Among the ministers who have officiated for this church are mentioned the names of H. W. Day, Andrew Mitchell, Horace Eaton, Joshua Clement, J. W. Merrill, and Daniel Gage.

The Methodist Episcopal Church.—There was a church organized in 1851 by Rev. Elisha Adams, the presiding elder for Dover District, and Rev. James M. Young, a member of the New Hampshire Conference, supplying. The same summer a church edifice was erected near the south line of No. 36, 2d P., 2d D., on the road from Chester to Candia. It was built under the direction of Joseph Smith, Amos Southwick, Samuel M. Edwards, John Maynard, Isaac L. Seavey, and Simon Haselton, and dedicated in October. It cost about one thousand dollars.

The following are the names of the preachers who have administered to the church and society: James M. Young, Charles U. Dunning, George M. Hamlin, Jesse Brown, Henry Nutter, C. Henry Newell, Edwin S. Chase, Charles W. Harkins, Joseph T. Hand, John Keogan, True Whittier, Ezekiel Stickney, Abraham Folsom, Silas Higgin, James Steadman, James G. Price, Josiah Higgin, and William D. Stewart.

The average membership since 1854 has been about sixty.

Military History.—“The first military law passed in New Hampshire was in 1718. All the means of knowing about the military organization in Chester is the titles prefixed to the names of the inhabitants. The first found on our records was in 1731. Samuel Ingalls has the title of captain, Ebenezer Dearborn of lieutenant, and Jacob Sargent of ensign, which is probably nearly as early as there was any military organization. Thomas Smith is lieutenant in 1732; John Talford is captain, and Thomas Wells lieutenant in 1744; Abel Morse is captain in 1746, and Thomas Wells in 1748; Thomas Craige is lieutenant, James Varnum is ensign, and Robert Caffe sergeant in 1749; Enoch Colby is also ensign, and Eben Dearborn, Jr., sergeant, in 1749; Silvanus Smith lieutenant in 1752, Samuel Robie in 1753, and Benaiah Colby in 1756, and Jonathan Blunt captain the same year. John Lane was appointed cornet of the Ninth Troop of the First Regiment of cavalry, commanded by Col. John Downing, Sept. 17, 1754, by Renning Wentworth; John Tolford is major, and Andrew Jack lieutenant in 1757; James Shirley is captain, and James Quantan ensign in 1759. Henry Hall is ensign in 1761, Samuel Robie captain in 1764, Robert Wilson lieutenant in 1765, Capt. Underhill, Lieut. Joseph Basford, and Ensign Joseph True in 1765; Oliver Morse and Henry Moore lieutenants, and Samuel Hazelton cornet in 1766; Richard Emery major in 1769; Andrew Jack captain in 1770; Joseph True captain, Lieut. Witherspoon in 1775; Maj. French (Jabez), 1774; Hugh Shirley, 1775; David Witherspoon captain, and James Dunlap lieutenant in 1766. Stephen Dearborn had a commission of captain under the king, May 3, 1767, and under Congress, Sept. 5, 1775; major, March 25, 1785; lieutenant-colonel, April 5, 1793; resigned Sept. 18, 1800.

"A militia law was passed Sept. 19, 1776, enrolling in train-bands all able-bodied men from sixteen to fifty years of age; exempting nearly all officers, ministers, Quakers, negroes, Indians, and mulattoes; each company to be mustered eight times a year.

"Then there was to be an 'alarm list,' composed of all male persons from sixteen to sixty-five years of age not included in the train-band, with some exceptions, if of sufficient ability, to be inspected twice a year. The captains of the 'alarm list' by custom had a brevet title of colonel. There was to be a military watch kept by those belonging to the train-band and alarm list, under the direction of the commissioned officers of the town.

"In looking over the rolls of the men in the French and Indian wars from 1745 to 1760, in the 'Adjutant-General's Report' (vol. ii.), 1866, I find the following Chester names, although it is not certain that they were all Chester men, and some Chester men may have been overlooked:

"In the winter of 1745-46, Capt. John Goffe had a company of thirty-seven men scouting the woods on snow-shoes, of which Samuel Brown was a sergeant; under Jeremiah Clough, Henry Irvine; under Andrew Todd scouting at Canterbury, 1746, Archibald Miller, Adam Wilson, William McMaster, John Grimes, and James Wilson. Adam Wilson and Archibald Miller afterwards lived in Chester, but probably went from Londonderry.

"Capt. Daniel Ladd's company, at Canterbury, 1746: Enoch Rowel, Zebedee Berry, Paul Healey, Samuel Moore, and John Nutt; William Presson and Henry Ervine, July to December, 1746; Samuel Moore again in 1747. Daniel Foster (lived near Martin's Ferry) was in Eastman's company. Under Moses Foster at Suncock, John Moore, John Carr, John Webster was lieutenant in John Goffe's scouting party in 1748; he might have been Col. Webster, of Chester. He was afterwards captain, and raised a scout of twenty men, and none of them Chester men; it is probable that he was not the man. In what way these men were raised, whether by voluntary enlistment or impressment, or both, I do not know.

"It has been seen that in 1747 the town voted to petition the Governor and Council 'to stop, and save any more men being sent out of the town into the service, and to have a suitable number of men kept in the service in our own town.' In 1748 there were petitions sent from different parts of the town to the captains, and by John Tolford and Thomas Wells to the Governor and Council for men; but probably Chester never had any direct aid.

"In the expedition against the French forts, Du Quesne, Niagara, and Crown Point, in the winter of 1755, New Hampshire furnished a regiment of six hundred men, under Col. Joseph Blanchard, in which the following Chester names appear: Joseph Morrill, Daniel Martin, Caleb Dalton, Robert Gordon, John Shackford, Nathan Morse, Samuel Towle, Samuel Emerson (son of Samuel Emerson, Esq., died at Albany, Nov. 17, 1755), Robert Kennedy, John Rowe, John Craig, Samuel Dudley, James Eaton, John Hall, clerk (might have been the first town clerk of Derryfield), Ithiel Gordon, James Fulerton, Samuel Dalton, Reuben Towl, Curtis Bean, John Dalton, Jonas Clay, William Aiken, Robert Witherspoon, William Wilson, Daniel Wilson, James Aiken, John Gage, Nathaniel Etherage.

"For the expedition against Crown Point in 1756, New Hampshire raised a regiment of seven hundred men, under the command of Col. Nathaniel Meserve, of Portsmouth, in the roll of which the following Chester names appear: Jesse McFarland, William McMaster, John Nutt, Robert Gordon, Francis Towle, Joseph Dudley, John McClellan, Benj. Fuller, William Baker, Gideon Rowel, Benj. Bacheelder, James Shirley.

"In 1757 New Hampshire furnished a regiment of five hundred men for the Crown Point expedition. Chester names: Robert Kennedy, Hugh Quinton, John Carr, Samuel Towle, sergeant; Paul Healey, corporal; Benjamin Bacheelder, Edmund Elliott, Ebenezer Eaton, Samuel Hazelton, Amos Merrill, Jonathan Towle, Stephen Dearborn.

"The Sixth Company was commanded by Richard Emery. Richard Emery, of Chester, married Mary Blunt, 1765, and is styled major in Chester records in 1767. The Kennedys might have been Goffstown men, and the Chester Daltons did not spell their names Danton.

"In August, 1757, a reinforcement was sent to Charleston No. 4, which served until November. Timothy Foss, David Webster, David Hill, Samuel Dalton, Isaiah Rowe, Benj. Fuller, and Samuel Brown are Chester names.

"There was a company sent in 1757 to garrison Fort William and Henry. Chester names: Benjamin Libbey, Stephen Marden, and Nathaniel Rand.

"In 1758 another regiment was sent to Crown Point, in which Samuel Towle is second lieutenant, and several Chester names before mentioned, and James Clay, Benj. Currier, Nath'l Wood, Hugh Quinton, Thomas Wason, John Mills, Joseph Linn, Matthew Templeton, Hugh Shirley, Robert McKinley, Oliver Morse, second lieutenant of the Eighth Company, Joshua Prescott, Ezekiel Morse, and John Quimby.

"In 1760 a regiment was raised to invade Canada. John Goffee was colonel, and Richard Emory, probably of Chester, major. Hugh Quinton, David Weatherspoon, James Graham, Archibald McDuffee, Robert McKinley, James Quinton, Hugh Shirley, Robert Wasson, James Weatherspoon, Samuel Haseltine, David Webster, Jacob Basford (died), Ebenezer Basford, Jonas Clay, David Craig, Jonathan Emerson (son of Samuel Emerson, Esq., died at Crown Point, Nov. 7, 1760), John Gage, Samuel Ingalls, John Karr, John Seavey, Titus Wells, Jacob Griffin, Stephen Webster, John Mills, Jacob Quimby, Nathaniel Maxfield, and Nathaniel Rand were from Chester.

"Besides the foregoing found on the rolls, it is said that Matthew, son of Samuel Gault, was an officer, and died at Cape Breton, 1759. His will was proved August, 1759. William Otterson, the grandfather of the Hooksett Ottersons, is said to have been in the army and drowned in crossing Lake Champlain in 1760. It has also been said that Abraham Morse was in the French war, and that Elijah Pillsbury was before Quebec when Wolfe was killed. He probably enlisted at Newbury. Wells Chase went from Newbury a campaign under Governor Shirley to Norridgewock in 1754, and was in the battle of Ticonderoga in 1758. Archibald McDuffee was in the French war. The king issued a proclamation, dated Feb. 19, 1754, offering certain bounties in land to such officers and soldiers as should enter his service against the French; and another proclamation, dated Oct. 7, 1763, ordering the land for the New England States to be laid off in the State of Virginia, about one hundred miles above the mouth of the Ohio River. In 1816, James Milmore, of Windham, came along and procured powers of attorney from the Chester soldiers, among whom were Wells Chase, Robert McKinley, Matthew Templeton, and Archibald McDuffee, empowering him to recover and sell the lands, and gave bonds back to pay them one-half of all that he should receive. I think nothing further was heard about it.

"The news of the battle of Lexington spread with amazing rapidity. Nathaniel Emerson received the news at midnight at Candia, and aroused the people, and drummer David Hill beat up for recruits, and Moses Dustin is said to have been the first to fall in, and he served through the war. They soon raised a squad, which soon started for the scene of the war. Probably more than half the able-bodied men started, with such arms as they had and with such conveyance as was at hand, and went to Cambridge, the headquarters of the army. A portion of the men enlisted, and the rest returned home. So far as the action of the town of Chester is concerned, by votes in town-meeting, it has been given in the history of those years. The army rolls, and other papers relating to the war, are contained in eleven large volumes in the Adjutant General's office. The matter is very voluminous and difficult to arrange, and I know of no better way than to give the rolls containing Chester men, always including Candia and Raymond, designating the respective towns, Chester A, Candia B, and Raymond C, so far as practicable. I will also supply any seeming deficiencies by documents or tradition.—Chase.

"According to the Report of the Adjutant-General, 1866, vol. ii., New Hampshire had three regiments in 1775, the first commanded by John Stark, the second by Enoch Poor, the third by James Reid. Stark's and Reid's were stationed at Melford, and were at Bunker Hill; and Col. Poor remained on duty at home. The Tenth Company of the Third Regiment was commanded by Hezekiah Hutchins, and Amos Emerson, of Chester, was lieutenant; and the names of David Currier, Josiah Morse, Peter Severance, Thomas Wilson, and Samuel Moore appear on the roll. Capt. David Shaw says that William Gross, his mother's half-brother, was in the Bunker Hill battle, under Emerson. There were two other men known to be in the battle whose names I have not found,—Caleb Hall, who went down at the time of Lexington battle and enlisted, and Dea. John Hills, of Candia, who, while lying behind the rail fence stuffed with hay, had a ball strike his foot, which he picked up, and not fitting his gun, he brought it home. There is a letter from Parker Morse to Dea. Hills extant, directed to him as belonging to Hutchins' company at Mystic. Some of the men who went down at that time and stayed might have enlisted in Massachusetts regiments before the New Hampshire ones were organized.

There are recruits credited to the towns, some without any mention of what companies they were assigned to or what service engaged in.

"There is a history of the First New Hampshire Regiment, by Frederic Kidder, 1868, containing a roll of the enlisted men who served between January, 1777, and January, 1782, which contains the names of John Knook and David Shirley, of Chester, and of Thomas Capron, of Canidia, not on the foregoing list.

"The foregoing is a list of the soldiers furnished by Chester, as correct as can be conveniently made from the army rolls; but those cover so much ground, and so many strange names occur, which are not assigned to any particular town, that it is probably very incomplete. There are names of men on the town accounts to whom bounties were paid, and the names of others to whom notes were paid, probably for bounties, without being so designated, which mostly, if not all, are included in the foregoing rolls, so that it was not thought best to spend the time in collecting and space in the history to print it.

"Great exertion had to be used to raise men. The town was divided into classes, according to the number of men to be raised, and one or more men assigned to each class, which they were required to raise. The town was also classed to raise beef and corn for the army, and also to support the soldiers' families.

"The following specimen of the requisitions was found among the papers of Col. Stephen Dearborn:

"TO CAPT. STEPHEN DEARBORN AND ROBERT ROWE: Agreeably to an act of the General Court and a vote of the town, the following persons who are named, with the amount of their ratable estate, are to procure an able-bodied, effective man for the Continental service three years, or during the war, to be ready to be mustered in on or before the 10th day of May next, or pay the fine agreeable to law and the vote of the town. You are desired to notify each one in this list to meet and prescribe such method as they shall think proper in order to procure s<sup>d</sup> man.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. JOHN W. NOYES.

Hon. John W. Noyes, son of Daniel and Nancy W. Noyes, was born in Springfield, N. H., Jan. 14, 1810. His father, Daniel Noyes, was born in Kingston, N. H., in 1771, and moved to Springfield, N. H., at an early age. He was a merchant, hotel-keeper, farmer, and engaged in various other branches of business; he became a prominent man in the town. He was successful in his various business ventures, at the same time satisfactorily performing the many duties devolving upon him by the official positions which he often held. He held the various town offices and represented the town in the State Legislature.

He was one of the few men who possess talents so diverse as to enable them to attend to the details of various kinds of business, keeping full control of each. He died in Springfield, N. H., Aug. 5, 1812. His father was James Noyes, born in Kingston, and died in that town in 1790.

John W. Noyes is descended on the maternal side from John, brother of ex-Governor Wear; their father was Hon. Nathaniel Wear (3d). He was born in Seabrook, Aug. 29, 1669; died in that town March 26, 1755. Mr. Noyes' mother was Nancy Wear, daughter of Jonathan Wear; she was born in Andover, N. H., Jan. 10, 1785.

Some years after the death of Mr. Noyes' father his mother married Nathan Stickney, Esq.; they resided in Springfield a number of years, and then removed to Concord, where she died May 9, 1845. The Weares have all along the line of descent, from Nathaniel Wear 1st, been men of note and prominence in their day, and have filled many important offices.

Mr. Noyes had fair educational advantages when a youth, and attended the academies of Pembroke, Salisbury, and Meriden. After leaving school he engaged as clerk in a store in Concord for a few years, where close application to the details of business, together with natural ability, fitted him for a successful career.

At the age of twenty-two he removed to Chester, and engaged in business for himself in that town, where he continued as merchant, farmer, etc., about twenty years, when he sold his mercantile business, and devoted himself more exclusively to farming and his various other interests.

Mr. Noyes had at various times held nearly all the local offices of his town: is now, and has been for many years, town treasurer. He has for more than forty years been in commission as a justice of the peace, and nearly as long a notary public.

He was one of the directors of Derry Bank from 1840 until its close, and in 1864 was elected president of the Derry National Bank, which position he has continued to hold to the present time.

Politically, Mr. Noyes is a Republican. In 1841-42, 1853-54, 1875-76 he represented Chester in the New Hampshire Legislature, and in 1864-65 he was elected by the votes of Councilor District No. 2 a member of the Executive Council. He has had for many years a large part of the probate and justice business of his community, and has discharged the duties pertaining to the numerous positions of trust and honor which have been conferred upon him with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the public. Mr. Noyes is a man who through a long and busy life has so deported himself as to win the esteem and highest regard of the entire circle of his acquaintance. He enjoys the implicit confidence of those with whom he has been brought in contact during his many years of business life; he is sought by many for advice, and is frequently appealed to for the settlement of differences, all parties feeling assured that his sense of justice will result in a fair decision. He is a public-spirited citizen, progressive in his ideas, broad and liberal in his views, and carries about with him in his every-day life an atmosphere of kindness and sociability, before which all feelings of restraint immediately disappear, and the stranger is almost immediately an acquaintance.

In religious belief Mr. Noyes is an Orthodox Congregationalist, and has been a constant and influential member of the First Congregational Church in Chester for nearly fifty years. He is and has been for many years one of the trustees, and also treasurer, of the ministerial fund of the Congregational Society in Chester. He is a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and is one of the trustees of several religious and benevolent institutions in the State.

He is a man of fine physique and striking personal appearance, and at seventy-two stands as erect and steps as elastic as most men of fifty.

Mr. Noyes married Nancy Aiken, of Chester, Sept. 27, 1836. They have one daughter, Isabella Aiken, born March 17, 1838; married Dec. 21, 1864, to Prof. John E. Sinclair, of Dartmouth College (who is now professor in Worcester County Free Institute). She died Sept. 11, 1868, leaving two daughters, Annie N. and Isabella A. Mrs. Noyes died June 20, 1840. Mr. Noyes married for his second wife Clara D., daughter of Rev. Dr. McFarland, of Concord, N. H., Oct. 18, 1842. She was born May 13, 1822; died June 26, 1853. They had two children, who died in infancy, and two daughters, Elizabeth McFarland (born March 17, 1844, married William S. Greenough, of Wakefield, Mass., Jan. 28, 1869; they have two children, Chester Noyes and William Weare), and Nancy S. A., born July 22, 1847; died July 30, 1871. Mr. Noyes married his present wife, Harriet S., daughter of Rev. Dr. Bouton, of Concord, N. H., and granddaughter of ex-Governor John Bell, June 21, 1855. She was born Jan. 25, 1832. Their children are Mary Bell, born July 26, 1858, and John Weare, born June 17, 1867, died Feb. 3, 1871.

Rev. Daniel J. Noyes, D.D., of Hanover, professor in Dartmouth College, is the only brother of Mr. Noyes. He married Jane M. Aiken, sister to Mrs. Noyes 1st. They have now living two sons, lawyers, in New York, and a daughter, now Mrs. Henry L. Smith, of New York, and one daughter deceased, who was the wife of Prof. Fairbanks, of Dartmouth College.

DR. JAMES F. BROWN.

James F. Brown, M.D., was born in the town of Chester, Rockingham Co., N. H., Sept. 6, 1838. His grandfather on the paternal side was one of the early settlers of Chester, having purchased a farm of four hundred and fifty acres of partially improved and heavily timbered land in the northwest part of the town. His grandfather on the maternal side was Deacon Anthony Langford, who emigrated from Wallingford, England, to this country for religious reasons, he being a Presbyterian non-conformist. He settled at Portsmouth, and married Nancy Walton, a daughter of a prominent Congregational clergyman of that place. The Langfords of Wallingford, England, are represented as belonging to more intelligent, highly educated middle classes, one of them being managing editor of Blackwood's Magazine for forty years past.

Dr. Brown's parents were James Brown, of Chester, and Elizabeth W. (Langford) Brown, of Portsmouth. Both parents died while Dr. Brown was quite young, and at the tender age of seven years he found himself an orphan adrift upon the world, and dependent upon his own resources for his future. He resolved to obtain an education, and by persistent and energetic effort to that end he prepared at Pinkerton and Atkinson Academies for college, and succeeded in obtaining a medical education at Dartmouth Medical College, graduating from there in 1864. Immediately upon graduation he returned to his native town, and soon became engaged in an active practice, which has steadily increased, until now he has an immense business in all the details of the profession, including whatever surgery there is to be done there, and has performed some very important operations, such as some of the principal amputations, operation for strangulated hernia, and considerable minor surgery, such as removing tumors, extirpating the eye, operation for hare-lip, fractures, etc. He is a fellow of New Hampshire Medical Society, and permanent member of American Medical Association since 1875, was chosen member of Legislature in 1879-80, and has held other local offices. Republican in politics, Congregational in religious belief, and much interested in all church and literary enterprises, successful in pecuniary matters, having arisen from comparative poverty to a handsome competency solely by his own exertions. He married Abbie, daughter of Daniel Scribner, of Raymond. She was a graduate—class of 1863—of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary. They have four children,—James, aged ten, and Annie, aged two years.

JAMES MARANER KENT.

Maraner, father of James Maraner Kent, was born in Newburyport, Mass., where the Kent family were among the pioneers, having settled there about the year 1624. He removed to Derry about 1803, where he reared a family of six sons and one daughter. James Maraner, the youngest of the sons, was born in Derry, July 5, 1804, was reared on a farm, and had the benefit of a common school education. When about eighteen years of age he married Fanny Brown, of Hookset, N. H. Their children were James B., born March 6, 1823; William, born Aug. 18, 1824, died April 11, 1826; Lucien, born March 30, 1828; Sarah F., born Sept. 14, 1829; Charles H., born Aug. 18, 1835; and Margaret F., born Jan. 1, 1846. Soon after marriage he went to Boston, where he worked at boiler-making for three years, when he removed to Derry and opened a black-smith-shop on Walnut Hill in the town of Chester. He continued business there for sixteen years, when he removed to Chester Centre, where he followed black-smithing in connection with farming up to a few years before his death. He always displayed a great interest in town affairs, and cheerfully devoted time and made sacrifices for the public good. In politics he was an Old-Line Whig, afterward a Republican. He held all the offices within the gift of the town at various times, and was representative to the Legislature for several years. Having a speculative turn of mind, he dealt extensively in land at different times, with fair success financially. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and, being interested in every movement which tended to elevate the condition of his fellow-man, he gained the esteem of every one who knew him, and his death, which occurred Jan. 17, 1872, was regretted by a large circle of friends and relatives. His widow was suffocated by escaping gas in her room at the home of her niece, Mrs. Ex-Governor Harrington, in Manchester, Oct. 11, 1877.

Of the children, James B. went to Boston when eighteen years old and engaged in the express business, at which he continued for twenty years, when he opened a restaurant, which he kept until about five years ago, since which time he has been engaged in business in New York. Lucien learned black-smithing with his father, and continued the business until within a year of his death. He was also a speculator in land, etc.: was a very successful and reliable business man, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of his acquaintances. Sarah F. married John Little, of Atkinson. They have three daughters. Charles H. went to Boston when sixteen years of age, and was engaged with his brother, James B., in the express business for eight years. He then went to work for the street railroad company, and drove the first street-car that ran in the city of Boston. He remained there until 1861, when he enlisted in the Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, served three years, took part in numerous engagements, was detailed as nurse at the Marine Hospital in New Orleans, where he lost the sight of an eye by a fragment of coal getting under the lid, after which he returned home and engaged in farming, at which business he still continues. He is genial and courteous in his intercourse with others, and is a man of whom it may be said his "worst side is outside." April 23, 1869, he married Mrs. Cora M. Curtis, daughter of Josiah Litz, of Lynn, Mass. Mrs. Kent had one child, a son, by her marriage with Mr. Curtis.

COL. ISAAC LANE.

Isaac Lane was a lineal descendant of William Lane, the English ancestor and emigrant, who was admitted freeman of Boston, May 8, 1652. He married (1) Mary —, (2) Mary, daughter of Thomas Brewer, of Roxbury. Their children were Samuel, John, Mary, Sarah, WILLIAM, Elizabeth, and Ebenezer. William, born in Boston, Oct. 1, 1659, married Sarah Webster, born in Hampton, N. H., 1659, and removed thither before 1688; was a tailor, and lived where the academy now stands. He died Feb. 14, 1749, surviving his wife four years. Their children were JOHN,<sup>1</sup> Sarah, Elizabeth, Abigail, Joshua, Samuel, Thomas. John<sup>1</sup> married Mary Libbey, of the town of Rye. Soon after marriage he went to sea, was taken by pirates, and kept a prisoner for seven years; returned home, went to sea again, and never returned. John,<sup>2</sup> son of John,<sup>1</sup> born Oct. 12, 1709, married (1) Hannah Lamprey, (2) Mary Knowles. He bought of Ephraim Blunt, of Andover, No. 128 O. H. and No. 20 2d P., 2d D. in Chester in January, 1742-43, and moved thither about 1749. He was appointed by Benning Wentworth "Cornet of the Ninth troop of the First Regt<sup>t</sup> of Cavalry, commanded by John Dowling, Col.," Sept. 17, 1754. He was the first officer of that rank in Chester, and in all records he is called "Cornet John Lane." He died Feb. 13, 1784. His wife died in 1787. His children were John, Daniel, Ezekiel, David, Mary, Hannah, Nathan, Isaac (died young), Sarah, ISAAC,<sup>3</sup> and Jonathan. Isaac,<sup>3</sup> born April 19, 1760, married Abigail Garland, 1780; was a large land-owner, a cooper, and carried on various other business transactions, dealing largely in real estate, and passed his life on his father's homestead. He was appointed cornet by John Sullivan. He died April 21, 1834, leaving eight children,—Sally, Abigail, Molly, Anna, John, Betsey, ISAAC,<sup>4</sup> and Peter. Isaac Lane<sup>4</sup> was born in Chester, Feb. 25, 1799, had common school education, was raised a farmer, and on arriving at maturity assumed charge of his father's entire business, he taking care of both his parents until their death. He married, Nov. 21, 1837, Caroline, daughter of Henry and Hannah (Whittier) Marshall, of Brentwood, N. H., where she was born, April 14, 1808. Her ancestors on both sides belong to old and prominent families. She can claim kindred with the poet Whittier and Chief Justice Marshall. She was educated at Hampton Academy, and in youth enjoyed the reputation of being a successful and very popular teacher. Beside several terms of private school, she taught district school nine years (summers) in Brentwood, two in Exeter, one in Epping, and one in New Market. Mr. and Mrs. Lane commenced house-keeping in the house built by his father in Chester, and for nearly thirty-nine years this was their home, and there, hand in hand, they walked life's pathway, and in Christian thankfulness or resignation enjoyed life's pleasures, or encountered its sorrows, each drawing each near to the other. He was a lumberman and mill-owner, dealt in real estate, erected a block of six tenements in Manchester, and was ever an active, sagacious, and successful business man. He was also connected with the Concord Railroad. He took a great interest in military matters, and rose to be colonel in the State militia. Whig and Republican in politics: as such he was chosen selectman several times. He was a prominent man in all matters tending to improve or elevate humanity, but in connection with religious matters was he unusually conspicuous. He was for many years, as the Quakers have it, a "birthright" member of the First Congregational Society of Chester, a strict observer of the Sabbath, and was more than usually liberal in support of the church and Christian charities. He was made a life-member of the American Board of Foreign Missions by the church, and none more than he enjoyed the esteem and confidence of the whole community. For many years he mingled, socially, religiously, and in business, with his townsmen, and never did detraction, malice, or suspicion dare to try to cast a shadow on his integrity. He had a kind heart, deep and warm affections, and a religious sentiment that, like a lamp of unusual brilliancy, cast its rays through the twilight of a long and useful life, and gilded the peaks on the further shore. He died Aug. 7, 1876, having attained nearly "four score." His family consisted of four children, — Mary Ellen (died young), William H. (died young), Henry H., Martha Brown. This daughter, educated in Chester, was a woman of gentle manners and of rare Christian graces. Her twenty-seven years of life endeared her to many, to whom her death, in 1877, brought a keen and lasting sorrow. Henry Harrison, born July 12, 1845, educated at Chester and Derry Academies, succeeded to his father's business, deals quite extensively in lumber, is one of the live, representative men of Chester, and now represents his town in the State Legislature. He married, Aug. 22, 1878, Emma, daughter of Deacon William Teuney and Emeline Murray, his wife. She was born Feb. 3, 1847. They have two children.

DANVILLE.

Geography—Topography—Petition for Parish—Documentary History—Ecclesiastical History—Methodist Episcopal Church—Free-Will Baptist Church—Universalist Church—Congregational Church—Military Record.

DANVILLE lies near the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Fremont, on the east by Kingston, on the south by Kingston and Hampstead, and on the west by Sandown.

This town originally formed a part of Kingston. It was incorporated as a separate parish Feb. 20, 1760. The following is a copy of the petition for a new parish, which was presented to the Governor and Council Jan. 2, 1760:

"To His Excellency Benning Wentworth, Esq., Captain General, Governor & Commander-in-Chief in & over His Majesty's Province of New Hampshire, The Honourable His Majesty's Council And House of Representatives in General Assembly Convened, the Second Day of January, 1760.

"The Petition of Sundry of the Inhabitants of that Part of Kingston in Said Province adjoining on the Parish of Sandown, Humbly shews,

"That whereas Providence hath placed us at a great Distance from any place of stated public Worship in Town A so render our Attendance thereon very difficult & our Families often impracticable: We have built a meeting House among us to accommodate ourselves & Families, That we & they might more conveniently attend the public Worship of God & with more ease & comfort enjoy the Word & ordinances necessary for Salvation, And being desirous at our own cost & charge to maintain the Worship of God among us, We petitioned the Town to set us off to be a Parish Separate from them, But they as we apprehend not regarding our difficult Circumstances have unreasonably denied our Request: Wherefore We humbly pray that we may be sett off & incorporated into a Parish distinct from them in the following manner, VIZ, bounding Westerly on Sandown East Line, thence to extend Easterly, carrying the whole Breadth of the Town till it comes half way between our new meeting house & the old meeting house in Town, And that we may be discharged from paying to the ministry & the School in the other part of the Town & enjoy the powers & privileges of other Parishes.

"And your Petitioners as in Duty bound shall ever Pray, &c."

The first settlements within the bounds of this town were made in about the year 1735, by Jonathan Sanborn, Jacob Hook, and others. Among the prominent old families whose ancestors can be traced back more than one hundred years as residents are mentioned those of Page, Fowle, Blake, Sanborn, Spofford, Elkins, French, Dimond, Colby, Tewksbury, Quimby, Collins, Bradley, Eaton, Eastman, and Currier.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—It is impossible to ascertain the date of organization of this church, as there are no early records in existence. It was, however, doubtless organized prior to or about the year 1800, as Mr. John Collins, who has been a member fifty-four years, says he has known of its existence seventy-five years. The society formerly worshipped in the old meeting-house, now the town house. It has subsequently occupied the Free-Will Baptist and Union Churches one-fourth of the time. The present membership is small.

The Free-Will Baptist Church was organized June 17, 1820. Until 1841 the service of preaching was rendered chiefly by itinerant ministers. From that year the pastors have been Revs. Joseph Fullinton, W. P. Merrill, J. Kimball, J. Blore, P. S. Burbank, M. W. Burlingame, M. Cole, P. S. Burbank a second time, and J. A. Lowell. In the year 1832 the church and society erected their present house of worship in the southern part of the town. Previous to that year the church had worshipped chiefly in private houses. The church numbers one hundred and sixty-seven members.

The Universalist Church.—The present Universalist Church in this town was organized in May, 1850. The first society of the kind here was organized May 2, 1832, the town at that time being known as "Hawke." This first society, having neglected to hold a meeting in 1849, ceased to exist, and the present one began the year following. Preaching has been obtained regularly except during one year (1858), when Rev. J. H. Shepherd supplied the pulpit every eighth Sunday. The society owns one-eighth of the Union Church building, North Danville. The society receives a portion of the "parsonage money," derived from the income of a fund left by one of the early orthodox ministers for the support of preaching.

The society consists of about twenty members.

Congregational Church.—It is not known when a church originated here, but it is supposed to have been previous to the settlement of a pastor.

The first pastor was Rev. John Page, who was ordained Dec. 21, 1763, and remained until his death, Jan. 29, 1783.

Military Record.—The following is a list of those who enlisted from this town during the late Rebellion, furnished by Adjt.-Gen. Ayling:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JONATHAN FRENCH.

Jonathan French, son of Phineas and Jane (Eaton) French, was born in Danville, N. H., Oct. 1, 1818. His great-grandfather, Jonathan French, came from Salisbury, Mass., married Johanna Elkins Nov. 7, 1736 (for full history of Elkins family see history of Hampton). Their children were Johanna (died young), Henry, Elizabeth, Jonathan<sup>1</sup> (died in infancy), Jonathan<sup>2</sup> (deceased), Joseph and Mary (twins), three children born respectively 1747, 1750, and 1752; Melitable, born 1753 (under the star Mercurius), and Jonathan<sup>3</sup> born April 28, 1757, died 1828. He settled in Danville, on Beach Plain, and the estate remained in possession of the family until a few years ago. Jonathan<sup>3</sup> was a man of fair education and business attainments, took a leading part in town affairs, held various offices, was a man of good personal appearance, of great prominence in church affairs, and a very able speaker, and was a lieutenant in militia. He married a Miss Batchelder, daughter of Deacon Elisha and Theodora Batchelder, who came to Danville from Hampton, was a farmer, and a deacon in Congregational Church. (For history of Batchelder family, see Hampton Falls.) Lieut. Jonathan French had five children,—Mary, Jonathan, Phineas, Lucy, and Robert. Mary married Nathaniel

Clark, and lived in Sandown. Lucy married Osmond Spofford, lived in Danville, and died about 1828. Phineas French, son of Jonathan<sup>3</sup> of second generation and father to present Jonathan, was born in 1791, and died in 1857. He had a common-school education only in his native town. His father bought the place now occupied by Jonathan about the time of the war of 1812, consequently the boys were reared as farmers, and received poor educational advantages. They were industrious, hard-working boys, and did a great deal of teaming, lumbering, etc. He was twice married, first to Jane Eaton, who was born May 24, 1793. Their children were Susan E. (now Mrs. Horatio Beede, of Frenont. She was married in her eighteenth year to Moses B. Gove, of Grand River, N. H. They had two children,—Eliza J., born April 12, 1839, and Cyrus A., born Aug. 21, 1846. He died Sept. 7, 1857. Mrs. Gove married Timothy Tilton Oct. 2, 1861. He died Jan. 22, 1863, leaving no issue. She married Mr. Beede Sept. 23, 1863. He died Feb. 16, 1878. Cyrus A. Gove married Augusta C. Cass, of Stanstead, Canada. They had one daughter,—Susie E. Mrs. Cyrus A. Gove died April 24, 1879. He then married Minnie D. Smith, of Chester, Nov. 22, 1881), Jonathan, Sr., Joseph and Jabez; Mrs. French (1st) died March 26, 1826. He next married Eliza, daughter of Ezekiel Worthen, of Bridgewater, Mass. Their children were James M. and Sophronia A. Phineas French belonged to the Free-Will Baptist Church. He was a Whig, and took a foremost part in the Free-Soil movement. He served his town well in the office of selectman, and took a prominent part in all reform movements of the day. He was a kind, industrious, and prudent man, strictly honest, and served his day and generation well.

The present Jonathan French received a common-school education, which was supplemented by a short course at Stratford Academy. He has been all his life a farmer, and owns the mills first owned by his grandfather and father. He does considerable lumbering business, especially in the fall and winter. He owns about three hundred acres of land, and is one of the representative farmers of Danville. He is Republican in politics, and was chosen to represent his town in the Legislature in 1875. He stands to-day the last representative of his branch of the French family. At about twenty-one years of age he went to Charlestown, Mass., to learn the carpenter trade. After working there a few months he returned to Danville, where he became so much engrossed in his home affairs that he has remained to the present time. By strict attention to business, by perseverance and economy he has steadily added to his possessions, and to-day he has a handsome competency, and is deemed one of Danville's most substantial citizens.

JOHN ELKINS.

John Elkins was born in Danville, N. H., Jan. 1, 1821. His grandfather, Jeremiah Elkins, lived in Kingston, whence he removed to Danville, where he died. He was a farmer by occupation. He had three children, among whom was Henry, father of John Elkins. He was born in Danville, was a farmer, was twice married, first to Susanah Clough, who died May 9, 1834, second to Mary Swcatt. By his first wife he had five children that reached maturity, three sons and two daughters,—John, Abel, Thomas, Eleanor, and Susanah. The two daughters now reside in Chester. One is wife of Lewis Kimball, the other is Mrs. Edward Hazleton. When John was quite young his father removed to Kingston, but John remained in Danville with his grandfather, Jeremiah, by whom he was reared. He received a common-school education, supplemented by an attendance at the Stratford and Kingston Academies. He became a successful farmer, and at his grandfather's death succeeded him in the possession of the old homestead. He married, Nov. 21, 1843, Luella B., daughter of Josiah and Sarah (Quimby) Philbrick. She was born March 16, 1824. They had five children,—Sarah Frances, Charles Henry (deceased), Mary Ellen, Susan Emily (deceased), and Herman Foster (deceased). Sarah Francis married George M. Cook, of Exeter. They have two children. Mary Ellen married Alden E. Spofford. They now reside in Boston.

In politics Mr. Elkins was a Republican. He took a leading part in political matters, was representative to the Legislature, selectman, and town clerk for a number of years. At various times he held all the offices within the gift of the town. He was a resolute, industrious man, displaying energy in everything he undertook. He was one of the best farmers of the town. With no conservative ideas on any subject, he kept pace with the rapid strides made in architecture and farming, built a fine residence, and kept himself supplied with every implement that could be made useful in successfully tilling the soil. His integrity was never doubted. Frank, open-hearted, and generous, he made many friends. He was a kind father, a loving husband, a good neighbor, and his death, which occurred Aug. 3, 1879, was a sad blow to all who knew him.

The first known maternal ancestor of Mrs. Elkins was her great-great-grandfather, Jeremiah, who married and had children,—Jacob, Moses, Aaron (her great-grandfather), and Jeremiah. Aaron married second wife, Mary Towle, and had Ziporah, Rebecca, Elisha (her grandfather), Joanna, Lucy, Mary, and Aaron. Elisha married Hannah Badger, and had Nicholas, Aaron, Stephen, and Sarah (her mother), who married Josiah Philbrick, and had Almon Q., Luella B. (Mrs. John Philbrick), Almira, and Madison. Col. Aaron Quimby, her mother's brother, was born in Danville, June 6, 1799, was reared on the farm, has held all the important town offices, was representative to Legislature three years, was selectman nine years, has had ten commissions, five years each, for justice of peace, and now has in his possession six commissions in Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Militia, of every grade from ensign to colonel. He always had a great delight in military matters. For many years he taught school in winter, and devoted his time to cooping, surveying, and acting as administrator. In 1881, being then eighty-two, he surveyed a piece of land and made out the deed. He attends the Congregational Church, to which his wife, formerly Mary A. Blake, belonged. In acting as administrator, he has had large sums of money intrusted to his care, and never did malice or suspicion whisper aught against his integrity. He is now living with his niece, Mrs. Elkins, and, having passed through a long and useful life, is prepared to be called away to his fathers.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Geographical—Topographical—Petition for Parish Incorporation—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—The Revolution—Ecclesiastical—Congregational Church—Baptist Church—The Deerfield Academy—Attorneys—Physicians—Early Families—Delegates to Provincial Congress—Representatives and Town Clerks from 1789 to 1882.

DEERFIELD lies in the northwestern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Northwood, on the east by Nottingham, on the south by Raymond and Candia, and on the west by Merrimac County.

The territory embraced within the bounds of the present town of Deerfield originally comprised a portion of Nottingham. The first petition for the organization of a separate parish was presented in 1756, but was not granted. In 1765 the inhabitants again petitioned for separation from the parent town and the prayer was granted, and the new parish took the name of Deerfield.

The First Town-Meeting.—The first legal meeting was held at the house of Samuel Leavitt on Thursday, the 30th day of January, 1766; Wadleigh Cram was chosen moderator; Thomas Simpson, Esq., parish clerk; Samuel Leavitt, John Robinson, Eliphalet Griffin, selectmen; Benjamin Batchelder, constable; John Gile, Jacob Longfellow, Daniel Ladd, Obediah Marston, and Nathaniel Maloon, surveyors of high-ways; Jonathan Glidden and Samuel Tilton, assessors; Abram True and Jeremiah Eastman, auditors; Jedediah Prescott, Jeremiah Eastman, Samuel Tilton, Benjamin Folsom, Thomas Burleigh, Capt. Samuel Leavitt, Thomas Simpson were chosen "a Committee to look out for a Suitable Place to Sett a meeting-house upon and a Return at the next annual Meeting from under the major part of their hands and the Same to be received or Rejected by the Parish as they Shall think proper."

Fifteen pounds lawful money were voted to be "assessed to defray parish charges."

The first annual meeting was held "at the house of Wadleigh Crams," March 18, 1766, when John Robinson was chosen moderator; Thomas Simpson, parish clerk; and the same men for selectmen as last year; Dr. Jonathan Hill and Jeremiah Eastman were chosen auditors.

A new committee was raised for locating the meeting-house. "Voted Ju<sup>n</sup> Robinson, Abram True, Eliphalet Eastman, Samuel Winslow Nehemiah Cram be a Committee to Look out a Suitable place for to Sett a meeting-house on and Look out where the Roads will best accommodate to Come to Said Meeting-house."

The first money voted to be raised for preaching the gospel was fifteen pounds, on the 15th day of December, 1766. At the same time it was voted, "That Capt. John Dudley be the Person to Look out for Some Suitable to supply the Parish of Deerfield with Preaching So far as the money above voted shall Extend."

The Revolution.—Deerfield was active in its opposition to British oppression, contributed liberally in men and money. It appears that men from Deerfield gallantly fought at Lexington and in Rhode Island, and wherever New England men were found struggling for liberty. The names of eighteen persons from this town who died in the Revolution are preserved.<sup>1</sup> It is believed that Maj. John Simpson fired the first gun upon the British with fatal result in that immortal battle at Bunker Hill. It was a premature discharge of his musket, but one that was immediately followed by a general engagement. Maj. Simpson died Oct. 28, 1825. Joseph Mills, an officer in Col. Cilley's regiment during the Revolution, was afterwards an efficient magistrate and a worthy representative. He died in June, 1809, aged sixty years. Hon. Richard Jenness, who acted so important a part in the early history of this town, died July 4, 1819, aged seventy-three years, greatly respected as a magistrate, representative, senator, and judge of the Common Pleas Court.

One hundred and thirty-nine of the inhabitants subscribed to the following declaration and fourteen refused: "We, the Subscribers, do hereby solemnly engage and promise that we will to the utmost of our power, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, with arms oppose the hostile proceedings of the British Fleets and Armies against the United American Colonies."

Ecclesiastical.—The first religious services in the town were held by the Congregationalists, and the first settled pastor was Rev. Timothy Upham, who officiated in that office from 1772 until his death in 1811. His successors have been as follows: Rev. Nathaniel Wells, 1812-41; Rev. Ephraim Nelson, 1841-49; Rev. William A. Patten, 1850-52; (for three years the pulpit was supplied by Rev. W. A. Forbes and E. F. Abbott); Rev. F. W. Condit, 1855-64; Rev. Lyman White succeeded the second ministry of Mr. Patten, commencing his labors in 1874. Rev. Mr. White graduated from Dartmouth in 1846; at Andover in 1849; preached at Epping five years, at Easton (Mass.) seven years, at Phillipston (Mass.) eight years, at Pembroke (N. H.) four years and a half.

Baptist Church.—This church was organized in 1770 with fourteen members. The first pastor was Elifelet Smith. It was disbanded in 1787. A branch of the Brentwood Church was organized soon after, which subsequently became extinct, and in 1816 (September 12th) the "First Baptist Church of Deerfield" was organized.

The first house of worship occupied by the Baptists was built 1770, and located about one mile and a half southeast of the centre of the town. In 1822 it was removed to the centre and occupied in connection with the Free-Will Baptists, and was called the "Union Meeting-House." The Baptists completed and dedicated their present sanctuary in October, 1834.

Among those who have occupied the pastoral office are mentioned Revs. James Barnaby, Isaac Merring,

Ibela Wilcox, Isaac Sanger, O. O. Stearns, Noah Hooper, James N. Chase, L. C. Stevens, Edward T. Lyford, Oliver Ayer, Henry O. Walker, etc.

Free-Will Baptist Church.—This church was organized in 1799. They worshiped many years in the Union meeting-house, which was burned in 1839, and rebuilt in 1840 by the Free-Will Baptist people alone, and is occupied by them now. This house is pleasantly located at the centre of the town, midway between the Congregational and Calvin Baptist Churches.

Among those who have labored as pastors of this church are John Kimball, S. B. Dyer, I. S. Davis, G. D. Garland, P. S. Burbank, C. S. Smith, Aaron Ayer, Ezra Tuttle, G. S. Hill, and Ira Emery. Mr. Emery came here in 1871. He studied theology at Bangor Seminary, and was ordained at Industry, Me., Sept. 9, 1868. He was dismissed from Deerfield in 1876, and was followed by E. Blake, the present pastor.

The Deerfield Academy.—The families that settled here and on lands contiguous were to an unusual degree possessed of wealth and intellectual culture; and besides caring for the district school, they supported a high school, which for many years was known as the academy, founded about 1798 by Joseph Mills, Esq., Col. Joseph Hilton, Gen. Benjamin Butler, Maj. Isaac Shepard, and Andrew Freeze, Esq. It was a flourishing school in its day. Phineas Howe, a young lawyer at the Parade, was its first preceptor, and continued at its head until about 1812. Mr. Jewett, Nathan T. Hilton, and "Master James Hussey" were the most prominent successors of Mr. Howe.

This academy building was ultimately sold to the Parade school district, and destroyed by fire about 1842.

Attorneys.—Among the attorneys who have practiced here were David Frank, Edmund Toppen, Phineas Howe, Moody Kent, Josiah Butler, Jason Merrill, N. P. Hoar, D. Steele, Jr., F. H. Davis, Josiah Houghton, Ira St. Clair, Nathaniel Dearborn, and H. G. Cilley.

In addition to the above, Francis D. Randall, of Deerfield, was register of deeds from 1834 to 1849.

Richard Jenness was judge of Court of Common Pleas from 1809 to 1813.

Dudley Freeze was judge of Court of Common Pleas from 1832 to 1842.

Benjamin Jenness was sheriff from 1830 to 1835. He was son of Judge Richard Jenness.

Peter Chadwick was clerk of the Court of Common Pleas from 1817 to 1834, and clerk of the Superior Court from 1829 to 1837.

Peter Sanborn was for several years State treasurer.

Physicians.—The physicians of Deerfield have been Edmund Chadwick, Thomas Brown, Stephen Brown, John Hidden, Dr. Young, and Dr. G. H. Towle. Dr. Towle is a native of Deerfield, and has an extensive practice.

Early Families.—Among the early families are mentioned those of Batchelder, Bean, Brown, Butler, Cate, Chadwick, Chase, Churchill, Cilley, Collins, Cram, Currier, Dearborn, Eastman, Freeze, French, Fernald, Gerrish, Gilman, Griffin, Haines, Hilton, Hoag, James, Jenness, Maloon, Marston, Mills, Moore, Page, Prescott, Rand, Sanborn, Sawyer, Simpson, Smith, Stevens, G. H. Towle, Thompson, Tilton, True, Veasey, Weare, Whittier, White, and Woodman.

Delegates to Provincial Congress.—The following is a list of delegates to Provincial Congress from 1774 to 1788, inclusive:

HON. J. J. DEARBORN.

The pioneers of the Dearborn family in Upper Rockingham were two young men, cousins-german, who, about 1772, established themselves, the one, Henry (afterwards major-general, Secretary of War, etc.), at Nottingham as a physician, and the other, Edward, at Deerfield as a farmer. Edward died suddenly in the prime of life, and his eldest son, Sewall, succeeded to the homestead, where he passed a long and useful life.

Hon. Joseph J. Dearborn, whose portrait herewith appears, was the son of Sewall and Sarah Dow Dearborn, and was born March 8, 1818. He had the usual advantages of schooling then common to most country boys, and at an early age obtained employment in a country store. On attaining his majority he began business for himself at the old "Jenness store," at Deerfield South Road. When about twenty-five years of age he removed to Bangor, Me., where for a term of years he was engaged in the hardware trade, until on account of broken health he was compelled to retire from all active business. He finally returned to his native town, and soon after established a shoe-factory, and for more than twenty years pursued that business at South Deerfield, where he still resides. Mr. Dearborn is a man of positive convictions, active temperament, and great earnestness of purpose, and through many years of active life has borne among his neighbors a prominent part in all those questions that an eventful period has successively brought forward. He has from time to time held most of the offices within the gift of his townsmen, and in 1850 and 1861 represented his town in the General Court, and in 1865 and 1866 his district in the New Hampshire State Senate.

Mr. Joseph Henry Dearborn, of Pembroke, is his only surviving child.

EZRA A. J. SAWYER.

Ezra A. J. Sawyer was born in Deerfield, N. H., Nov. 3, 1828. His great-grandfather, Josiah Sawyer, was one of the original proprietors of Nottingham. His wife was a sister of Jeremiah Eastman, who surveyed the town of Deerfield. E. A. J. Sawyer is a son of John and Clarissa (Chesley) Sawyer, and grandson of David, third son of Josiah. He was reared a farmer, and received a common-school and academical education, and in early manhood taught school. May 24, 1853, he married Sarah Collins, daughter of Joseph Bean and Lydia H. Collins, who was a daughter of Col. Samuel Collins; she was born April 8, 1830. Their children are Fred. B., born April 16, 1854; John F., born March 2, 1856; and Mabel J., born April 11, 1861. Mr. Sawyer was appointed collector of taxes as soon as he was old enough to hold the position, and in 1855 was appointed deputy sheriff, which office he has held uninterruptedly (with the exception of two years) to the present time. He was representative to the State Legislature in 1865-66, and has been justice of the peace and quorum throughout the State for many years. He was appointed postmaster in 1874, and still holds the appointment. In politics, Mr. Sawyer is a Republican, staunch yet liberal.

His life has been a very active one, and it is characteristic of him that whatever he undertakes to do he does thoroughly. He is strict in the performance of his duty, but withal a kind-hearted man and warm friend, honest and honorable. He is an attendant of the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Sawyer is a member. Mr. Sawyer's sons left home for Dubuque, Iowa, in 1874, where they remained about two years. The youngest traveled quite extensively in a business capacity, but both are now settled at Lead City, Dak., one a hotel-keeper, the other engaged in lumber business. The daughter has attended Packer Institute in Brooklyn, N. Y., but is now at home.

CHAPTER XXV.

As the territory of Derry formed a large and important part of "Nutfield," or Old Londonderry, its history, down to the time when division became a necessity, is to be found in connection with that town. Derry was incorporated July 2, 1827. Prior to that time the town-meetings had been held alternately at the East and West Parish Meeting-houses with equal division of the offices. It was found, however, that the large size of the town made it very inconvenient to attend the town-meetings. The East Parish therefore called for a division, the West opposed it; but after a short, sharp, but decisive contest the New Hampshire Legislature divided the town. In the autumn of 1827 a meeting was held, officers were chosen, and the new town put upon its course. The basis of division gave to Derry three-fifths of the valuation of the old town and three-fifths of the population. The number of inhabitants in Derry at that time was about twenty-two hundred, and although there has been no increase great advance has been made in the material interests of the people. Many elegant and costly houses have been built, the large number of fine farms in town greatly improved, and evidence is seen on every hand of the general prosperity and wealth that attend upon intelligence, labor, and capital.

The Pinkerton Academy in Londonderry was founded by the brothers Maj. John and Elder James Pinkerton, sons of John Pinkerton, who came from the north of Ireland and settled in Londonderry in 1738 or 1739, "the Scotchman who passed over from Scotland to Ireland, and after the battle of the Boyne emigrated to New Hampshire, introduced the culture of the potato and flax and the manufacture of linen, both thread, sheeting, and diaper." John and James Pinkerton were for fifty years leading merchants of that region. "They were both men of more than ordinary financial ability, uniting in their character Scotch prudence and stability with Yankee enterprise.

They were distinguished, moreover, by their strict moral and religious principles and habits." These gentlemen contributed as permanent funds of the academy fourteen thousand five hundred dollars, which afterwards accumulated to sixteen thousand. A charter was obtained June 15, 1814, and the school opened in December, 1815. An act of incorporation was secured "by the name of the Pinkerton Academy in Londonderry." This name was afterwards changed to "Pinkerton Academy." It was given "for the purpose of promoting piety and virtue, and for the education of youth in such of the liberal arts and Sciences or Languages as the Trustees hereinafter provided shall direct."

The trustees named and appointed by the act of incorporation were "the Rev. William Morrison, John Pinkerton, Jr., Esquire, John Burnham, Esquire, Isaac Thorn, Esquire, Deacon James Pinkerton, Rev. Edward L. Parker, John Porter, Esquire, Alanson Tucker, Esquire, and Doctor Robert Bartley, all of said Londonderry." To these have been added successively as vacancies occurred thirty-one other gentlemen, including usually the ministers for the time of the original East and West Parishes of Old Londonderry, and of the Congregational society in the village, also those of Windham and Chester and of some other towns more distant, and with these a considerable proportion of laymen, who have from the beginning rendered essential service to the institution and the interest which it is designed to promote.

The first president was Elder or Deacon (for he was called by both titles) James Pinkerton, the younger of the original founders. Then followed, in 1819, Rev. Edward L. Parker, the minister of the East Parish. In 1822, Rev. Daniel Dana, then minister of the West Parish, and afterwards president of Dartmouth College. Dr. Dana was succeeded in 1826 by Hon. William M. Richardson, of Chester, long the chief justice of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rev. John H. Church, D.D., of Pelham, became president in 1838, and Rev. Edward L. Parker, the second time, in 1840. On the decease of Mr. Parker, in 1850, John Porter, Esq., of Derry, "an eminent jurist," was chosen his successor. In 1858, Samuel H. Taylor, LL.D., of Andover, Mass.; in 1871, John M. Pinkerton, Esq., of Boston; and in 1881, Rev. Ebenezer G. Parsons, of Derry, were successively elected to the office on the demise of their predecessors.

The first preceptor was Samuel Burnham, Esq., who had been teacher of a classical school many years in the Upper or East Village. Mr. Burnham resigned in 1818. Mr. Weston B. Adams was preceptor one year, and was followed by the most renowned of the teachers who have successively filled this chair, Abel Fletcher Hildreth. Mr. Hildreth was born in 1793, fitted for college at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and graduated at Harvard in 1818. He entered upon his duties as preceptor of the academy in October, 1819, and resigned in 1846. He died in Somerville, Mass., Oct. 6, 1864, aged seventy-one years.

Space is not allowed to give the honored names of gentlemen who have successively and nobly filled the office of preceptor or assistant in this school, nor of the long list of students who have received their earlier education here. Several thousands is their number. Very many of them have been greatly useful in the different walks of life; a large proportion of them have been eminent in the professions or pursuits in which they have engaged. One hundred and thirty of them are included in the roll of honor reported at the semi-centennial anniversary, which gives the names of former members of the school who served in the late war, and of whom many laid down their lives for their country.

Pinkerton Academy was originally a mixed school. This arrangement continued until the opening of the Adams Female Academy in the Upper Village, now East Derry. It was then changed into a boys' school, and remained such till 1853, when it was again opened to both sexes. The ladies who were here educated in the earlier times have mostly passed away. But their education did much to make them the intelligent and noble women they were, and to fit them to exert a refining and quickening influence upon their families and the communities of which they formed so influential a part.

The semi-centennial anniversary of this institution was celebrated Sept. 12, 1866, by special services commemorative of its founding, history, and influence. The citizens of Derry and Londonderry engaged in it with zeal. A great crowd of the members and friends were present, including a number of those who were members of the school in its earliest years.

The chair was taken by S. H. Taylor, LL.D., of Andover, Mass., president of the board of trustees, who, after prayer by Rev. P. B. Day, D.D., of Hollis, made the opening address. This was followed by an oration by Rev. James T. McCollom, of Medford, Mass.

The audience having listened with intense interest to the address and oration, sang together a psalm of thanksgiving, beginning, "Bless, O my Soul, the living God," when other gentlemen who were connected with the academy at different periods gave, with delightful effect, reminiscences of the times when they were pupils here.

Among the older alumni who made addresses were Lieut.-Governor George Washington Patterson, of the State of New York, Rev. William C. Dana, D.D., of Charleston, S. C., Hon. Gerry W. Cochrane, of Boston, Hon. Daniel S. Richardson, of Lowell, Hon. Elias Hasket Derby, of Boston, and many others of more recent connection with the school. The proceedings of the day were published in a neat pamphlet, under the direction of the trustees, entitled "Semi-Centennial of Pinkerton Academy." The occasion was most thoroughly enjoyed, and was a solid benefit to the institution.

The permanent funds of the academy, derived from the bequests of the brothers John and James Pinkerton, amounted, in the year 1848, to sixteen thousand one hundred and eighty-five dollars and eighteen cents ($16,185.18), of which not a dollar is known to have been lost. This sum, mainly by judicious investments and a prosperous school, has become twenty thousand dollars. It was provided in the deeds of gift by the original donors that the surplus income of any year shall be added to the permanent funds. With the means in their hands the trustees have been enabled, during the sixty-seven years of the existence of this institution, to contribute very greatly to the best interests of the communities around it and of the world by "the promotion of piety and virtue" in the country and the thousands of youth who have resorted hither and received their early "education in liberal arts and sciences and languages."

A recent princely bequest of two hundred thousand dollars to the funds of the academy by John Morison Pinkerton, Esq., of Boston, son of the younger of the original founders, a trustee since 1850, and president from 1871 until his death, makes it desirable that some notice be given here of so eminent a benefactor. He was born in Derry, N. H., Feb. 6, 1818, and died Feb. 6, 1881. He fitted for college at the academy, graduated from Yale in 1841, was a teacher two years in Lunenburg County, Va., pursued the study of law in the Harvard Law School and in the office of William Gray, Esq., and was admitted to the Suffolk bar in 1846. In the same year he united with the Mount Vernon Congregational Church, under the pastorate of Rev. Edward N. Kirk, D.D. Those who knew him best say "he made religion of his business and business of his religion." His own words to a friend but two or three days before his death are the expression of his own most serious thoughts: "There is nothing that seems so desirable as moral and spiritual worth, which makes a man love to do things which flesh and pride and covetousness hate to do, and never will do. This power comes from on high, and can be had if wanted in dead earnest."

His hand of charity and benevolence was always open. During the later years of his life his gifts to these objects exceeded one-third of his net income. Mr. Pinkerton was a profound student of the Bible and of all within his reach that could illustrate its meaning. He read through the Greek Testament six times in twenty years, and had proceeded more than half the way on the seventh reading when death overtook him. There are in the possession of his late pastor, Rev. S. E. Herrick, D.D. (from whose most interesting "Memorial Discourse" a large part of these paragraphs have been taken) "more than a dozen books, containing in the aggregate doubtless some thousands of pages, filled with the results of careful thought and study upon the Bible. They cover the whole range of revealed truth. There is no dry commonplace in them. They are dewy in their freshness, original, bristling, piquant. There are single words compact with meaning in every page. He did not know how to be superficial. He was a man who kept abreast with the thought of the time, who did not hold to the past merely because it was old nor take up with the new because it was new, but who loved the truth, old or new, because it was truth, and therefore of God. He was a man so strong as to have no fear of the boldest questioning; so generous as to sympathize with all earnest doubt that asks for light; so wise as to detect and expose all sophistry; so liberal-minded as to recognize and give due credit to all excellence in opposing or differing opinion, and withal sure of his own intellectual and spiritual footing." The addition of Mr. John M. Pinkerton's bequest to the permanent fund is not immediately available for the purposes of the school. The income, except certain annuities to relations, is to accumulate until a sum is secured from this source sufficient for the erection of a new building which may be adequate to the requirements of the new era of its enlarged usefulness.

The present trustees (1882) are Rev. E. G. Parsons, president; William Anderson, Esq., treasurer; Rev. David Bremner, Rev. Benjamin F. Parsons, secretary; Rev. Robert Haskins, Rev. Charles Tenney, Nathan B. Prescott, Esq., William G. Means, Esq., John P. Newell, Esq.

Adams Female Academy.—This is the first academy in New Hampshire that received incorporation from the Legislature as an institution for the education of young ladies alone. They had been allowed the privileges of the Pinkerton Academy for a few years after its establishment, but when a change was made allowing only males to attend the school the citizens thought best to have an academy where their daughters as well could get a suitable education. Hence the origin of the Adams Female Academy. A classical school had been taught for several years previous in a building erected about 1793, on the East Parish Meeting-house common, near the cemetery. The first teacher in this school was Z. S. Moor, subsequently president of Williams and Amherst Colleges. His successor was Samuel Burnham, a noted teacher in his day, who held the position more than twenty years. In 1814 a new and larger academy was built on the site of the old one, then gone to decay. The donation Maj. Pinkerton made afterwards to the academy in the Lower Village, and which took his name, was originally intended for the school "on the Hill," but in consequence of a little sharp practice on the part of those who had charge of the bill when before the Legislature for incorporation the gift was diverted from the Upper Village to the Lower.

In 1823, upon receiving a bequest of $4000 from the estate of Jacob Adams, the school was incorporated by the name of the "Adams Female Academy." The next year it went into operation under charge of Miss Zilpah P. Grant, assisted by Miss Mary Lyon. After three years' continuance with the school, during which it enjoyed great prosperity, they resigned. Following are the names of the successive teachers: Charles P. Gale, ten years; John Kelley, three years; Miss Laura W. Dwight, three years. In the winter of 1841-42 extensive repairs were made upon the building. The next teacher was Edward P. Parker, who had charge of the school four years. He was succeeded by Miss Mary E. Taylor, afterwards the wife of Governor H. Fairbanks, of Vermont; Rev. E. T. Rome, Henry S. Parker, N. E. Gage, Miss E. C. Bubier, A. J. Marshall, Jennie M. Bartlett, and Mary A. Hoyt.

In 1860, Miss Emma L. Taylor took charge of the school. She held the position seventeen years. Miss E. F. Billings followed her, and she again was succeeded by Miss Carrie Clark. The school is now under the direction of Mrs. David S. Clark. The academy celebrated its semi-centennial July 1, 1873.

Banks.—In 1829 a bank was incorporated in the town by the name of "Derry Bank." Alanson Tucker was chosen president, and James Thom, cashier. They were chiefly instrumental in its organization, and held their positions respectively as president and cashier until the expiration of the charter in 1849. Mr. Tucker was born in Bridgewater, Mass., Jan. 25, 1777, and died at Derry, June 16, 1863. He was for about seventeen years a successful merchant in Boston, Mass. He retired from business at middle life, came to Derry, then Londonderry, with an ample fortune, and purchased the historic Livermore-Prentice-Derby estate, upon which he resided for a time. Subsequently he built the large mansion now owned by his grandson, Edward McGregor, where he passed the closing years of his life. James Thom, born in Londonderry, Aug. 14, 1785, was the son of Dr. Isaac and Persis (Sargent) Thom. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1805, studied law, and practiced his profession in his native town until chosen cashier of the bank. He served as captain for a short time of a company during the last war with England. He possessed fine conversational powers, a social disposition, and had large influence in town. He died Nov. 27, 1852.

Derry National Bank was chartered in 1864, with a capital of $60,000. The first cashier was David Currier, from Chester, N. H., who was succeeded by his son, George C. Currier, John P. Newell, and Fred. Johnston Shepard. June, 1881, the banking-house was removed from Derry Depot to Bartlett's new building at Derry village. The present directors are John W. Noyes, Chester, president; N. B. Prescott, George Moor, Joseph Montgomery, William H. Shepard, Frank W. Parker, and H. C. Matthews, of Derry.

Cemetery.—There is but one in all the large town of Derry. The old part is on land laid out to Rev.

James McGregor. It was the first land in the old town used for burial purposes, and has date very near the first settlement. There were deaths shortly after the settlers set foot upon the soil, and nothing is known of other places of burial. Three additions have been made, one in 1826 and another about 1845, and in 1852 a cemetery association was formed, and land purchased on the western side of the old yard. The new part occupies all the ground between the resting-place of the fathers and the highway. No more beautiful repose for the dead can anywhere be found. All that art, money, and taste can command has been summoned to the task of fitting a place "Where the long concourse from the neighboring town,

With funeral pace, and slow, can enter in,
To lay the lover in tranquil silence down,
No more to suffer, and no more to sin."

It is, however, to the middle part of this cemetery that the steps of the antiquary are directed. Here he will find much to gratify his taste and stimulate his peculiar lines of thought. The curiously-carved stones with the quaint inscriptions carry him back to the "good old times" so much celebrated in story and in song. Let us pause for a moment at the grave of John Wight, whose wit and skill as a maker of headstones for his contemporaries have survived the rough discipline of one hundred and seven years. His stone, a single one, with two heels for man and wife, with a dividing line down the middle, evidently the work of his own hands, stands very near the entrance of the cemetery, "Here lies the body of John Wight, who died Dec. 3, 1775, aged 72 years." He lived on what is now the Thomas Bradford place, where he plied his calling as a gravestone cutter. The traditions of the town delight to recall the sharp repartee he made to Dr. Matthew Thornton a few months after the doctor came to Londonderry. It is well known that Thornton had an endowment of wit that often cropped out. Riding up one morning on horseback to the shop of Wight, who was busily engaged on a stone, the doctor accosted him, "Good-morning, Mr. Wight, I suppose you quarry out your headstones, and finish them so far as to cut the words 'In memory of,' and then wait till some one dies, when you complete it with the appropriate name." "Well," replied Wight, "that used to be me practis till one Dr. Thornton come to town, but now when I hear that he has called upon any one I just keep right on." Many of the grantees of the town are buried in this cemetery, and the first six ministers of the East Parish lie among the people to whom they ministered. Rev. David McGregor, the first minister of the West Parish, found also his last resting-place here. Very few of the stones furnish any history of the sleepers who lie beneath. The inscription on the stone placed to the memory of the wife of John Barr very nearly fixes the date of the emigration of the Barr family: "Here lies the body of Jean Barr, who died Nov. 11, 1737, in the 66 year of her age, who lived 17 years in this land." On the east side of the old part of the cemetery is a stone inscribed as follows:

"Here lyeth the Body of the Revend
Mr. James Morton Minister of Gilestons whose daughter Gar-zuel. She died June 27, 1746."

Post-offices and Postmasters.—The first post-office was established Sept. 30, 1795, and Dr. Isaac Thorn appointed postmaster. He kept the office in the house taken down by Hon. William H. Shepard, at the time he built the house he now resides in. Feb. 29, 1817, the office was removed to Derry Lower Village, on the turnpike, and Daniel Wilmore appointed postmaster. He was succeeded by Charles Redfield, March 19, 1821, and he again by Richard Melvin, July 11, 1826. On the 18th of August, 1827, shortly after the division of the town, the name of this office was changed to Derry. Mr. Melvin was continued in office till May 28, 1830, at which time Lucien Harper became postmaster. From that time to the present the succession of postmasters in that office is as follows: David A. Gregg, Sept. 5, 1835; Joseph A. Gregg, Feb. 26, 1840; George W. Pinkerton, May 18, 1841; Joseph A. Gregg, Oct. 26, 1844; David A. Gregg, Dec. 14, 1848; Robert M. Bailey, June 6, 1849; Robert Chase, Jr., Jan. 6, 1852; Joseph A. Gregg, April 11, 1853; Lucien Harper, Sept. 18, 1854; Ithamar Hubbard, Feb. 5, 1855; William W. Poor, April 13, 1861; George W. Barker, June 3, 1863; W. W. Poor, June 12, 1863; Arthur T. Learned, July 21, 1869; Seneca Pattee, March 31, 1875.

POST-OFFICE AT DERRY DEPOT.—The first post-office "set up" at this place was on the 18th of September, 1854, Samuel H. Quincy, postmaster. The office was discontinued Feb. 6, 1855, but restored Nov. 5, 1860, and the Hon. James Priest appointed postmaster. He kept the office at the depot of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad. July 21, 1869, it was removed across the road to the store of Henry E. Eastman, who was postmaster until the appointment of George S. Rollins, June 2, 1876. He was followed March 21, 1877, by Hiram C. Matthews. The commission of L. H. Pillsbury, the present postmaster, is dated Oct. 23, 1879.

EAST DERRY POST-OFFICE.—This office was established, and Frank W. Parker appointed postmaster, April 7, 1870.

Derry Fair.—This in its day was a matter of great importance to the people, and until it fell into abuse was of much service before stores had been "set up" for the public accommodation. It had its origin in the charter, which granted the "privilege every Wednesday in the week forever to enjoy a market for the selling and buying of goods, etc." Also two fairs annually, one in the spring and the other in the autumn. It does not appear that much account was ever made of these privileges except the last, which was held on the 8th day of October annually, unless that day fell on Sunday, in which case the fair began on Monday, the 9th. Many are the sayings and doings told of Derry Fair. Beside the usual accompaniments of such gatherings, horse-racing was the favorite pastime. The west end of the course was opposite the home of the late David Bassett, and the track terminated where the dwelling of Mrs. Beebe stands, better known as the Dr. Farron place. The fair was continued until about 1834 or 1835, when it was transferred to the tavern stand of Capt. Reuben White, in the north part of Londonderry, he claiming a right to hold a fair under the provisions of the charter. Nothing but evil resulting from it, the citizens of Londonderry procured a repeal of that part of the town's charter relating to the matter, and "Derry Fair" passed into history.

Masonry.—St. Mark's Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, No. 44. This lodge was chartered June 14, 1826, and the following officers installed: Learned M. Barker, W. M.; William Anderson, S. W.; Perkins A. Hodge, J. W.; James W. Nesmith, Treas.; Eben French, Sec.; John Moor, S. D.; James Thorn, J. D.; Clement Parker, Chap.; Robert Mack, S. S.; J. W. Adams, J. S.; Zenas Cushing, Tyler. Of the original members, William Anderson, Esq., alone survives at the ripe age of eighty-five years. The lodge now numbers seventy-five members and the officers are Joseph R. Clark, W. M.; John E. Webster, S. W.; William Clark, J. W.; Nathan B. Prescott, Treas.; G. C. Bartlett, Sec.; G. K. Bartlett, S. D.; Frank P. Bradford, J. D.; S. F. Whidden, Chap.; Alder B. Smith, Marshal; Edward L. Jones, Organist; W. P. Horne, S. S.; G. A. Webster, J. S.; J. E. Taber, Tyler; A. B. Smith, representative to Grand Lodge.

Derry East Village.—This place, for many years the most important part of the old township, has never lost the beauty of its immediate situation or its surroundings, although business has sought more convenient localities. From here the eye takes in a prospect that won the admiration of Gen. Lafayette at his visit in 1824. The view extends from Kearsarge on the north, and sweeping over the valley of the Merrimac, includes the lesser summits of the Uncanoonocks in Goffstown, the historic Jo English hill in New Boston, and the loftier heights of the Temple and Peterborough Mountains, to the Wachusett, in Massachusetts, on the south. It is here we find the town hall, the Taylor Library, the first church on the Hill, and the burial-place of the old and later generations; and around here cluster many of the memories and traditions of the fathers. The beauty of the place and the high character of the people invite the stranger from abroad during the summer months. The one store here is kept by Frank W. Parker, grandson of the historian of the town.

Mr. Samuel Clark, born Dec. 27, 1798, a lifelong resident of the town, is conceded to be the best-informed man in the old township in family history and antiquarian matters generally. He lives at the northeastern shore of Beaver Pond, on the lot originally Samuel Hauston's.

Derry Village.—There were but few houses in this village prior to the incorporation of the Londonderry turnpike in 1804, and but little business was transacted. The turnpike was built soon after the charter was granted, and immediately thereafter stores were erected and various kinds of business gravitated there, so that in a few years the village became a centre of considerable importance. Jonathan Bell, son of Hon. John Bell, had some years before kept a store in a building now the residence of Mrs. Ithamar Hubbard, which then stood in front of the Thornton house. In 1806, James and Peter Patterson, of the West Parish, built a store in which they traded a few years. They were succeeded by Peter Patterson and Capt. William Choate, and they again by the Nesmiths,—Thomas, John, and Col. James. This store is now the residence of Mr. William Butterfield. No store in its day was better known than that of Adams & Redfield, built about 1810. A very large and profitable trade was carried on by them for several years. As an illustration how modern ways have supplanted the old, it may be stated that all of their heavy goods, such as salt, molasses, and rum, were brought from Boston to Lowell by way of the Middlesex Canal, and thence up the Merrimac River by boat to a landing below Thornton's Ferry, and thence across the sands and through the woods of Litchfield ten miles to the store. Col. Samuel Adams was a man of note in his day. He was born in Newbury, Mass., April 2, 1779, came to Londonderry with his father when quite young, and died there Sept. 12, 1861. The building used for mercantile purposes by Seneca Pattee was built by Leonard Hale and has been occupied by James V. Dickey, John A. Pinkerton, McGraw & Hodge, Porter & Pinkerton, F. W. Bailey, George H. Taylor, Warner & Brown, Barker & Poor, and Conch & Brown. In 1861, George F. Adams became proprietor, and continued in trade until 1869, when he sold to the present occupant. Capt. William Choate erected a store about 1825 where Association Hall, built in 1875, now stands. The traders in this store were Capt. Choate and two or three others, William Anderson, Esq., being the last. The store built by Robert Hall on the west side of the street was used by him as such, and also by Hall & Anderson, A. F. Hall, William Leach, Charles Adams, and the present proprietor, Henry Bradford. The "Derry Cash Store," occupied by Frank G. Howe, was previously occupied by Arthur T. Learned, George W. Barker, and others.

In 1868, Benjamin Chase, Jr., from Auburn, N. H., began the manufacture of reed ribs, used in making loom reeds for weaving cloth, and harness shafts, on which loom harness is made. He also manufactures heddle frames, which are used in weaving woolen wares. The business has increased upon his hands until it is now one of the most prosperous industries in town. There is but one other manufactory of this sort in the United States. Nathan B. Prescott, a resident of the village, is largely engaged in the ice business in Boston, Mass., and vicinity. W. W. Poor is proprietor of the historic Gregg Mill, in which he grinds and sells many thousand bushels of corn annually. His mill stands a few feet north of the "alder-bush," the first point of departure the surveyors made in laying out the land of that locality. The village has always enjoyed the services of the physician and the lawyer. In the past generations Dr. Matthew Thornton, a hundred years gone by, and in later years Dr. Luther V. Bell held high prominence. Dr. James H. Crombie and Dr. David S. Clark are now in successful practice. Hon. John Porter, born in Bridgewater, Mass., Feb. 26, 1776, a graduate of Dartmouth in 1803, a resident of Derry from 1806 till his death, Dec. 4, 1857, held high rank as a counselor-at-law. He was many years a member of the House of Representatives, and in 1827-28 he served on the commission that revised the laws of New Hampshire. Hon. David A. Gregg, nearly a lifelong resident of the village, was held in high esteem as a lawyer and a citizen. In the department of law the profession is represented by Greenleaf Ciley Bartlett and G. K. Bartlett, father and son. The former comes of Revolutionary stock on both sides of the house, and has long been a resident of Derry. The firm enjoy an extensive practice at the Rockingham bar.

Derry Depot.—Before the construction of the Londonderry turnpike the business centre of the town was on the hill in the East Parish. There were the leading hotels and stores, and there the post-office. If any of the townspeople were unfortunate enough to need a physician, a lawyer, or a sheriff, all these were to be found within the limits of what is now East Derry village. But the turnpike changed all this, and the lower village became the centre. In like manner measurably has business been diverted to Derry Depot by the building of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad, which opened Nov. 13, 1849. The land occupied by the western part of the village was laid out in 1722 "to John McClurg, Elizabeth Wilson, and Mary, her daughter;" other portions to William Ayres, James Alexander, and John Goffe. At the time the railroad went into operation there was but one house between the dwelling of Alfred Boyd, on the east, and that of Jonathan (now John) Holmes, on the west, near the brook. That small, gambrel-roofed, one-story house, surrounded by its lawn of green, was for many years the home of Samuel Remick, a volunteer soldier from Bedford, N. H., at Bennington. It stood between the present houses of Alden B. Smith and Thomas Tarbell, the well of the Remick house being the same used by Mr. Tarbell. At the battle Remick stood near St. Orr, also of Bedford, saw him fall from the effects of a wound in the knee, and assisted him from the field. Upon his return to the front he was himself shot, and while upon the ground loaded and discharged his gun several times at the enemy. He recovered, and came to Derry, where he spent the remainder of life in the enjoyment of a pension from a grateful country.

In due time after the cars commenced running, Benjamin Eastman, a resident of East Derry, and a man of remarkable capacity for business, erected the hotel of Mr. Smith and the large store of L. H. & W. S. Pillsbury, which were destroyed by fire, Aug. 19, 1882. Mr. Eastman also built the extensive shoe manufactory of Col. W. S. Pillsbury. Boyd & Currier occupied this building for making boots; Hodges & Davis followed in the manufacture of shoes; and after them N. Sylvester in making army shoes. Nov. 12, 1870, Col. Pillsbury became the owner. E. P. Phillips & Co., Clement, Colburn & Co., Colburn, Fuller & Co. have successively been occupants of the building, the latter firm now doing a very large business, of which Col. Pillsbury has the sole charge. The rapid growth and prosperity of the village is due to him more than to any one else. He has made four additions to the original manufactory, built a shop for the making of shoes by the "Compo method," and erected several houses. He manufactures not less than six hundred different styles of ladies' boots and shoes, great quantities going to all parts of the world. Shipments are annually made round Cape Horn in boxes lined with tin. In a few years the sales have increased from $75,000 per year to $600,000. About four hundred and fifty persons find employment here, receiving in the aggregate about $20,000 per month. In the packing department 300,000 feet of boards are used annually for boxes.

Kit Manufactory.—Mr. James Frederick Coburn, who manufactures "half- and quarter-barrels and kits," came to Derry Depot from Townsend, Mass., in 1874. He employs about fifty men. The business has increased from 20,000 barrels per year to over 100,000. He uses annually 1,000,000 hoops and 1500 cords of pine lumber.

The Milk Business.—This is carried on by Harvey P. Hood, is extensive, and is the source of much prosperity to Derry, Londonderry, and Windham. Mr. Hood runs a car daily to Boston, carrying 150 cans each day. He uses for his own stock, and sells 250 tons of shorts, 50 tons of cotton-seed meal, and about 130 tons of meal yearly. Three hundred and fifty tons of ice are required annually in preserving the milk on the way to market. Mr. Hood's farm, in Derry village, is one of the best farms in town.

The Horne Brothers at their new steam mill have a flourishing business in the manufacture of boxes for boots, shoes, and fish. They employ ten or twelve men. The Manchester and Lawrence Railroad brings into Derry about one hundred and fifty car-loads of various sorts of grain, and takes five thousand to seven thousand barrels of apples annually.

There are three stores in the village, which are doing a large business. They are kept by L. H. & W. S. Pillsbury, Smith & Rollins, and G. F. Putnam. Aug. 19, 1882, a fire in the heart of the village destroyed property to the amount of about $75,000. The buildings burned were the hotel of A. B. Smith, in which the fire began, the store owned by A. P. Hardy and W. S. Pillsbury, the store of Smith & Rollins, the depot of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad, and several other places of business. Several houses were burned, and fourteen families made homeless. The village contains over ninety houses, and a population of five hundred people. Dr. Ira H. Adams, a native of Pomfret, Vt., and a graduate of the Medical Department of Dartmouth College, established himself here March 15, 1882.

Mexican War.—There were two Derry men in this war:

John G. Bond and Hiram Rowell.

The former, whose health was broken down in the service, died at Concord, N. H., in 1876.

Derry in the Rebellion, 1861-65.—This town, like most New Hampshire towns, promptly responded to the call of the United States government for troops, and all through the unhappy contest contributed its full share of means and men. The first year of the war about thirty men volunteered in the service of the United States. In August, 1862, the town sent ten men, paying each $200 bounty. Under the draft of Aug. 11, 1863, Derry paid each of the drafted men $300. Oct. 17, 1863, twenty-two men were enlisted, costing the town $13,276. February, 1864, thirteen volunteers were paid $2502, and three were drafted, who received $900. July 18, 1864, nineteen three years' men were "put in," at the cost of $11,400, one two years' man, $600, and thirteen one year men, at an expense of $6000. Dec. 19, 1864, the town paid $7350 for seventeen enlisted men, making in all one hundred and fourteen men, at the aggregate cost of $48,828.

ROLL OF MEN WHO ENLISTED.

Mr. Daniel G. George, a resident of Derry, enjoys the honor of being the man who pulled the lanyard of the torpedo that destroyed the rebel boat "Albemarle" during the late war. He has received ten thousand dollars from the United States government as a reward for his bravery. He has also a beautiful medal, the gift of government, in acknowledgment of his services.

Londonderry Celebration.—June 10, 1869, one hundred and fifty years from the settlement of the town, a vast concourse of people from all parts of the country assembled on the plains a few rods east of Derry Depot, and celebrated the occasion with feasting, speech, and song. Many thousands of the citizens of Old Londonderry and other towns in the vicinity assembled in a large tent, raised for the purpose, and listened to speeches from some of the eminent men of the day. Hon. George W. Patterson, of Westfield, N. Y., a native of the town, presided, and Hon. Charles H. Bell, of Exeter, N. H., now Governor, made the leading address. He was followed by Hon. James W. Patterson, of Hanover, N. H., Horace Greeley, Dr. S. H. Taylor, Hon. E. H. Derby, Gen. Aaron F. Stevens, Rev. C. M. Dinsmore, and Hon. A. H. Cragin.

A little after noon the vast assembly was provided with a generous entertainment by the ladies of Derry, Londonderry, and Windham.

It was an occasion of rare enjoyment to all who participated in the services of the day.

A compilation of the exercises was made by R. C. Mack in a volume of one hundred and twenty-four pages.

Nutfield Grange, No. 37.—The Patrons of Husbandry organized Sept. 23, 1874, a grange, to which the appropriate name of "Nutfield" was given. The first Master was W. O. Noyes, and his successors are Isaiah A. Dunton, Edward L. Jones, and Joseph R. Clark.

There are at present eighty-seven members.

Newspapers and Printing.—A printing-office was "set up" many years ago by Isaiah Thomas or his brother on Doug's Plains, now Boyd's Plains, a little east of Derry Depot. How long he was there or just where his office was situated is not known. In the summer of 1876, Charles Bartlett opened a printing-office in Derry village, and uniting with this the sale of books and stationery, he has carried on a successful business since. In connection with N. C. Bartlett, in 1880, he commenced the publication of the Derry News. At the end of the year Mr. N. C. Bartlett retired, leaving the control of the paper to Mr. Charles Bartlett, who in April, 1882, enlarged it to a twenty-four-column folio. The paper is a success, and is much appreciated by the citizens of Derry and Londonderry and former residents of both towns.

Town Hall.—In 1876 the town erected a large and handsome building for town purposes. It is located just east of the store of F. W. Parker, in East Derry, and cost $7000. In the upper story a convenient room is fitted for the "Taylor Library."

First Library.—A few of the leading people in town a little before 1800 established a library of several hundred volumes. It was kept at first at the house of Capt. James Aiken, otherwise known as Deacon Aiken, now the residence of John Folsom, in the Aiken's Range, Derry. When the village began to assume importance the books were removed to the Thornton House, and Maj. Peter Patterson served as librarian. They were mostly of an historical and religious character, were well read, and were kept together till the division of the town in 1827, when they were divided among the stockholders. John Porter, Esq., for those who lived in the new town, and Robert Mack, for Londonderry, made the division. The rule they adopted was to give the interested parties each a pile of books of about equal size. Many volumes of that old library are yet to be found in various families in both towns.

Taylor Library.—Upon the death of Miss Harriet Taylor the town secured from her estate $1000 to found a library. It went into operation Feb. 23, 1878, with about one thousand volumes. The library now contains about fourteen hundred volumes. Miss Elizabeth F. Billings has been librarian from the time the books were first placed upon the shelves. There are libraries belonging to both of the academies.

Telegraph.—A line between Derry Depot via Derry village and East Derry to Chester, N. H., a distance of five miles, was established in 1877. The business has been sufficient to make the stock profitable.

Grand Army.—George E. Upton Post, No. 45. This post is named after Lieut. George E. Upton, who enlisted as a private Nov. 28, 1861, in Co. G, Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers, and was promoted to first lieutenant Oct. 30, 1863, and was killed near Petersburg, Va., July 30, 1864. The post was chartered Sept. 4, 1879. Following are the names of the charter members: David S. Clark, James H. Crombie, Charles H. Cummings, Isaiah A. Dustin, James Evans, Charles F. Fields, Isaac N. Hunt, Francis Owens, A. A. Prosser, George Richards, C. M. Tilton, George B. Tuttle, Henry C. Vining, Caleb F. Whidden, and Amos M. Young. Number of members, thirty-four.

Odd-Fellowship.—ECHO LODGE. April 17, 1879, a lodge of Odd-Fellows by the above name was instituted in Derry. The initial meeting numbered nineteen persons, eight being charter members and eleven by admission. The first officers were Henry S. Warner, N. G.; R. R. Merriek, V. G.; F. A. Cross, Sec.; Charles L. Cutler, Treas.

Present officers: G. A. Wheeler, N. G.; T. R. Robie, V. G.; F. M. Stearns, Sec.; G. P. Taylor, Treas.; G. W. Clark, Ward.; C. G. Kimball, Con.; O. U. Turner, I. G.; G. H. Harlow, O. G.; J. E. Merrill, R. S. N. G.; J. E. Tabor, L. S. N. G.; C. O. Buttrick, R. S. V. G.; D. G. Bodwell, L. S. V. G.; W. W. Payne, R. S. S.; J. F. Hall, L. S. S.; A. S. Stowell, Chaplain. The lodge has seventy-four members.

Public Bequests in Derry.—This town has enjoyed a larger share of public bequests than falls to the lot of most towns. As early as 1722 the hard-pressed settlers were generously aided by gentlemen of Portsmouth in the building of their church. In 1815, Maj.

John Pinkerton endowed the Pinkerton Academy with a fund of twelve thousand dollars, and his brother, Deacon James Pinkerton, added fifteen hundred to this amount. Mr. Jacob Adams, who died in 1823, by his will devised about four thousand dollars to the Adams Female Academy. Mr. Adams also donated eight hundred dollars to the East Church in Derry, to aid in purchasing a bell for that meeting-house. The late Mrs. Abby C. McGregor left the sum of one thousand dollars to the Adams Female Academy. In 1870, Richard Melvin gave the First Congregational Society a fund of one thousand dollars. Dr. Sylvanus Brown bequeathed about seven thousand dollars to the town, the yearly income of which is to be expended in the purchase of flannel for the destitute people of the town as the selectmen for the time being shall designate. About fifteen hundred yards are annually distributed in this way. Dr. Brown also left five hundred dollars, the annual interest to be used in "picking the small stones from the public highways." He devised likewise a small sum to remain at interest until 1919, at which time the whole shall be used in payment for "nuts and cider" for all persons present at the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the town's settlement. Hon. E. H. Derby, of Boston, an eloquent and sincere friend of the town, lately deceased, gave to Pinkerton Academy one thousand dollars for a library, available upon the death of Mrs. Derby. The academy also received about five hundred dollars from various persons at its semi-centennial in 1878. Miss Harriet Taylor, daughter of Deacon James Taylor, formerly an honored citizen of Derry, bequeathed in 1876 one thousand dollars to found a public library in town. The elegant clock in the steeple of the East Derry Church, whose two broad faces may be seen far and wide, was placed there by her generous bounty. Mrs. Philip Nowell, who lately died, left two thousand dollars to the town, to be expended in the erection of a town hall. She also gave five hundred dollars to the Cemetery Association, and the same sum for the benefit of the old part of the cemetery, and also one thousand dollars to the Adams Female Academy. The late David Bassett left three thousand dollars to repair the East Derry Church. But the most munificent bequest is that of two hundred thousand dollars to the Pinkerton Academy by the late John M. Pinkerton.

Telephone.—Aug. 15, 1882, a telephone connecting Derry village via Derry Depot with Manchester, N. H., and all lines therefrom, was put in operation by the "Granite State Telephone Company," the cost being guaranteed by Pettee & Co., of the village, and Rollins & Smith, of Derry Depot.

Population and Valuation.—The United States census of 1889 makes the number of inhabitants of Derry 2140. The enumeration of 1882 makes the number about 2300. There were in town, April, 1882, 595 polls, and the valuation of the town was $730,606.

CHAPTER XXXI.

DERRY.—(Continued.)

First Meeting-House.—From the town records the initial steps towards the erection of a house of worship appear to have been in a vote taken in general town-meeting June 3, 1720: "The Town voted that there shall be a small house built that may be convenient for the inhabitants to meet in for the worship of God, & that it shall be built as sure as it can with conveniency; also that the house shall be built as near the center of the one hundred & five lots as can be with conveniency." A few days later a location was agreed upon. It was "voted that the meeting-house shall be built within seven rods of a black stake set up either upon or near unto Mr. McGregor's lott." The matter rested till the January following, when the town "voted that a meeting-house shall be built as speedily as may be, & that the said house shall be 50 feet in length, forty-five feet broad, and so high as may be convenient for one set of galleries." The galleries of this house were reached by steps or stairs built on the outside, at the side or end. 1728, "Voted that the stairs to go up to our galleries for the meeting-house shall be brought to the inside, & that there shall be windows struck out in the north side, one on each side of the pulpit." It appears from this that steps to reach the galleries were on the north side of the house, and that the pulpit faced the south. The difficulty arising from inability to procure the necessary materials delayed the work, and two years elapsed before the house was finished and ready for occupancy. Its location was between the present church in East Derry and the leading highway through the village, a little nearer the church than the road. This house answered the purpose of the parish till 1769, when a new one, the present edifice, sixty-five by forty-five feet, was built. The high and massive steeple, with its immense timbers used at that time, made the erection of churches an affair of great importance, especially the raising. To accomplish this ropes and machinery were brought from afar, the most resolute and energetic men were summoned to the task, and often several days were needed to get the building ready for the boards. It is no wonder that "four 100 weight of cheas, 2000 Bisket, 3 barl of Rlum, & 5 barl of Syder" were used at the raising of the first church. Matthew Thornton, Moses Barnet, and James Wallace were the building committee.

This house was enlarged in 1824, by cutting it through the middle, moving the eastern end twenty-four feet, and finishing between the posts. "In 1845 it was thoroughly remodeled as to internal construction, and so arranged as to afford not only a large and spacious church, but also a Town Hall, a vestry, a room for the session, a room for the Parish Library, and other uses."

Methodist Meeting-House.—The land on which the meeting-house of the Methodist Episcopal society stands was the gift of Capt. William Choate. It was built in 1836, at a cost of about $3500. Mr. Beede was the contractor and builder. Services have constantly been held on the Sabbath in this church since its erection.

Meeting-House of the First Congregational Church.—This house was erected in 1837, on a fine eminence overlooking Derry village. It cost about $3500. In 1872 $3700 were expended in repairs. The society has a ministerial fund of $1000, and a parsonage purchased in 1881 at a cost of $2300.

Ministers of the East Parish.—REV. JAMES MCGREGOR. The character of most of our early New England towns was largely due to the influence of the clergy. With rare exceptions this influence was on the side of everything conducive to the spiritual and material interests of the people. In the long and arduous labors of the settlers in subduing the wilderness, and establishing their communities on a basis of order and good government; in their resolute and heroic conflicts with "principalities and powers, with things present and things to come," the clergy of New England were always at the front doing battle for the right. Pre-eminently may this be said of the McGregors, father and son, of Londonderry, the former the Rev. James McGregor, first minister of the East Parish, and Rev. David McGregor, first pastor of the West Parish. No people ever enjoyed wiser or better counselors. The former assumed charge of his society, as there was no Presbytery in New England to formally install him in office. He continued in charge till his death, March 5, 1729. Dr. Belknap gives him the character of a "wise, affectionate, and faithful guide to his people both in civil and religious matters."

Rev. Mr. Parker says, "From traditional remarks, as well as from some few manuscripts of his which have been preserved, we are led to consider him a man of distinguished talents both natural and acquired. He evidently possessed a vigorous mind, and was strictly evangelical in his doctrinal views."

REV. MATTHEW CLARK succeeded to the pastoral office in the First Church immediately after the death of Mr. McGregor. Although never installed over the people, he is usually enrolled among the ministers of that parish. He died Jan. 25, 1735, aged seventy-six years, having had charge of the church about six years. Notwithstanding his brief term of service, more is known of him at the present day than is known of his predecessor and his first and second successors, although their united pastorates amount to about sixty-five years. Scarcely a word of their sayings or a line of their writings have come down to us, but those of Matthew Clark still live in the memories of the people, and are common in the literature of the day. This is due partly to his wit and the eccentricity of his character, and partly to the military renown that attaches to his name as an officer in the famous siege of Londonderry 1688-89. So many anecdotes are credited to him that it is difficult to find a new one. Preaching one day he read the words of Peter with the subjoined commentary: "Master, we have forsaken all and followed thee." "Poor boasting Peter! ye left a' did ye? and what had ye to leave but a crazy auld boat and a wheen of rotten nets?"

Rev. Mr. Parker sums up his character as follows: "He was sound in the faith, decided and independent in his sentiments, and fearless in defense of what he judged to be correct in doctrine and practice."

REV. THOMAS THOMPSON.—The freeholders and inhabitants of Londonderry "Voted, Nov. 3, 1732, that the Rev. Mr. McBride, of Bellemory, Ireland, and Mr. Robert Boyer, of Londonderry, are chosen commissioners to prefer our call for a minister in Ireland," and the same day "Voted to purchase Hugh Craige's half-lot for said minister, and to bestow one hundred acres of land upon him." Robert Boyer, Esq., went to Ireland, and returned in October, 1733, bringing with him Rev. Thomas Thompson, who was cheerfully received and accepted by the people. He died Sept. 22, 1738, after a short but successful ministry of five years, leaving a widow and one son, for whose education the town voted a gratuity of seventy pounds.

REV. WILLIAM DAVIDSON.—He was installed in 1739. Rev. Mr. Parker briefly sketches his life: "He was a man of very amiable character, possessing a peculiarly mild, friendly, and benevolent disposition. He did not excel as a theologian or as a public speaker. He was supposed to be inclined to Arminianism, yet as a pastor he was diligent and affectionate." He left two sons and two daughters. John, the eldest son, became a loyalist, and was proscribed and banished by the act of the New Hampshire Legislature, Nov. 19, 1778. Both sons removed to Nova Scotia at the commencement of the Revolution. Mr. Davidson's daughter Ann married Rev. Solomon Moor, of New Boston, N. H. A great-grandson has a residence in a house built on the land of his ancestors.

REV. JONATHAN BROWN.—After a vacancy of four years, Mr. Brown, in 1795, was installed by the London Presbytery over the East Parish. This action of the Presbytery proved unwise, as it led to dissension in the parish, which resulted in the formation of a Congregational society two or three years after. The seceding part maintained a feeble existence about twelve years, worshipping in the lower hall of Dr. Isaac Thon's tavern. In 1809 it came back to the Presbyterian fold. Mr. Brown was dismissed in 1804, and died in February, 1808, aged eighty years. He lived on the home-lot laid out to Samuel Houston, at present the residence of Samuel Clark, at the east end of Beaver Pond.

REV. EDWARD LUTWYCHE PARKER was named for the loyalist, Edward Goldstone Lutwyche, of Merrimac, N. H., whose estate was confiscated and sold to Hon. Matthew Thornton. He was ordained Sept.

12, 1810, and died suddenly while pastor of the church, July 14, 1850. Mr. Parker was the author of the valuable history of the town, published in 1851 by his son, Edward P. Parker. He was succeeded June 18, 1851, by Rev. J. W. Wellman, a native of Cornish, N. H., a graduate of Dartmouth and Andover. He was dismissed May 26, 1850. From Sept. 1, 1857, to December, 1859, Rev. E. N. Hilden was acting pastor. He was followed by Rev. L. S. Parker, Feb. 20, 1861, dismissed June 10, 1869. Rev. David Brenner was installed April 27, 1871, and dismissed Sept. 10, 1873. Rev. E. S. Huntress succeeded Feb. 25, 1875, and was dismissed April, 1877. Rev. John S. Harris, the present pastor, was installed July 8, 1880.

Methodist Church and Ministers.—A Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in Derry Aug. 6, 1834. Oct. 25, 1834, notice was published of the formal organization of a society. It was signed by Caleb Dustin, John Taylor, Gilman Dinmore, and William S. Follansbee; Mr. Dinmore, clerk. The society held services at first for a short time at the houses of its members, but soon occupied the "Birch School-house" at the lower end of the village. The church prospered, and more and better accommodations being needed in 1836 a meeting-house was erected. Following is the roll of clergymen of this church and society: Philo Bronson, 1834-35; Mr. James McCane, 1835-36; Samuel Hoyt, 1836-37; William H. Brewster, 1837-38; Michael Quimby, 1838-40; Jonathan Hazelton, 1840-41; S. S. Matthews, 1841-43; James Adams, 1843-44; from 1844 to 1848 no record; Mr. G. W. T. Rogers, 1848-49; F. Q. Barrows, 1849-50; James Palmer, 1850-51; Isaac S. Cushman, 1851-52; Charles Smith, 1852-53; from 1852 to 1857, supplied by students; Mr. — Hamlin and Mr. — Parkhurst, 1857-58; John W. Adams, 1858-60; Lorenzo Draper, 1860-62; Rufus Tilton, 1862-64; E. Lewis, 1864-65; N. G. Cheney and W. P. Ray, 1865-66; W. P. Ray, 1866-67; W. W. H. Pillsbury, 1867-68; James Noyes, 1868-69; Elihu Scott, 1869-70; W. B. Osgood, 1870-71; J. W. Dearborn, 1871-75; A. E. Higgins, 1872-73; A. B. Carter, 1873-77; S. C. Farnham, 1877-78; N. Alger, 1878-79; W. W. Smith, 1879-81; O. A. Farley, 1881-82; Frederic C. Pillsbury, 1882-83.

Ministers of the First Congregational Church.—This church was constituted Aug. 3, 1837, and consisted of forty members from the Presbyterian society in Derry and twenty-three from the Presbyterian Church in Londonderry.

Their first pastor was Rev. Pliny B. Day, a graduate of Amherst and Andover. He was ordained Oct. 4, 1837, and dismissed June 9, 1851. His successors are as follows: Rev. Ebenezer G. Parsons, who graduated at Bowdoin and Bangor, was installed Oct. 1, 1851, and dismissed Oct. 7, 1869; Rev. Robert W. Haskins, a graduate of the New York University and Andover, ordained Nov. 19, 1872, and dismissed Oct. 15, 1878. The present pastor, Rev. Daniel W. Richardison was installed Feb. 26, 1880. He is a graduate of Union College, New York, and Andover, Mass.

Baptist Society at Derry Depot.—A Baptist Church was organized here Oct. 10, 1880. Their place of worship was in Smith's Hall, burned in the fire of Aug. 19, 1882. The church numbers twenty-six members, and their pastor, Rev. Alfred S. Stowell, was ordained Nov. 17, 1880.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

REV. E. L. PARKER.

Edward Lutwyche Parker was born in Litchfield, N. H., July 28, 1785. He was named for Edward Goldstone Lutwyche, an English gentleman of education and fortune, and a particular friend of his father. His grandfather, Rev. Thomas Parker, was a graduate of Harvard University, and the minister of Draut, Mass. His father, Dr. Jonathan Parker, also a graduate of Harvard, was a physician of considerable distinction, excelling particularly as a surgeon, and acquired an extensive practice in the place of his residence, as well as the adjacent towns, being often sent for from a distance as a consulting physician. Dr. Parker died in September, 1791, leaving a family of ten children with scanty means of support, Edward, the youngest but one, being but about six years of age. His early instructions, therefore, were derived almost wholly from his mother, who was a woman of more than ordinary refinement, of much energy and decision of character, and a consistent and earnest Christian.

Edward, the youngest son, was the favorite child; his active and sprightly habits made him the centre of interest in the family circle, a place which he continued to hold in after-life. Before he was five years old he had in three instances almost miraculously escaped death, twice from drowning and once from an attack by a domestic animal, the marks of which he ever after bore. At the period when he was of a suitable age to attend school the advantages of the common schools of New England were much fewer than at present.

Instructors themselves were very imperfectly qualified, and the circle of studies was extremely limited, including little more than reading, writing, and arithmetic. This meagre course of study was all that Mr. Parker enjoyed in his youth. When he was about twelve years of age he was placed as a clerk in the store of his brother Thomas, in Bedford, N. H.

In the discharge of his general duties as clerk he is described as attracting particular notice for his activity and energy. A part of his business consisted in measuring and taking an account of lumber, particularly of boards, which he is said to have done with rapidity. This lumber was sent in rafts to Newburyport, and he, being commissioned to go and dispose of it, sometimes accompanied the raft, but more generally performed the journey each way on foot. As he was at this time a mere boy, and small of his age, he was looked upon with much interest for the shrewdness, accuracy, and dispatch which were manifest in all his dealings. At the age of fifteen he was thrown out of employment by the failure of his brother. He then entered as clerk in the drug-store of his brother, a physician, in Topsham, Me., with whom he remained one year, and then went to Billeria, Mass., and began the business of making shoes. He remained here, however, but a short time, and then, in connection with his brother, purchased a wood-lot, got off the lumber, drew it to the river, and rafted it. As an evidence of his "pluck" and determination, it is stated that upon leaving Topsham he walked one hundred and fifty miles on foot, in the month of March, to his native place.

At the age of seventeen we find him teaching school in the present town of Manchester, then Derryfield. He subsequently entered the academy at Londonderry, then under the charge of Samuel Burnham, M.A., to prepare himself for the study of medicine.

While a member of the academy he boarded in the family of Rev. Jonathan Brown, the minister of the East Parish, and whose place he was to occupy in a little more than six years. It was during his connection with this school that his attention was first called decidedly to the subject of religion by a sermon on the Judgment, delivered in the pulpit in which he subsequently preached for so long a period. There can be little doubt that the change wrought in him by the religious impressions made at that time was a thorough and radical one. It invested life with new interest, presented new and more enlarged objects of effort, and pressed upon him higher and stronger motives of action. He soon relinquished the purpose of entering the medical profession, and directed his course of study with reference to a preparation for college with a view of entering the Christian ministry. He entered college, graduated in 1807, and was licensed to preach the gospel October 29th of same year. As an evidence of his laborious application to the studies on which he had entered it may be added that the time of each day from five o'clock in the morning till half-past eleven at night was appropriated to particular duties, including three seasons of devotion. He had an impediment in his speech, and devoted one hour each day to correct that. He preached several months in Columbia, Conn.; here he was invited to settle, but feeling the need of more experience, he declined the call and placed himself under the instruction of Rev. Dr. Worcester, of Salem, Mass.; he remained in this place one year. During his residence in Salem, as he passed through the East Parish of Londonderry (now Derry) he was invited to supply the pulpit for two Sabbaths. This led to his engagement as pastor; he was ordained Sept. 12, 1810, and continued his pastorate until his death, forty years afterwards. For fuller incidents in the career of this truly good man we refer to the memoir published in 1851.

Mr. Parker was a man of ardent piety, and his Christian character was eminently consistent and exemplary. The circumstances of his death were peculiarly sad. He was a man of strong and vigorous constitution, which he retained in an unusual degree till nearly the close of his life. For four years before his death he was troubled with pains in the region of his heart, which caused him little anxiety.

On the Sabbath, July 14, 1850, he exchanged with the Rev. Mr. Day, pastor of the church in the lower village. He preached two sermons, and at the close of the second he returned home. Later in the afternoon he went to a third service at one of the school-houses in a distant part of the town. At the close of the meeting he started to return. When within one and one-half miles of home his horse stumbled and fell. He ran back a few rods to the nearest house for assistance, and on returning to his carriage and while stooping over his horse, Mr. Clark heard him groan and saw him in the act of falling forward; he caught him in his arms, when he expired without a struggle. Thus ended the days of the faithful minister of the gospel. A granite monument, erected by his friends, marks the spot on which he died.

In 1811 he married Miss Mehetable Kimball, daughter of Deacon Stephen Kimball, of Hanover, N. H., by whom he had four children,—Edward Pinkerton, Charles Coffin, Caroline P., and Harriet, who died young.

Of his children, Charles C. married Sarah J. Taylor, to whom two children were born,—Frank W. and Edward T.

Charles C. began trade as merchant in the town of Derry in 1840, and continued in that business to the date of his death, June 17, 1869. He was a Republican; was deacon of a Congregational Church; was town clerk many years; was a member of the Legislature in 1857 and 1858.

His two sons, Frank W. and Edward T., are extensively engaged in merchandising in their father's old store in Derry. They enjoy the confidence of their large circle of friends, and their devotion to their worthy ancestors prompted them to the insertion of the portrait and memoir in this work of their esteemed grandfather.

William Staughton Pillsbury, the successful business man, the approved citizen, and the man whose unusual capacity for affairs and in office has shown him to be the possessor of the highest and best traits of the "leader," although well known in New Hampshire and New England, deserves a permanent recognition in the pages of this work. Such men as he hold the reins of national destiny. They are the men of practical affairs. They build or enlarge manufacturing establishments, construct railways, develop the agricultural and mining resources of our States, increase the facilities for education, and promote not only literary and artistic culture but the numberless graces of a progressive civilization. Especially to be commended among the natives of the Granite State are those men who prove themselves able to win success and honor in what are popularly considered the overcrowded fields of enterprise in the Eastern States.

The public is not slow to recognize the value of worthy example in industry, intelligent enterprise, efficient executive and business ability, combined with high general intelligence. Practical talent or common sense duly applied deserves approval and is sure to win recognition.

Col. Pillsbury is a son of Rev. Stephen Pillsbury, a Baptist clergyman, who died at Londonderry after a life devoted to faithful Christian work. He is descended from William Pillsbury, who came from England to Dorchester, Mass., in 1641, and a little later settled in the locality of the present city of Newburyport. William Pillsbury's ancestor here mentioned was from Essex or Staffordshire. The English Pillsburys, to which those of America are related, have a coat of arms described in heraldic terms as follows: "Per fesse sable and azure," on an eagle displayed argent: three griffins' heads, erased of the second. Crest, an esquire's helmet; motto, "Labor omnia vincit."

Col. Pillsbury's mother was Lavinia Hobart, daughter of Deacon Josiah Hobart, the first English male child born in Plymouth, N. H. The Hobart ancestor was Rev. Peter Hobart, founder and first minister of Hingham, Mass., and preacher there forty-three years. The Hobart genealogy is traced back into the fourteenth century.

Rev. Stephen Pillsbury, father of the subject of this sketch, was the son of Micajah Pillsbury, and was born at Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 30, 1781. He was ordained to the ministry June, 1810. Subsequently he preached in Hebron, Sutton, Dumbarton, and Londonderry. He died Jan. 22, 1851. Mrs. Lavinia Hobart Pillsbury was born at Hebron, N. H., Oct. 31, 1795.

She was the possessor of rare gifts as a writer, while her husband was not only a sound preacher but an advocate of temperance, and one of the original members of the Free-Soil party in New Hampshire.

The children of Rev. Stephen Pillsbury were Mary Bartlett (now Mrs. Mary B. Weston), an artist of note, living at Lawrence, Kan.; Lavinia Hobart, who married Samuel Andrews, of Bradford, N. H.; Hon. Josiah Hobart, who married Elhora Pevear. He was editor and publisher of the New York Eagle, afterwards editor and publisher of the Manhattan (Kansas) Independent, and held many official positions of trust and honor. Stephen, Jr., who married Sarah A. Bailey, is a merchant at Manhattan, Kan. Edwin, who married Mary Ann Reid, is a farmer and contractor at Leavenworth, Kan. Ann Judson married Andrew B. Marshall, of Weare, N. H. A. Judson died unmarried. Col. William Staughton Pillsbury, to whom this sketch chiefly relates, born at Sutton, N. H., March 16, 1823, married Sarah A. Crowell, of Londonderry, May 8, 1854. She died June 22, 1854. He married, second, Martha Silver Crowell. The children of William S. and Martha S. Pillsbury now living are Rosecrans William, born Sept. 18, 1863; Charles Hobart, born March 16, 1866; Hattie Lavinia, born Oct. 27, 1870; Ulysses Grant, born Nov. 24, 1876.

Capt. Leonard Hobart, who married Evelyn Sanborn, is a merchant and postmaster at Derry Depot, N. H.

The ancient motto of the Pillsbury family, Labor omnia vincit (labor conquers all things), is practically illustrated by many bearing the name in modern times as well as of old.

Col. William Pillsbury, of Londonderry, evidently has reason to conclude that it is a good motto to live by and cling to, and his near relatives, the Hon. George A. Pillsbury, late popular mayor of Concord, N. H., and now a prominent capitalist of Minnesota, as well as ex-Governor John S. Pillsbury, the millionaire flour manufacturer of Minneapolis, seem to be men after his own heart and fashion, active, honorable, generous, and winners of the golden opinion of the public as well as of this world's bounties. Col. Pillsbury's education has been gained chiefly in the school of practical life; a keen student of the world's affairs and men, his judgment has become accurate, his tact remarkable, and his knowledge is useful in all directions. He learned the shoemaker's trade at the age of fourteen years, and subsequently became a skillful cutter of stock. At twenty he started a shoe-factory at Cilleysville, Andover, N. H., for his brother Stephen, and was superintendent of the extensive establishment for a year or more. He was afterwards employed at Marlboro', Mass. Up to the age of legal manhood he gave all his earnings over a plain living for himself for the support of his widowed mother, and to aid others in need at the time. When twenty-one years of age he consequently did not possess a dollar in money. Soon, however, he was engaged with a firm of shoe manufacturers just starting business at Derry Depot. About a year later he had the entire charge of the business as agent, and so continued during the existence of the firm. When this firm went out of business Col. Pillsbury made a journey to Kansas, where he used what money he had saved up to advantage.

Returning East, and having married, as already stated, he remained occupied in business affairs until the opening of the war of the Rebellion. He enlisted in his country's service, and was commissioned first lieutenant, Company I, Fourth New Hampshire Regiment, and left for the seat of war, September, 1861. Having reached Annapolis, he met with such a serious accident that he resigned and returned North. A few months later, his health having improved and the call for three hundred thousand men being issued, he was appointed recruiting officer for the Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers. He was commissioned first lieutenant of Company "A." His regiment proceeded to Washington, and was in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. Disabled by a severe attack of pneumonia he resigned his commission, and as soon as he was able to perform a little service in business he was engaged at Wheeling, Va., superintending a party of experts in training men there in the art of manufacturing shoes by the most desirable New England methods. As soon as his health seemed well restored he returned to Londonderry, raised for the town its quota of thirty men under the last great call (1864), and was commissioned first lieutenant of Company D, Unattached Artillery, Capt. George W. Colburn, of Dover (a cousin to Gen. Wilson), commanding. The company served in several of the forts in the first and second divisions of the defenses of the capital. He commanded for a time the battery "Garryshay" in De Russé's division. Later he was appointed ordnance officer of the First Brigade, Harding's division, and was stationed at Fort Reno, Md., where he remained until the close of the war. He was "mustered out" at Concord, N. H., June 15, 1865. A month later he engaged in manufacturing shoes at Londonderry, and successfully prosecuted the business there until the need of larger buildings induced him to remove his machinery to Derry Depot. In 1868 he was elected commissioner for Rockingham County on the Republican ticket. In this position he performed extremely valuable service in organizing the system of conducting county affairs, embracing the institution of a new method of caring for the paupers at the county farm. His tact and good judgment seem to be equal to every requirement that presents itself. Chiefly through his influence and zealous effort came the appropriation for the erection of the asylum building for the accommodation of the insane poor of the county; with results as good as at the asylum at Concord, while saving largely in expense, the enterprise has proved the soundness and practicability of the plan. In fact, while patients were as well treated as at extravagant expenses previously, the cost of the asylum building was saved the first year it was occupied.

Col. Pillsbury was the original mover in the effort to check the overwhelming extent of the "tramp nuisance" in New Hampshire. The action he inaugurated culminated in the law for the suppression of tramping that has accomplished such good in the Granite State, and that has been so generally copied in other States. In Londonderry Col. Pillsbury has served as moderator at town-meetings about nineteen years. He has also represented his town in the Legislature, is a justice of the peace, chairman of the board of trustees of the Leech Library at Londonderry, and a Mason. He is a Republican of lifelong affiliation. Religiously he is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and for many years a trustee of the society of that denomination in Londonderry. He is not a sectarian. His spirit is liberal and broadly tolerant as his all-truè Christianity. He once paid the expense of frescoing and painting a Methodist meeting-house, when the society little expected such aid from a religious brother of another denomination.

Col. Pillsbury is a member of the well-known New Hampshire Club, its membership including many of the leading men of the State. Whenever an opportunity offers, Col. Pillsbury expresses the liberality of his heart in quiet, practical ways that are not all known to the general community. A more public-spirited man in general affairs is not known by the citizens of Rockingham County or perhaps the State. His notable success is due, among other reasons, to his industry, his high sense of honor, his heartiness, and his especially remarkable talent for systematizing, and for the organization and ready execution of plans. The almost invariably accurate judgment of men that he manifests is the secret of his power to fit the right man in the right place where positions of responsibility and importance are concerned. Personally Col. Pillsbury is exceedingly attractive and cordial in manner. A true, gentlemanly feeling characterizes his association with all so fortunate as to meet him either in business or society.

After the removal of Col. Pillsbury's manufacturing interests to Derry Depot, he formed a business connection with the Boston house of E. P. Phillips & Co., which continued until the dissolution of the firm. Soon after this event he became agent for the noted firm of Clement, Colburn & Co., of Boston, now Colburn, Fuller & Co., shoe manufacturers at Derry Depot. During this agency the business has increased until, from an annual trade of seventy-five thousand dollars, it has reached the sum of over half a million dollars per annum. About four hundred and fifty persons are now employed in the immense establishment of the firm at Derry Depot. Additions to the factory buildings afford room for about one hundred more hands as the pressure of trade may require. Nearly six hundred different styles of ladies' boots and shoes are made in this great establishment, for American and foreign trade. These goods seem to be for real service superior to any known in the country. The especial effort in production is to attain all serviceable qualities and durability. These goods consequently find a ready sale not only all over the United States, but in the West Indies, along the east and west coast of South America, in Egypt and South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, as well as in several European ports.

In June, 1877, Col. Pillsbury was appointed aide-de-camp, with rank of colonel, on the staff of Governor B. F. Prescott.

To the energy and enterprise, integrity and tact of Col. Pillsbury, New Hampshire people rightly credit the remarkable growth of the village of Derry Depot from an insignificant hamlet to one of the most thriving and beautiful inland villages of New England.

As an illustration of the alertness and power of ready judgment of Col. Pillsbury, I cannot neglect to note the adroit movement by which he saved a portion of the companies of the Ninth New Hampshire Regiment at the memorable battle of South Mountain from almost sure destruction. His company, "A," was leading in a charge upon a large number of rebels, who were driven through a piece of woods and disappeared while the Union men moved into an open field adjoining. The enemy reformed under the protection of a battery, and their movement was discovered by the colonel, who halted his men and fell back sufficiently to hold connection with support just at the moment when Maj.-Gen. Reno rode along the line into the ambush, and received the terrible volley from rebels screened by the woods, and was instantly killed while on the very ground left a few moments before by Col. Pillsbury and others.

CHAPTER XXVII.

EAST KINGSTON.<sup>1</sup>

Early History, etc.—The charter of Kingston was granted by the Provincial Assembly, under the administration of Lieutenant-Governor John Usher, Aug. 6, 1694, embracing a tract of land commencing seven miles west of the meeting-house in Hampton, which is the line between East Kingston and Kensington, and extending ten miles west and by north into the country. Its breadth was four miles north from Shapley's line, the present boundary between East Kingston and South Hampton. This line was represented in the charter as three miles north of Merrimac River, though it was really nearer five miles. This territory comprised what now constitutes East Kingston, Danville, Sandown, and the larger part of Kingston. In 1738 fifty-three persons in the town of Kingston united in a petition to the General Assembly to be set off into a separate parish. The petitioners were Jeremy, Ebenezer, John, Thomas, and Andrew Webster, Nathan, Phineas, Josiah, and Ebenezer Batchelder, Ichabod, Caleb, and Theophilus Clough, William and Abraham Smith, Jacob Gale, William Whiteke, Benjamin Morrill, Joseph Greele, James Tappan, Isaac Godfrey, and Josiah Tilton.

Of the remaining thirty-two there is not one of whom anything is known, or whose known descendants live in the town. Of most of them their names are not recognized by the present generation. They prayed to be set off "into a separate parish, with their families and possessions, to enjoy all the rights and privileges that other parishes have and do by law enjoy." The reason they assigned for wishing to be incorporated into a distinct parish were "their great distance from the place of public worship in the said town of Kingston, and attending on the same; have built a meeting-house in that part of the town where they live convenient for themselves and their families, and being desirous of having a gospel ministry among them," they pray "to be exempted from paying taxes for the support of schools and the ministry to the said town of Kingston after the year 1738, and to choose their own parish officers and assess and collect taxes." These privileges were all granted in their charter, "provided the said petitioners maintain an authorized minister of the gospel among them." The parish was incorporated Nov. 17, 1738. Jeremy Webster was authorized to call the first meeting, which he did, and an organization was effected Jan. 10, 1738-39. Joseph Greele was chosen moderator, and Jeremy Webster, clerk. A call was then extended to the Rev. Peter Coffin to settle with them as their minister, which was accepted Aug. 31, 1739.

By an act of the Provincial Council in August, 1740, the boundaries between the East Parish of Kingston and the town of Kingston were established as follows: "Midway between the meeting-houses of Kingston and the East Parish in a straight line a stone was set up on the highway called Salisbury road. . . .

"From said stone north by compass to Exeter line, and from the stone aforesaid south to the path going from Kingston to Amesbury by the way of Tricking Fall; there a beech-tree was marked, not knowing the bounds of Salisbury or Amesbury." The boundaries of East Kingston are north by Kingston and Exeter, east by Kensington, south by South Hampton and Newton, and west by Kingston. Whoever is inclined to look at the county map will see that the town is in the form of a parallelogram, the longest sides being from north to south. From the north-west angle is a large area taken off and attached to Kingston. This is known as "Exeter road." The question is raised how this portion came to remain as Kingston, as the boundary according to the act would be on the north by Brentwood, leaving this territory in the East Parish. In the act authorizing the running of the boundary line in 1740, any person so disposed was allowed to poll off to the town of Kingston.

Forty-three persons availed themselves of this provision. Among these were a number of names of persons well known in the district at the present time, such as Eastman, French, Sanborn, Long, and Judkins. Those persons not wishing to be included in the new parish, and having polled off to the town of Kingston, the line was drawn as it now exists for general convenience.

Since that time a number of efforts have been made to restore the boundaries as originally enacted.

In 1795 it was proposed "to build a new meeting-house twenty rods north of Capt. John Currier's, on the road to Exeter." The town voted "they were willing to receive all who had polled off." Nothing came from it.

In 1826 the reannexation of Exeter road to this town, so as to restore the original parish lines, was again agitated, and the town voted "to receive the inhabitants of Kingston, on Exeter road, so called, into the town of East Kingston, as by their petition, and the order of the Legislature thereon for a day of hearing." Many were anxious to be reannexed, and others in this town were desirous they should be; but some influential men, particularly the late Morel Sanborn, of Kingston, were so decidedly, not to say violently, in opposition to the project that it failed, and the "day of hearing" had no favorable result. No propositions of the kind have since been made.

Misunderstandings arose between the two parishes in relation to the parsonage, maintaining the poor, and various other matters. The contentions were such as came near bringing on a lawsuit; but wiser counsels prevailed, and it was decided "that each parish must maintain their own poor and support their own schools." But such were their remaining and continued difficulties, and so far were they from a settlement, that the town voted, in 1750, "that we are willing the Rev. Mr. Coffin request the Rev. Mr. Secombe that the parsonage land be divided between them, and in case such division cannot be obtained peaceably, we will support the Rev. Mr. Secombe to obtain such division." No lawsuit followed, but after long controversy and strife the whole matter of parsonage was settled in March, 1761, in articles of agreement, drawn up by committees from each of the towns of Kingston, East Kingston, Hawke, and Sandown. Thus it was twenty-two years before this controversy was concluded. Mr. Coffin continued here as the minister of the town thirty-three years. In 1772 he was dismissed after much contention. That there was great fault on both sides the impartial reader at this time, more than a century afterwards, can have no doubt.

The salary of Mr. Coffin for the first nine years after his settlement in 1739 was an average of forty-five pounds, New England currency, annually, or the equivalent of one hundred and fifty dollars. To this was added the use of the parsonage, twenty-five cords of wood, and other perquisites. In 1748 it was three hundred and twenty pounds, old tenor, which at that time was worth not far from fifty cents on the pound silver money. In 1760 he received sixty pounds lawful money, or two hundred dollars. A pound lawful money was twenty shillings New England currency, equal to three and one-third dollars. At the close of his ministry in 1772 he was receiving seventy pounds. To these sums add an acre of land given him on which to build a house, one hundred pounds to aid him in building the house, assistance in building the barn, wood supplied by the parish from the parsonage wood lot, with some other gifts and allowances, and sixty pounds when he was dismissed in payment of constructive services, with various other allowances amounting to fifty pounds, and we have a pretty correct idea of his income for the thirty-three years he was their minister. These payments were generally made in paper money, but there seem to have been reasonable efforts to pay him in a fair circulating currency.

Soon after the dismissal of Mr. Coffin there was an effort to obtain a successor. The town voted in October, 1772, to call and settle a minister, with a salary of eighty pounds and the use of the parsonage. A number of candidates were tried, but upon none of them could there be an agreement for settlement.

With the opening scenes of the Revolution the attention of the people was turned somewhat from ecclesiastical to political duties. In patriotism East Kingston was not behind her sister towns. A committee was chosen to meet committees from other towns in Exeter, July 9, 1774, in convention, to choose delegates to represent this province in a congress proposed to be held by delegates from the several colonies and provinces in North America, and agreed "That they will pay their part of the expenses and charges in sending delegates, and will draw the money out of the Parish Treasury." 1775, May 8th, a committee was chosen to meet at Exeter on the 17th inst., with delegates from the several towns of this province, "who, when met with the other delegates, shall be fully empowered and authorized to pursue such measures as may be judged most expedient to preserve and restore the rights of this and the other colonies, and that such deputies shall be empowered to act in behalf of themselves and their constituents." They also voted at this meeting "to raise thirteen men, called 'minute-men,' who shall be ready at any sufficient alarm for the defense of the colonies, 'each man when called for to join with the army of observation.'" They were to be provided with a "coat and blanket, arms, ammunition, and provisions, and paid for their services from the town treasury." A "Committee of Safety" of nine persons was chosen, which was continued through the war, though its members were a number of times changed. It embraced during its existence most of the principal citizens.

1776. Eight men were raised for the expedition against Canada. Measures were taken to raise money to pay bounties to these men, and also to pay their expenses. 1777, May 21st, a vote was passed to enlist a sufficient number of men as cheap as they can to fill the quota, and tax the parish . . . to raise the money and pay the same. It was also voted "that every one in this parish must get himself ready and properly equipped for military service, both alarm and training-band, by next Monday, and then stand ready to march at a minute's warning." Also voted "supplies and preparations for an invasion."

1778. Voted supplies liberally and preparations in expectation of an invasion, as the "Committee of Safety have received advice, and for the men to be ready at a moment's warning."

1779. April 19th, voted "To give a bounty of fifteen hundred dollars each to three men to enlist in the service." This, of course, was in depreciated paper currency. Nearly as large sums were given afterwards in a number of instances.

1780. Great exertions were made to raise and pay soldiers, to whom large bounties were given in addition to their wages.

1781. The town voted "we are willing to raise our proportion of soldiers for the Continental army;" chose a "committee to raise men to fill the quota."

"The book containing the plan of government having been read and discussed, it was voted to receive it, under certain limitations."

1783. Approved of the plan of government and voted for its continuance.

We have now given extracts from the records of specimens of the spirit and action of the people. Through the war public meetings were held frequently, and at different hours of the day and evening. They often adjourned to a day not far distant without especial business, but looking for something to occur which would require concerted action and a vote of the town. The quotas were promptly filled, though sometimes at enormous prices.

Military preparations continued long after the close of the war of the Revolution, and soldiers styled "minute-men" were always in readiness. In 1794 and 1798 men were raised, to whom bounties were paid. In 1806 and 1807, and at various other dates, "minute-men" were raised and equipped by the town, and one hundred and fifty dollars was raised for the selectmen to lay out for military purposes.

1812. It was voted "To make up to each soldier $15 per month, with what Government allows." At this date the war had broken out usually termed the war of 1812-14, or "last war with Great Britain," and our people were found prepared for it. In 1813-15 committees were chosen to look after the drafted men, to hire men to fill the quotas, to serve for the defense of the State. The calls of the government were promptly answered and the quotas of the town always filled.

From 1815 to 1817, inclusive, there were violent controversies, bickerings, and strifes about the raising money for preaching and the expenditure of the income of the parsonage. In 1818 it was "voted to sell the parsonage, invest the money, and lay out the interest annually in preaching."

The "Toleration Act," passed by the Legislature of New Hampshire, July, 1819, provides that "no person shall be compelled to join or support any congregation, church, or religious society without his express consent first had and obtained." . . . "And any person may, if connected with a society, by leaving a written notice with the clerk of the society, be exempted from any future expenses." This act ended all controversy in relation to taxing the people to support a ministry. Thereafter every society attended to their own affairs. There has occasionally, and of late, been a little agitation and a slight ripple of feeling in relation to the disposition of the parsonage money; but nothing has ever resulted from it, and probably never will.

1830. The meeting-house, which had stood ninety-two years, was torn down, and the present town-house erected in its place. It was finished with pews. The house was completed, the pews sold at auction, and titles given May 2, 1831. It was to be occupied by the town whenever needed for town purposes; at all other times, and on Sabbaths, by the several religious societies such a proportion of the time as they owned pews. The selectmen decided annually what Sabbaths each society should occupy the house during the ensuing year.

1831. The wood on the parsonage was sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the debts of the town.

1837. On a petition of twenty legal voters, a town-meeting was held July 1st at the town-house, which was called to order by one of the selectmen, when John Philbrick was chosen clerk pro tem., and Charles Sanborn was chosen moderator. It was then, on motion, "Voted, That no one has a right to hold Abolition or Anti-Slavery meetings in the Town Hall or other public buildings belonging to said Town." A division of the house being called for, seventeen were for opening the house and forty-seven were against it. Voted, "That the town authorize the Selectmen, or any freholder in the town, to clear the public buildings in said Town of any person or persons delivering or attempting to deliver any Abolition lectures or addresses, and at the expense of said Town." We do not think any arrests were made under this town authority, and we do not know what attempts were made to hold meetings or lecture on slavery for a number of years thereafter in any of the public buildings. Still, the legality of this whole proceeding has been well doubted.

In 1847, March 9th, at the annual meeting it was voted, "That the vote passed July 1, 1837, relative to the using of the public buildings to hold abolition or anti-slavery lectures or addresses in, be reconsidered." Since that time the town-house has been open for public meetings without regard to the political complexion of the speakers or their friends.

1859. By votes of the town the rights of individuals to the pews in the town-house were purchased and taken away, and movable settees substituted.

When the civil war broke out there was much party feeling, but no lack of patriotism.

At a town-meeting called May 9, 1861, it was voted to authorize the selectmen to hire one thousand dollars to pay soldiers.

October 10th. Voted to adopt the act passed at the last June session of the Legislature, chapter 2480, entitled "An act authorizing cities and towns to aid the families of volunteers, and for other purposes," and that the selectmen carry this vote into effect.

1862. August 18th, the selectmen were authorized to hire five thousand dollars to pay volunteer citizens, three hundred dollars each. August 21st, the selectmen were authorized "to pay the bounty of three hundred dollars to as large a number of volunteers as may be sufficient to cover all quotas called for by the President."

1863. August 12th, voted, that the selectmen be authorized to hire such sum of money as may be necessary to pay each drafted man the sum of three hundred dollars. August 15th, voted, "That the town raise and pay to every inhabitant thereof who have been or shall be drafted or conscripted to serve in the army of the United States under the present draft, or to the substitute of such drafted or conscripted inhabitant, the sum of three hundred dollars bounty."

1864. June 13th, voted, that the selectmen be authorized to pay a bounty of one hundred dollars to each person who has entered into the service of the United States, and has not been paid a town bounty since May, 1863. July 20th, the selectmen were authorized to borrow five thousand dollars, and from the same to pay each volunteer or substitute who may be accepted and mustered into the military service of the United States . . . such sums as they may find necessary or deem expedient, not exceeding the limit prescribed by law.

There went from this town forty-five volunteers and eleven substitutes, making the whole number fifty-six.

The surface of the town is moderately uneven. The soil is of a good quality, and well adapted to the cultivation of farm and garden products, and to grasses and all kinds of grain. It produces large crops of Indian corn, barley, oats, potatoes, and esculent roots. The former is not grown so generally as it was seventy years ago, on account of the cheapness with which it can be raised and transported from the West. Not so many sheep and neat cattle are kept or raised and sold here as there were seventy years ago. Neither is there more land under cultivation. There are more dwelling-houses than there were then. The area of the town is six thousand two hundred acres. The appraised value of the real and personal property in 1882 was two hundred and twenty-four thousand seven hundred and thirty-two dollars. The outstanding debt of the town is nine thousand four hundred dollars.

The Boston and Maine Railroad runs through the town from a point in Kingston near the southwest part of East Kingston to the extreme northeast, where it enters Exeter. From the station-house, near the centre of the town:

Boston is distant forty-five and three-fourths miles by the railroad, forty miles by the carriage-road as usually traveled, and thirty-five miles south five degrees west in a direct line.

Portland is distant sixty-nine and three-fourths miles by the railroad, eighty miles by the carriage-road, and sixty-two miles north thirty-seven degrees east in a direct line.

There are two mails daily from and to Boston and way stations, two from and to Portland and way stations, and two from and to Kingston by wagon-carriage, so that the mail facilities equal any and are superior to most places in the county. Nathaniel E. Tuck is postmaster.

Powow River flows through the southwest part of the town, having its source in the ponds of Kingston. The cutting of ice in the river is quite an item of business for the very cold weather. The ice-houses are capable of holding forty thousand tons, which are filled in good seasons and transported to Boston for shipment or use. There is one saw-mill at Tricking Falls. The Salisbury and Amesbury Manufacturing Company bought up these and other mills above forty years ago, with the rights of flowage of the river above and below. For this reason there is very much less manufacturing here than had been done in previous years.

There is a fall in the river at Salisbury and Amesbury Mills of one hundred feet, where are extensive woolen- and cotton-factories, which in the dry season are supplied from their extensive reservoirs in New Hampshire.

A large number of residents work at the shoe business, mostly for the manufacturers in Haverhill, Mass. J. W. Greenlay has a manufactory near the railroad-crossing in the south part of the town. It is fitted up with modern machinery and a steam-engine for propelling, capable of employing forty or fifty men. He has nearly half that number at the present time. A larger number of persons are employed in smaller shops in various parts of the town, while a few work in Haverhill, going and returning by the railroad-carriages. There are three brick-yards in the town, in which were manufactured several years since six millions of brick. The production has since decreased to three, two, and one million annually, and may be calculated upon according to the demand in Massachusetts cities.

A fair estimate is an average of the above, or three millions annually. The labor is mostly done by Frenchmen from Canada. Four stores and one lively stable do a prosperous business. A number of market-men of meat supply not only this but the neighboring towns. The carpenters and blacksmiths are more than sufficient for the business, so that a part of the work of the former is in other towns.

First Settlers.—It has generally been supposed that William and Abrahm Smith settled here when there were no others within the limits of the present town. Every gazetteer and history which refers to the subject states that they were the first settlers or among the earliest settlers. On the contrary, William Smith, the elder of the brothers, was born in 1703, and it is a tradition of the family that he came here to live in 1724, when he was twenty-one years old. There is an old deed that shows that the places where John P. French and Arthur T. Robinson now reside were purchased by "Robert Smith, of Salisbury, otherwise Hampton," which is now Seabrook. It was purchased of Christopher Pottle in 1732, but was originally the right of Nathaniel Sanborn, one of the commoners. On this place Mr. Smith settled his sons. We do not think any two men were first settlers. They came as colonists from Hampton to Kingston, in companies. So far as can now be ascertained, the earliest were Ebenezer Webster (1), Ebenezer Stevens (1), John Swett, Nathaniel Sanborn, and Capt. John Webster.

The south part of the town and a part of the main road emigrated from Salisbury and Amesbury. The Greeleys and the Frenches early made a settlement. Edward French and Abraham Brown located or purchased lands, but personally never settled on them. They were obtained for their children. The Curriers and Blaisdells secured lands at the Falls, and moved in as early as they thought it prudent to do so on account of the Indians. It is claimed that Ralph Blaisdell was the first who crossed Powow River from the south for a settlement, and that the old cellar and well are yet to be seen where the road was straightened, near the Goodrich and Webster places. The mill-grant was laid out March 15, 1710. This is the earliest date of records we have found. The deed of the French place is dated June 16, 1710. Benoni Clough purchased the Caleb Webster place in 1715. A part of the Brown place, with improvements thereon, was purchased in 1716. The first land was laid off by the lot-layers, hence no person obtaining land by deed was the first settler or owner of that land.

Capt. John Webster was made a freeman in 1705, and some years later had land assigned him by the lot-layers on the north road, where his son, Jeremy Webster, lived. A part of it is now owned by one of his descendants, Mrs. Isabella (Webster) Currier, never having passed from the family. The old house was burned not many years since.

The homestead of Ebenezer Webster (1), one of the grantees of Kingston, which was also the homestead of Ebenezer Webster (2), where Ebenezer Webster (3), who was the father of Hons. Daniel and Ezekiel Webster, was born, was located earlier than either we have named. This place is situated on a moderate eminence on the north side of the Salisbury road or highway leading to Kingston. It is less than a mile west of the railroad station, and half a mile east of the boundary line of Kingston. For a time it was owned by Capt. John Currier, and was set off to his widow as a part of her thirds. It is known by the family as Old Orchard. After the death of Mrs. Currier it was divided among the heirs, and most of it sold out of the family. George Webster, a descendant of Thomas, one of the grantees of Kingston, owns a part by inheritance from his mother, who was a daughter of Capt. John and Widow Phoebe Currier, and inherited from them; Charles E. Marsh owns that part of it where the house stood, and the location of the cellar is still to be seen. The well has been filled or covered within a few years.

The French house and the Brown house are supposed to be older than any other now standing. The Tappan, Greeley, Nelson, Robinson, Webster, Morrill, and Ordway houses and the Buzzell house on the north road are all ancient dwellings. It is a long time since any of these lean-to houses have been built.

The Climate is unusually healthy. From 1738 to 1771, a term of thirty-three years, there were three hundred and one deaths, or an annual average of nine. The largest number in any one year was twenty-one, and the smallest number was two. For the next seventy-nine years, from 1771 to 1850, from our best sources of information, though not sure of exactness, there were seven hundred and thirty-four deaths, or an annual average of nine and three-tenths. From 1850 to 1882, from tables kept by E. W. Philbrick, Esq., a period of thirty-two years, there were three hundred and ten deaths, being less than ten per year. The largest number in any one year was sixteen, and the smallest number four. From these statements the number of deaths for the one hundred and forty-four years since the parish was chartered have been one thousand three hundred and thirty-five, an annual average of nine and two-tenths. We have not access to any census prior to 1773, but at that date the population was four hundred and two, which has gradually increased to five hundred and eighty-two in 1880. While the increase of inhabitants has been forty-five per cent., the death-rate has increased less than ten per cent. The number of deaths has fallen from two and one-fourth per cent. to one and three-fourths on the population. The conclusion is irresistible that the town is one of great healthfulness, that there are now a less number of deaths annually, according to the population, than at any previous time since its settlement, and that it is constantly increasing in healthfulness.

Education.—The town is comprised in one school district, having four school-houses, with an average annual expenditure of eight hundred and fifty dollars. This includes the interest of a legacy of two thousand dollars left by the late Jeremiah Morrill. A legacy of fifteen hundred dollars, the interest thereof to be expended annually in the support of schools, was left last year by Mrs. Elizabeth Towle. Most of those persons who have obtained a liberal education graduate at Harvard or Dartmouth Colleges. There is a small library of really valuable books, though it has not been replenished for many years. Two Sabbath-school libraries complete the public institutions for education.

Temperance.—This town has always been in the front rank in the temperance reform. As early as 1827, A. R. Brown joined a society in Hampton, and John Gale, the same year, in West Amesbury. In 1829 a number took the pledge, prohibiting WINE.

About this time a temperance society was formed, Jonathan Bailey, president; Amos Tilton, secretary. This was made auxiliary to the Rockingham County Society, which was organized in 1828, and made auxiliary to the New Hampshire State Temperance Society. The East Kingston Society reported in 1833 ninety-seven members. Additions were frequently made during the following years. The pledge which included the prohibition of cider was adopted in 1840. This and the Washingtonian movement of 1841 were both in advance of previous positions, and had their good effects. That there has been real advance in temperance is certain.

A Good Templar lodge was instituted May 2, 1867, and a division of the Sons of Temperance in 1868. In these societies Joseph C. Sargent, now of Haverhill, Mass., was a prominent actor. Both have ceased from activity.

A reform club was organized Oct. 3, 1876, which attracted a wide-spread attention and exerted a salutary influence for a brief period; but it vanished like the mists of the morning. There is no known place in the town where distilled liquors are sold. The consumption of cider is one-fourth of what it once was.

Geological.--In the north part of the town is a natural curiosity interesting to geologists. By the roadside is a granite bowlder, a portion of which is deeply imbedded in the earth, having peculiar water-marks, which looks as though it had been a layer of sand or soft clay, over which a person once walked with a cane in his left hand, causing indentations, and in that state became petrified.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Distinguished Men--Eminent Names.

Persons belonging to the learned professions, most of whom are natives of the town, who have emigrated and settled in other places.

William Smith, M.D., son of William and Betty (Cilley) Smith, was born in East Kingston, Aug. 2-13, 1737. He studied medicine with Hon. Benj. Rowe, M.D., of Kensington. He soon commenced practice in Kensington, but removed to Gilmanton, N. H., Oct. 15, 1768, where he practiced long without a rival. He was in the practice of medicine over seventy years. Of the large number of professional men who have emigrated from this town, Dr. William Smith stands pre-eminent for usefulness and respectability. He died Feb. 25, 1831.

Jonathan Bailey, M.D., was born in Weare, N. H., March 9, 1784, and died in East Kingston, Feb. 12, 1834. He married Elizabeth Fifield, Nov. 17, 1816. She was the daughter of Col. Joseph and Elizabeth (Sanborn) Fifield, was born May 1, 1792, and died

June 12, 1881, aged eighty-nine years. Dr. Bailey had an extensive practice. He left three children, one of whom, Albon W. Bailey, is now a prosperous farmer.

Benjamin Rowe, M.D., son of Hon. Benjamin and Susanna Figg Rowe, was born in Kensington, July 17, 1750. He studied medicine and commenced practice with his father; was assistant surgeon in the Revolution, and surgeon to a company of minutemen in 1775. He married Joanna Tilton, who was born March 24, 1751, and died March 28, 1843, aged ninety-two years. On leaving Kensington he settled in this town, had an extensive practice, and was highly esteemed. He died Nov. 7, 1818, aged sixty-eight years.

Rev. Nathan Tilton, son of Col. Philip and Molly (Batchelder) Tilton, was born July 2, 1772; graduated at Harvard College in 1796; was pastor of Second Parish in Scarborough, Me., from Dec. 10, 1800, to 1827. He died in 1851, at a good old age.

Joseph Tilton, son of Col. Philip and Molly (Batchelder) Tilton, was born Aug. 10, 1774. He graduated at Harvard College in 1797, studied law at Exeter, N. H., with Hon. Jeremiah Smith, and was admitted to the New Hampshire bar in 1801. He practiced a few years in Wakefield and Rochester, but removed to Exeter in 1809, and remained there till his death, March 25, 1856.

Weare Tappan, son of John and Abigail (Weare) Tappan, was born March 3, 1790. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1811, in the class with Judge Joel Parker, Ethan Shepley, of Maine, and other distinguished men. He studied law with Hon. Caleb Ellis, of Claremont. He married Lucinda Atkins, of Claremont, in 1816, and settled in Bradford, N. H., in 1818, where he resided till his death, April 4, 1868. He was an able lawyer, and had an extensive practice. He was a Whig in political opinion until the formation of the Republican party, which, as the party of progress, he was not long in joining. He was a strong lover of freedom and equal rights, and an abolitionist from the beginning to the end of the anti-slavery struggle. He was the father of our present attorney-general, Hon. Mason W. Tappan, of Bradford.

Jonathan Tappan, M.D., son of John and Abigail (Weare) Tappan, was born March 10, 1772. He studied medicine with Dr. Levi Bartlett, of Kingston, and had engaged to settle at Hampton Falls in the practice of his profession, but died at his father's house, Feb. 11, 1796.

Calvin B. Magoun, M.D., son of Simon and Betsey (Barstow) Magoun, was born July 15, 1798. He studied medicine with Drs. Perry, of Exeter, and Cheever, of Portsmouth, and attended medical lectures at Pittsfield, Mass., and Bowdoin College, Maine. He went to New Orleans in 1830, but settled in Centreville, Miss., in the practice of medicine. He remained there a few years, then moved to Woodville, Miss. He married Mary E. Harbour in 1835, but died at his residence in Woodville, Dec. 4, 1837, leaving a widow and one daughter.

Cyrus S. Magoun, M.D., son of Simon and Betsey (Barstow), was born Feb. 2, 1815. He completed an academical course of study at New Hampton, N. H., in 1834; studied medicine with Dr. E. B. Moore, in Epping; attended medical lectures at Dartmouth College, at Philadelphia, and at Pittsfield, Mass., where he received his diploma. He commenced practice as a physician at South Bend, Black River, La., and continued in practice till his death, Oct. 18, 1862. He was twice married.

Rev. Elisha Thayer Rowe, grandson of Rev. Elisha Thayer, D.D., of Kingston, and of Dr. Benjamin Rowe, M.D., of East Kingston, and son of Joseph F. and Mary (Thayer) Rowe, was born Aug. 10, 1813. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1840, and was ordained at Hillsborough, N. H., May 29, 1845. He was classical teacher at Kimball Union Academy, Meriden, N. H., and chaplain of Fourteenth New Hampshire Regiment in the war of Rebellion. He removed to Auburndale, Mass., where he taught a family classical school, and died at Auburndale, March 21, 1867.

Samuel H. Stevens, A.M., son of John, grandson of Col. Ebenezer Stevens, and great-grandson of Maj. Ebenezer Stevens, was born Nov. 20, 1802; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1830; studied law; . . . practiced in Bristol, N. H., twelve years, in which time he was two years a member of the Legislature. He also practiced two years in Lawrence, Mass., and for nine years was cashier of the Granite State Bank in Exeter, N. H. He married Serephina Sanborn, daughter of Moses Sanborn, of Kingston, July 27, 1840. He died at Concord, N. H., March 19, 1876, leaving a widow and one daughter.

Rev. John W. F. Barner was born in Lowell, Mass., Aug. 28, 1831. He came to this town and became a Christian in 1841. He joined the Methodist Church, and commenced in 1852. After preaching in Methuen, Stoneham, and some other places, was colleague with Rev. E. T. Taylor five years at Seamen's Bethel, Boston; was ordained elder in 1863; received repeated appointments in Malden and Lynn, Mass., and Providence, R. I. He is now (July, 1852) chaplain at the Massachusetts State prison.

Amos Batchelder, M.D., son of Amos M. and Sally (Stoker) Batchelder, was born May 27, 1811. Began the study of medicine in 1834 with Dr. Isaiah C. Straw, Methuen, Mass. Commenced the practice of medicine in Pelham, N. H., June 6, 1837; received his diploma at Dartmouth College, November, 1837. Married Rebecca H. Atwood, a native of Pelham, Nov. 23, 1837, and continues in practice there at this time.

Eminent Women.—Dorothy (Gookin) Coffin was born in Hampton, and lived with her husband at the parsonage in East Kingston. The slab at her grave bears this inscription:

"Here lies the body of Mrs. Dorothy Coffin, the virtuous consort of the Rev. Peter Coffin, Pastor of the church of Christ in this place, who deceased June 18, 1749, in the 28th year of her age."

Susanna (Batchelder) Webster, wife of Ebenezer Webster (2d), and daughter of Benjamin and Susanna (Page) Batchelder, and grandmother of Hon. Daniel Webster, was born in Hampton Falls. . . . They were married July 20, 1738. Her father was the son of Nathaniel Batchelder, Sr., and resided on the farm now owned and occupied by Hon. Warren Brown. This Nathaniel, Sr., was a grandson of the notable Stephen Batchelder, who, with his associate, in 1638 settled Winnicunnett, afterwards called Hampton. She was dismissed from the church at Hampton Falls, and received into the church at East Kingston, Jan. 29, 1740.

Mrs. Abigail (Prescott) Rowell, daughter of Jeremiah Prescott, and mother of the late Philip Rowell, resided in the last house on the new Boston road, in the southwest part of the town. She died in 1840, aged one hundred years.

Judith (Brown) Webster, the mother of George B. Webster, was born in South Hampton, Aug. 29, 1775; married in 1803 John, grandson of Jeremy Webster. She was the youngest child of Elijah and Susanna Brown, of South Hampton, who enlisted in the Revolutionary army, and died in the service in the northern part of the State of New York, when Judith was hardly four years old. After seven years of age she relied on her own efforts for support. She possessed a vigorous constitution, survived her husband and three of her four sons, and died March 7, 1876, aged one hundred years and six months. She retained her faculties to the last, and was respected and beloved by all.

Mary (Thayer), wife of Joseph F. Rowe, and eldest daughter of Rev. Elisha Thayer, D.D., was born at the parsonage in Kingston, Feb. 24, 1782. Her father was one of the most noted divines of his day. Mrs. Rowe inherited the virtuous and amiable traits of her father, and retained till her death, April 14, 1859, her connection with the church over which he was pastor. She bore a large family, four of whom survive her; one, Martha T., wife of George B. Webster, is a resident in town.

Lois Sanborn (Stevens) Carrier, daughter of Benjamin and Lois (Judkins) Stevens, and wife of Reuben W. Carrier, was born in Brentwood, Oct. 5, 1799. They were married Oct. 20, 1820, and have since lived in the house where they now reside. They have had ten children. Mrs. Carrier is eighty-three years old, hale and hearty, does her own work, and is the oldest woman in town.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Ecclesiastical History—Congregationalists—Methodists—Baptists—Adventists—Christians—Free-Will Baptists—Universalists—Catholics.

Congregationalists.—We learn from the first church book "That the General Court of New Hampshire did, by their ACT of 17th November, 1738, erect a new parish in the easterly part of the town of Kingstown, by the name of the East Parish in Kingstown."

The inhabitants of said parish, after solemn seeking to God for direction, . . . having the pastors of the neighboring churches join with them, and preach . . . according to the direction of the province law in such cases, assembled on the 17th July, 1739, in a parish meeting legally warned, to make choice of some person to be set over them in the work of the ministry, and voting as usual in such cases, they did with the utmost unanimity make choice of and call Peter Coffin, A.M., of Exeter, unto said ministerial employment among them, who after reasonable deliberation did, on the 31st of August following, return answer with acceptance of their call.

The communicants among them thereupon met together on the 22d of October, and appointed Wednesday, November 14th, for the ordination of their pastor, sending out their letters of invitation to eight of the neighboring churches, inviting "them by their elders and delegates to come and assist in the solemnity. The said 14th November all the churches sent to were represented, excepting the Second Church in Salisbury and the church in Kingston." The ordination then proceeded according to the custom of those times and the present time. "At the same time and before the conclusion of ordination services, the Rev. Mr. Marsh, of Amesbury, gave the covenant into and gathered the church, and Rev. Mr. Cushing, of Salisbury, gave the charge, and the Rev. Mr. Whipple, of Hampton Falls, gave the right hand of fellowship. The whole proceeded with a great deal of decency and good order, the 68th Psalm was sung, and the assembly was dismissed." The covenant and creed that was proposed to the church, and by which they were gathered into a church state, being sent down by Rev. Mr. Secombe, pastor of the other church in Kingstown, then follows. . . .

The creed and covenant are long, and we will not insert even an abstract, as there is nothing unusual in them. Then follow the names of eighteen men, seventeen of whom were dismissed from Kingston and one from Salisbury churches. After all the above it is recorded, "they were thereupon gathered and incorporated into a church state."

On the following Lord's day, which was Nov. 18, 1739, there was admitted to the Second Church of Christ in Kingstown, upon a regular dismissal from the churches to which they had belonged, three males and twenty-three females, all of whose names are recorded. Accessions from this time were frequently made. In three years, at the close of 1742, there had been added fifteen males, dismissed five males; added thirty-one females and dismissed five. These numbers show at the close of 1742 a net membership of eighty, thirty-one males and forty-nine females.

From that time to 1772, the close of Mr. Coffin's pastorate, there had been received twenty-four males and thirty-nine females over and above the deaths and dismissals, which are not given, making a net membership of fifty-five males and eighty-eight females; whole number, one hundred and forty-three.

Susanna Webster, wife of Ebenezer Webster (2), was received into this church by dismissal from the church at Hampton Falls, Jan. 20, 1740; and her husband was received into the church on the 30th of November following. Elizabeth, second wife of the pastor, was received Sept. 2, 1759, previously a member of the Church of England. During the thirty-three years of Mr. Coffin's pastorate there were six hundred and ninety-one baptisms, or an annual average of twenty-one. There was rarely over forty or less than four in any one year, generally somewhere midway between these extremes, decreasing in some measure towards the last of his pastorate. Most of these baptized persons were children; a few were adults.

In the same time there were one hundred and forty-four marriages solemnized, or a yearly average of more than four; rarely more than eight or less than two. During this period one hundred and five persons owned the covenant, or an annual average of less than four persons. In the selection of a pastor and arrangements for the sums to be paid him, and in his dismissal, the church and parish each had a voice and acted in concert. 1744, March 28th, it was voted, "That there shall be a Tankard full of wine, that shall be left, given to the pastor after every sacrament."

These tankards of wine yielded bitter fruit in the end. It stung "as an adder."

In 1745, Simon Noyes and Nathan Adams were suspended on the charge of breaking their church covenant by "absenting themselves from the stated meetings of the church and the sacrament."

In 1746, Ebenezer Sleeper and Obadiah Elkins and their wives were charged with absenting themselves from meetings and communions, and "going to Exeter and other places to Separate meetings," thus violating their church covenant. Susannah Morrill, "Separatist," Sarah Sleeper, who found it more profitable to attend Separate meetings, and others were charged, examined, and suspended, but all these were eventually restored, and dismissed to more congenial church relations.

Their defense was, in the language of Sleeper, "That the Preachers they heard preach at the Separate meetings at Exeter opened the Scriptures more to their understanding, and they profited more by their preaching than they could by the preaching at home; that God had met and blessed them, and they were not sensible of having done wrong." This was the character of the defense of all.

It is a fair supposition that the preaching of Whitefield was the occasion of the Separate meetings in Exeter and other places. The doctrines of the "New Lights" were more satisfactory to spiritual minds than the meetings at home. But there does not appear, what might have been supposed to exist, an unkind spirit in either party.

1772. May 27th, a committee of six members, representing the church people and inhabitants of the East Parish of Kingston, met Mr. Coffin, at a place previously appointed, and arranged and settled their affairs, which were previously in dispute, agreed upon the terms of his dismissal and the payments and allowances that the town should make him; agreed "that the church and people jointly should give him a letter of dismission and recommendation." His pastorate closed March 1, 1772. The financial year was to end on the 15th of the following September, and the parsonage to be vacated November 10th.

June 16th, by request of Mr. Coffin and his wife, "They were by a united vote regularly dismissed from their special relation as members to this church, in order, as it was then proposed, to their joining the church in Exeter, of which the Rev. Mr. Odlin is pastor."

July 2d, a council of ministers and delegates from neighboring churches assembled, and after consultation and "due deliberation" passed a resolve, which the church accepted, "That the Rev. Mr. Coffin ask a dismission from his pastoral relations, and that they recommend him." His dismission and recommendation is recorded Aug. 3, 1772.

Unsuccessful efforts to settle another minister were then made. In the course of a dozen of years they tried and called as many men, and none of them inclined to settle.

In the eighteen years from August, 1772, to 1790, nine persons were dismissed to other churches, three were received by letter, and seven were received into full communion. Eleven owned the covenant for the baptism of their children, and sixty-two children were baptized.

"The failure to settle a minister after the dismission of Mr. Coffin in 1772 was not entirely due to the low state of religion in the place, but to the same causes which unsettled many ministers and which prevented many from settling. The agitation produced by the political state of the country at the commencement of the Revolutionary war called off the attention of men from the subject of religion to other duties, and the drafts of men and of money for the prosecution of the war left the people in many parishes unable to contribute for the support of public worship, so that many preachers, dependent on their salaries for support, were obliged for the time to engage in other occupations. The students of divinity and students in college were called to engage in the service of their country in other ways, so that many years passed before their places could be fully supplied. In this state of destitution many laymen began to teach in the place of ordained ministers, and not a few of them became in the end useful ministers in different denominations."

The town and the church histories, during the first half-century, together with the Baptist and Methodist histories for the next quarter of a century, are so intertwined it has been almost or quite impossible to present each properly without encroaching upon the other. The church books are the first source of information of the church history, and the town books of the town history. We have omitted from the latter what would have been only a repetition of the former; when the reader finds a lack in one of these let him turn to the other, and he will probably find it supplied. Had there been no other church but the Congregationalist, it would have been better to combine the ecclesiastical and town histories, but as there are others it has been deemed best to present each separately, as has been done.

For the next quarter of a century exertions were made to support and sustain Congregationalist sentiments, doctrines, and usages. The last of those who supplied the pulpit regularly was the Rev. Nathaniel Kennedy. He preached and resided in the town some time, we are unable to determine how long. He removed to Philadelphia in 1817, or not far from that time, and died there in 1843.

While Col. Philip Tilton's wife and daughter Mary, and Mary (Sanborn) Thayer and Joseph F. Rowe and wife, and Simon Magoun and family, and Deacon Robert Smith and Joseph Magoun, and Charles Titcomb, with the Websters and Tiltons and others, lived there was an active, powerful, and healthy influence exerted; but they are all gone. There are now between forty and fifty persons who, by birth, education, association, and sympathy, are Congregationalists. Of these a dozen are voters, fourteen are church-members, and four are over seventy years of age. They are very much scattered in the town, and cannot concentrate their influence as otherwise they might. A part of these belong to the church in Kingston, and worship there on the Sabbath.

Methodists.—The first preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New England was Jesse Lee, a Virginian, who, in 1789, preached in the State of Connecticut, in Lynn, Mass., and on Boston Common.

The first sermon by a Methodist in New Hampshire was preached by him in Portsmouth, July, 1791. The first society was organized at Chesterfield, in the southwest part of the State, in the latter part of 1795. It is not easy to ascertain when the first sermon was preached here or the first class was formed. We are inclined to the opinion that there was preaching earlier than 1799, but that no society was formed before 1802. Epaphras Kibby, who was preaching at Sandwich, R. I., under the charge of his presiding elder, George Pickering, was transferred to East Kingston in 1799. At this time there were reported but one hundred and thirty-one Methodist members in the State. The following year there was a gain of forty members. He preached here and a portion of the time in Poplin. Another preacher, Daniel Webb, was sent by Presiding Elder Pickering to Hawke. Soon after a class was formed at Hawke, another at Poplin, and at a later period in East Kingston.

We assume that the Methodists commenced here with the opening of the present century, when the membership in New Hampshire was less than two hundred, and these mostly in the southwest part of the State. The first General Conference held in New England was at Lynn, Mass., July 18, 1800, at which Epaphras Kibby was ordained and appointed to a circuit in Maine. Rev. George Pickering continued presiding elder of this district. Among the preachers who traveled this way was Ralph Williston, who was stationed at Hawke in 1800. He was a favorite here, but some time afterward united with the Episcopal Church. Although no societies had been formed in this vicinity when Kibby came to East Kingston, I think the ground had been entered upon and partially broken up by Pickering, Nichols, and others.

In 1802, Thomas Rawlin and Orin Fairbanks were stationed in this town and Poplin. For some years from this date there were frequent additions.

(All to whom this * is prefixed were circuit preachers to classed towns, who preached here a part of the time and at some other place or places the remainder.)

In 1803, Nehemiah Coye* was stationed here. 1804, Daniel Webb was sent to Salisbury and Kingston. We think he devoted a part of his time here; there is a tradition to that effect. He solemnized a marriage here March 26, 1805; was afterwards stationed at Salem, N. H., and in various places in Massachusetts. "He lived to become the oldest effective Methodist preacher in the world."

In 1805, Alexander McLane<sup>3</sup> was stationed at Kingston and Salisbury, but preached here a part of the time. He baptized Reuben W. Currier. Probably Capt. John Currier and his wife Phebe, Elisha Sweet and his wife, and Mrs. Cram had joined the society before this time.

In 1806, William Stevens was stationed here, but we do not think he preached much, if at all, as Mr. McLane was hired by the town. 1807, Mr. McLane was hired a part of the time. 1808, the town voted not to be taxed to support preaching, and that those who do not wish Mr. McLane to have their part of the parsonage money can have it expended as they please by notifying the selectmen; also reconsidering former votes in favor of hiring Mr. McLane or appropriating to him the parsonage money. For the next ten years we have but a little Methodist history.

It will be borne in mind that the first Annual Conference in New England was held in 1800, that doors for labor at that time opened on every hand, and that ministers for the work were not plenty. We cannot find records that preachers were sent here by the Conference from 1809 to 1822, inclusive; still it seems to us there were. We have always considered these as the most vigorous, active, prosperous days of Methodism in the town. But of those who took an active part at the time none remain to tell us what transpired. We think now that there were some appointments from the Conference, and that Rev. Reuben Peaslee, of Plaitow, Abraham French, of Hawke, William French, of Sandown, Metcalf, of Greenland, who was much beloved, a licentiate by the name of Cowdrey, and others, including Rev. John Adams, of Newington, ministered here, rendering it unnecessary for the Conference to furnish a constant supply. During this period there were added to the society Richard French and wife and daughter Nancy, who became Mrs. Nute, Enoch Sanborn and family, Moses Martin's wife, and Joseph Corliss and wife, on the main road, and some in other parts of the town.

In the year 1818 an effort was made to establish an academy. A rivalry at once sprung up with the people of Kingston, and the academy building in that town was erected in 1819. The effort embraced as its friends the people generally, except the "standing order," Abraham Brown, David M. Currier, and others transferred their interests from this town to Kingston. Martin Ruter was the first "preceptor." The writer was one of his pupils. He remained here but a short time, being elected by the General Conference, sitting in Baltimore in 1820, agent of the book concern at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he continued eight years. Mr. Ruter was succeeded by an Irishman, whose name was Congdon. He was not very successful, and the school, as a Methodist institution, gradually ran down. It has been continued at intervals as an independent or Union School with indifferent success to the present time.

In 1823, Eleazer Steele was stationed here; 1824, S. B. Haskell, Johnson, a local preacher of Concord, N. H., who resided temporarily at Amesbury Mills, was hired a part of this year. 1826, Amos Binney was stationed here.

There were camp-meetings at Sandown in 1823, '24, and '25. At these meetings, and under the labors of the various preachers at these times, were converted and joined the class, and afterwards the church, John Sanborn and wife, and Eliza, Abigail, Hannah, Stevens, Jacob, and others of his family and other families,—John Currier and his wife, at the Falls; Mrs. Lois Currier, on the main road; and George How and wife on the North road. In 1826, Mr. French, of Sandown, volunteered his services without reward. He preached in the old meeting-house. Mr. French was a hard-laboring, Christian man, and a fair preacher.

In 1827, Charles G. Chase, with Rev. John Adams, was in "charge."

Mr. Chase was unmarried, and "boarded round" with the people. The allowance for his services or salary by the Conference was one hundred dollars, if he could get it. He was a fluent, ready, easy speaker, handsome in person, pleasant, companionable in his intercourse, and ardent in his affections. By the advice of his friends he sought affinity with other denominations, got the friendship and attachment of the people, and was laborious and zealous in his work. A revival followed; thirty persons made profession of religion; two-thirds of them joined the Methodists. Of those who still live nearly all are in good standing in their several churches; they are Ephraim Carter and wife, then Rhoda Jane True, Mrs. Eaton, then Mary Ann Lawrence, Mrs. Rundlett, then Hannah Bell Lawrence, Charles L. Rowell and wife, then Mary Ann Sanborn, Mrs. Blanchard, of Haverhill, then Sally Rowell, Reuben W. Currier, and Abraham R. Brown, and one or two others of whom we are not certain. Ten in all, one-third of the whole number, remain at the expiration of fifty-five years; others have fallen asleep joyfully, several within a few years. No revival here has so many substantial Christians now remaining, and no one has been productive of more good to the world by those who have already laid off their armor.

In 1834, E. H. Ladd and John Mc Cain were sent to this circuit, and preached alternately. In some revival not far from this time, perhaps at a later date, in which not only the stationed preacher, but John Adams and some others were engaged, James M. Sanborn made a profession of religion. 1835, C. L. McCurdy was in "charge." This year Caroline (Lawrence) Rundlett was among the converts. At a later date her sister, Sarah Lawrence, united with the church, and after the death of Caroline became Mrs. Rundlett, and died less than six months afterwards. Both these sisters died triumphantly. Some time previous to this, we cannot give the year with certainty, a "four days' meeting" was held, in which Dr. Jonathan Bailey, John Towle, and their wives were among the converts. They both lived and died well. Their wives have lately passed away. Rev. Silas Green, of Epping, and quite a number of other ministers assisted in this series of meetings. 1836 and 1837, Warren Wilbur was in "charge." 1838, N. Howard; 1839, Warren Wilbur.* In 1840 this place was left without an appointment, and Presiding Elder John F. Adams placed J. M. Wiggin, a young preacher, here as a supply. In the winter following was a long-continued series of meetings. Ministers and people of various denominations were generally interested in it. A large number made a profession of religion and joined the several churches. Rev. W. H. Brewster, who was stationed at Haverhill, Mass., preached a number of very excellent gospel sermons. 1841, Abraham M. Osgood, stationed preacher. The meeting-house was occupied by the several denominations, in proportion to their ownership of pews. The town occupied it for town purposes. The Methodists were entitled to it eighteen Sabbaths in the year, or about one-third part of the time. This not being so much as they wished, they erected for themselves a commodious house, which was completed and the pews sold May 21, 1842. This year (1842) James M. Young was stationed preacher. A revival took place, in which John W. F. Barnett, who became a preacher, Orin S. Currier, who became a merchant in Boston, Lyman Nichols, since deceased, and others made a public profession of religion. 1843, James M. Young was continued in "charge;" 1844, Calvin M. Dustin; 1845, Ezekiel Adams; 1846 and 1847, Charles C. Burr; 1848 and 1849, Ira A. Sweatland; 1850, Henry Hill.* The next seven years the preachers stationed at Kingston and East Kingston were: 1851, Henry Nutter; 1852, John Gould; 1853 and 1854, Ezekiel Adams; 1855, S. S. Cummings; 1856 and 1857, Lorenzo Draper. For the next seventeen years the Conference did not station preachers here, and the meeting-house was abandoned, occupied by other denominations, or the pulpit supplied temporarily by local or supernumerary preachers. Among these were Thurston, of Dover, and Dearborn, of Salem, who had been presiding elders on other districts. James M. Sanborn lived on the paternal estate, but gave his contributions and influence to Kingston. 1875 and 1876, James Carnet was sent here and to Kingston, but the last year he devoted himself almost entirely to Kingston. 1877 and 1878, Charles H. Chase was sent to East Kingston and Kingston. He devoted his services to the latter place. Towards the close of 1878, Truman Carter was called by the people to fill out an unexpired term of Rev. James Graham, a Baptist minister. 1879, Truman Carter in "charge." An interest was awakened; several persons were hopefully converted and others reclaimed. Soon after a number of persons who had joined the society removed from the town.

One-fourth of the population may properly be classed as Methodists. November, 1879, the church was reorganized. Ann M. Nelson is recording secretary. It consists of one class, of which the pastor is leader. It contains thirty-four members, twelve males and twenty-two females.

The official board: Trustees, Ezra F. Currier, John M. Tukesbury, John B. Morrill, Jacob H. Sanborn, Ann M. Nelson, Mary R. N. Robinson; Stewards, Ezra F. Currier, Arthur T. Robinson, Robert E. Rude, Charles A. Sleeper, Ann M. Nelson; John B. Morrill, superintendent of Sabbath-school.

1880 and 1881, Rev. Fred. E. White in "charge." During these years the congregations were sustained. There was an attendance in good weather and favorable circumstances of one hundred persons, sometimes more; by estimation, an average attendance of seventy through the year. A bequest of five hundred dollars, made during Mr. Carter's ministry by Mrs. Elizabeth Towle, was realized this year. Mr. White was favored with the friendship of the people. His successor, now in "charge" for 1882, is Alexander McGregor.

The Baptists.—The Baptists were first known in this town some time between 1750 and 1776. The first Baptist Church in New Hampshire was organized in Newton in 1755, and it is probable that some of its members resided in East Kingston. Seven persons, viz.: Jonathan Blasdell, Henry Blasdell, Samuel Carter, Philip Rowell, Abraham Brown, Edmund Pillsbury, and Sarah Graves, were freed from paying minister tax to the town for the year 1776 and thereafter, they being Quakers, churchmen, and Baptists.

In the winter of 1781, Abraham Brown took his family on an ox-sled to meeting at the old Philip Morrill house, beyond the Falls, where probably a portion of the worshippers were from South Hampton and Newton. Mr. Brown died in February, 1781. The Sabbath previously he attended meeting at Little River, in North Hampton. On his way homeward he was assaulted in the woods, causing a bruise which he carried to his grave the following week. He died on Thursday, at the age of thirty-five years. He evidently was a teacher among his brethren, though not an ordained preacher.

His widow kept open house for public worship and the hospitable entertainment of preachers and others.

Dr. Samuel Shepard, who was born in Salisbury, Mass., in 1739, was ordained at Stratham in 1771, and had settled in Brentwood, where a church was formed the same year, which a number of persons from East Kingston joined. Dr. Shepard often preached and baptized at East Kingston and neighboring towns accessible to the Baptists of this place. He had the care of the young and struggling churches in this vicinity, and fully earned the title of bishop among them. "In this town and South Hampton there were many converted during the summer of 1792." Henry Gale, Reuben Dow, and others were baptized.

Thomas Nichols, of Harvard, Mass., preached here and in various towns in the vicinity. "He was a faithful man, but of slender constitution, whose zeal went beyond his strength in his labors. After a long illness he died a triumphant death, at the house of Widow Brown."

Rev. John Peak, a native of Walpole, N. H., removed to Deerfield in 1793, preaching not only there but in this and other towns. In 1795 Mr. Peak settled in Newton, and continued to preach frequently and baptize in East Kingston.

This year Mrs. Abigail (Tappan) Gale, widow of Col. Jacob Gale, with several of her children and neighbors, were baptized by Elder Peak, and united with the church in Newton. A number of generations of Gales, Browns, Eastmans, and Blaisdells were Baptists.

In 1797 the town "voted that the Baptists should have a portion of the parsonage money, and lay it out as they see fit, and have the meeting-house when not occupied." For many years from this there were contentions among the several denominations in regard to their rights in the meeting-house and to the parsonage, sometimes one and then another party prevailing. In 1812 the controversy was partially settled by "allowing the several denominations their proportionate share of the meeting-house and of the parsonage money, and refraining from raising money by tax to support preaching."

Benjamin Paul, a mulatto, preached for a time.

John Pillsbury, a young man who had been preaching in this town and vicinity, sickened and died at the house of Widow Brown.

After the removal of Elder Peak from this vicinity, the death of Dr. Shepard and others, the Baptists had meetings less frequently.

In 1825, Joseph Corliss, a widower, married Mrs. Mary James, of Pittsfield. They labored earnestly to advance Baptist interests, and a number of persons living here united with churches of the same faith in neighboring towns.

Delia Brown was baptized in Fowow River, at the Falls, by Rev. James Barnaby, and joined the church of which he was pastor at Salisbury and Amesbury Mills. She died of consumption, wonderfully triumphant, Sept. 7, 1832, in the thirty-fourth year of her age. Rebecca (Gale) Sanborn, Jane Tilton, Jabez D. James and wife and daughter, with Mr. and Mrs. Corliss, joined the church in South Hampton.

Mrs. Corliss died Jan. 13, 1858, in the sixty-eighth year of her age. Mr. Corliss died April 5, 1859, aged eighty-one years. Since their time there has been little effort made to advance the Baptist cause. In 1876, Rev. James Graham came to this place; an interest was awakened, several persons were hopefully converted, and others reclaimed from a backsliding state under his ministry; but he and his friends thought it not profitable to the cause of God to build up a separate denominational interest. There are twelve persons who still are Baptists, only three of whom are church-members,—a less number than at any previous time for more than a century.

Other ministers who have labored here, and of whom honorable mention should be made, are Revs. Ferdinand Ellis, Samuel Cook, John Newton Browne, Timothy P. Ropes, and James A. Boswell.

Adventists.—In the autumn of 1839, William Miller gave a course of lectures in Exeter, which attracted unusual attention. Many from this place went to hear, and were interested. Other public speakers who had embraced Mr. Miller's views lectured in the place, among them the eloquent Rev. Charles Fitch. In 1841 a camp-meeting was held here, which attracted a large crowd.

Many exaggerated reports were circulated concerning this and other kindred gatherings. That this meeting did not partake of the obnoxious qualities charged against them appears by the following account, written by John G. Whittier, one of the most enlightened and impartial observers:

"On my way eastward," says Whittier, "I spent an hour or two at a camp-ground of the Second Adventists in East Kingston. The spot was well chosen. A tall growth of pine and hemlock threw its melancholy shadow over the multitude, who were arranged on rough seats of boards and logs. Several hundreds, perhaps a thousand, people were present and more were rapidly coming. Drawn about in a circle, forming a background of snowy whiteness to the dark masses of men and foliage, were the white tents, and back of them the provision-shells and cook-shops. When I reached the ground I saw, the words of which I could not distinguish, was peeping through the dim aisles of the forest. I know nothing of music, having neither ear nor taste for it, but I could readily see that it had its effect upon the multitude before me, kindling to higher intensity their already excited enthusiasm. The preachers were placed in a rude pulpit of rough boards, supported only by the dead forest leaves and flowers, and tasselled not with silk and velvet, but with the green boughs of the sombre hemlocks around it. One of them followed the music in an earnest exhortation on the duty of preparing for the great event. Occasionally he was really eloquent, and his description of the last day had all the terrible distinctness of Ansell's painting of the "End of the World." Suspended from the front of the rude pulpit were two broad sheets of canvas, upon one of which was the figure of a man, the head of gold, the breast and arms of silver, the belly and sides of brass, the legs of iron, and feet of clay, the dream of Nebuchadnezzar. On the other were depicted the wonders of the Apocalyptic vision—the beasts, the dragons, the scalding woman seen by the Seer of Patmos, oriental types and figures and mystic symbols, translated into strange Yankee idioms and exhibited like the boasts of a traveling menagerie. One horrible man, with his hideous head and scaly carpal extremity, reminded me of the tremendous line of Milton, who, in speaking of the same evil dragon, describes him as "swinging the scaly horrors of his folded tail." To an imaginative mind the scene was full of novel interest. The white circle of tents, the dim wood arches, the upturned, earnest faces, the loud voices of the speakers, interwoven with the awful symbolic language of the Bible, the smoke from the fires, rising like incense from forest altars, carried one back to the days of primitive worship, when the groves were God's first temples."

From this meeting an influence went out into all the surrounding country. It was a season of awakening and religious zeal, even with those who did not embrace these peculiar views. At this time the believers in Advent doctrines were numerous, and there were many conversions from the world, as well as proselytes from the churches.

From 1841 to 1846 there was a continued interest, and a large number of persons professed to submit themselves to God. Not only in these years, but afterwards in 1847 and 1854, very many were earnest and sincere in looking for the coming of the Lord "in the clouds of heaven." They have as yet been disappointed, but still cling to the hope very firmly, with Scotland's fairest poet, that

"The morn will come, say, He himself,
Brighter than morn's best ray,
Shall come to bid the night depart,
And bring at last the day."

In July, 1860, Rev. James White, now of Portsmouth, preached here, and in the following November moved his family into the town. He stayed nearly two years, and in a letter lately written says, "Forty persons were converted." "Most of the people were favorable."

Had they continued united, they would have been a very influential and useful people. But a few left them through disappointment; others were contentions on points of doctrine in no way connected with the original "message." They separated into parties, and with their loss of union their influence was largely gone. There are now, including children, twenty-four persons styled "Adventists," nearly one-half of whom are church-members. Eight are voters, and four are over seventy years of age. They represent three distinct parties, though most of them do not belong to any organized body. Rev. John G. P. Cruise, a resident of the town, is a true immersionist, and holds meetings often at his own house; but rarely preaches to any considerable congregation. Prominent among Adventists have been John Towle, Reuben W. Carrier, and many others, with a large number of worthy Christian women.

The Universalists.—We cannot ascertain when the Universalists first came to this town. Revs. Sebastian L. Streeter and Hosea Ballou were early preachers here, and the earliest of which we have certain knowledge. Mr. Streeter commenced his pastorate in Portsmouth in 1815, and closed it in 1824. During this time he occasionally preached here. His "home" or stopping-place was with Esquire Edward Greeley, who died Nov. 5, 1817. From the above and traditional accounts our conclusion is that it was not far from 1814.

A lady, born in 1806, remembers well Esquire Greeley and Mr. Streeter, and thinks we are as nearly correct in the time as can be ascertained, unless there are records somewhere to which we have not access.

Rev. E. H. Lake with his family resided in town a number of years, but preached here only a part of the time.

One-fourth of the inhabitants are strongly attached to Universalist doctrines and usages, and are not favorably disposed to what are usually termed "evangelical views," though they claim that theirs are the most evangelical of any that are promulgated.

There is now a singular apathy existing with them in relation to meetings. They have had but a few for a number of years last past. Several families attend service on the Sabbath in Kingston, where is a prosperous society.

During the lives of Amos M. Batchelder, Enoch S. French, John Woodman, John Philbrick, Josiah Greeley, and their contemporaries, who first embraced Universalist sentiments, all of whom are now gone, exertions were made to support preaching and disseminate their doctrines, which a portion of the people readily accepted. The ministers who preached here after Messrs. Streeter and Ballou were Revs. Russell Streeter, Charles Spear, Thomas G. Farnsworth, Thomas Whittemore, James Shrigley, S. S. Fletcher, Calvin Damon, Willard Spaulding, Henry Jewell, Nathan R. Wright, J. P. Greenwood, J. J. Locke, and Edwin J. Lake. Most of these were men of ability and accomplishments, who were active and fervent in their labors. None of them preached for a great length of time. They have never had a permanent settled pastor.

The Christians have had for many years an influence and a few adherents. As early as 1792, Rev. Elias Smith, then a Baptist, preached here and baptized. Gradually he separated from the Baptists, and with others started a new party called Christians. After this he preached here and in other towns in this vicinity. He possessed superior talents and was a great favorite with his friends, but was unstable in his doctrinal views. Others who have preached here acceptably are Revs. Henry Rottle, John Harriman, Elijah Shaw, Julius C. Blodgett, Henry Plummer, Simeon Swett, Edwin Barnham, and Daniel P. Pike. But more than any other was Rev. Samuel E. Brown, whose home was here for many years, and who labored without fee or reward. The Christians have done little here for thirty years last past. There are now fifteen or twenty persons connected with them, about one-fourth of whom are church-members, though not all attached to any organization.

The Free-Will Baptists have had preaching here in past years, but no membership, as they at once coalesced with the Christians. The Rev. Benjamin Fernald, who had labored in places not very far distant, came here in 1856 and preached from two to three years, including the years 1857 and 1858, to good congregations and general acceptance. He preached to a Union congregation, and made no efforts to build up his or any other denomination. A number of other Free-Will Baptist preachers have officiated here. Mrs. Judith (French) Carter, of Newton, was the most prominent and intelligent lady of that faith who has resided in the town.

Catholics.—There are four families of Irish Catholics. They do not hold public meetings. Their priests sometimes visit them, we have been informed. In the summer season thirty or forty French Canadians, some of them with families, work here at brick-making. They have no influence on the permanent inhabitants, nor have the latter perceptibly on them.

Representatives.—In 1772, Nathaniel Batchelder and Jacob Gale were delegates to a convention in Exeter. In 1774, Jacob Gale and Ebenezer Batchelder were delegates to a convention in Exeter.

In 1780 the towns of Kingston and East Kingston united in choosing Nathaniel Batchelder a representative to the General Assembly to be holden at Exeter, empowered to join in calling a convention to settle a plan of government.

In 1783 East Kingston united with Kingston in the choice of a representative to meet at Concord in June, 1784. At that session East Kingston was joined permanently with South Hampton as classed towns, and representatives were chosen from them alternately. This continued till 1849, when an act was passed authorizing each town to send thereafter a representa-five annually. At the June session of the Legislature of 1878 an act was passed changing the representation, uniting East Kingston and South Hampton as classed towns, so that in the November following a representative was chosen by the two towns united for the biennial session of the years 1879 and 1880.

We give below a list of the representatives since the establishment of the new government, or from 1782 to 1882. Those having this annexed were delegates to Constitutional Conventions:

1782 Nathaniel Batchelder.	1843 Enoch S. French.
1783 Nathaniel Batchelder.	1844 Enoch S. French.
1783 John Eastman.	1845 Amos Tilton.
1784 John Eastman.	1846 Eliphalet W. Philbrick.
1785 Nathaniel Batchelder.	1847 No choice.
1786 Nathaniel Batchelder.	1848 Eliphalet W. Philbrick.
1788 Benjamin Clough.	1849 John Towle.
1788 Benjamin Clough.	1850 Josiah Morrill.
1790 Eliphalet Webster.	1851 John Towle.
1791 Ezra Currier.	1852 Benjamin L. Morrill.
1791 Eliphalet Webster.	1853 Benjamin L. Morrill.
1792 Eliphalet Webster.	1854 Ezra F. Currier.
1793 Eliphalet Webster.	1855 Ezra M. Currier.
1795 No choice.	1856 Nathan B. Tilton.
1797 Eliphalet Webster.	1857 Ema F. Currier.
1799 Eliphalet Webster.	1858 Jacob H. Sanborn.
1801 Daniel Page.	1859 John A. Morrill.
1803 Eliphalet Webster.	1860 John L. Greeley.
1805 Benson Greeley.	1861 Benjamin Webster.
1807 No choice.	1862 Eliphalet Greeley.
1809 Edward Greeley.	1863 Dana Webster.
1811 Edward Greeley.	1864 Albert B. Currier.
1813 Henry Gale.	1865 Francis T. French.
1815 Edward Greeley.	1866 John W. Gale.
1817 Edward Greeley.	1867 Samuel L. Blaisdell.
1819 Richard French.	1868 Samuel L. Blaisdell.
1821 Stevens Sanborn.	1869 George W. Sanborn.
1823 Joseph Currier.	1870 James M. Sanborn.
1825 Joseph Currier.	1871 Charles F. Greeley.
1827 Joseph Currier.	1872 Stevens Sanborn.
1829 John Stevens.	1873 John L. Philbrick.
1831 Jeremiah Morrill.	1874 William S. Titecomb.
1833 Jeremiah Morrill.	1875 William Gilet.
1835 John Stevens.	1876 Thomas J. Heath.
1837 John Stevens.	1879 John B. Morrill.
1839 John Stevens.	1877 Joseph A. Tilton.
1840 Charles Sanborn.	1878 George W. Sanborn.
1841 No choice.	1879-80 Francis T. French.
1842 Charles Sanborn.	1881-82 George W. Sanborn.

Political.—We have given a list of representatives for one hundred years, or three generations from the establishment of the government. For the first generation we cannot state their differences of opinion politically, if any existed. In the early days of the republic the people were active, patriotic, and self-sacrificing. On the latter part of the first generation new issues arose, principles were discussed, and parties were formed, so we are able to write with certainty in relation to the political character of the representatives of the last two generations. During the second generation, a part of the time a classed town, South Hampton furnished twelve representatives. Two years it was voted not to send; of the remaining twenty years, the regularly nominated Democrats were successful seven years, the regular Federalists or Whigs three years, and in the other ten years moderate Democrats, supported by the combined opposition, were elected over the regular Democratic nominee.

For the last generation the Democrats have elected their regular ticket twenty years, and the Republicans have elected theirs thirteen years.

Military Record.—The following is a list of the soldiers of East Kingston in the war of the Rebellion:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN SANBORN.

John Sanborn, son of John and Abigail (Rowell) Sanborn, was born on the Sanborn homestead in East Kingston, N. H., June 1, 1809. He commenced when quite small to work on the farm and in the tannery of his father, having only limited common-school education, and remained at work there until he was thirty-two years old, when (1832) he went to Virginia to visit an uncle in medical practice at the "Dismal Swamp." He remained in the South until 1837, "tramping" on foot over Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, Arkansas, and Louisiana, crossing the Alleghany Mountains twenty-one times. In 1840 he moved to Amesbury, Mass., and ran a tan-yard there for three years, when he engaged in lumbering, following that profitably to quite an extent until 1864, when he removed to the place in Amesbury Mills where he is at this date resident, and has not been in active business since. His mind was not satisfied with the steady ebb and flow of life in the quiet New England community where he had cast his lot, and he determined to see the historic places of transatlantic lands and know from his own observation the story which they told. He married, Aug. 16, 1842, Mercy E., daughter of Ebenezer and Eunice (Merrill) Morrill. She was a native of Salisbury, Mass. In 1862 he visited the London Exposition, remaining in London thirty-nine days, then visited Paris, then Rome, then back to England and Scotland, which he thoroughly viewed from Highlands to Lowlands, spending three most pleasant weeks; from thence to Liverpool, whence, Aug. 16, 1862, he took passage for New York on the "Great Eastern." She ran on the rocks off Montank Point, and soon had twenty-five feet of water in her hold. The passengers were not injured, however, and were landed in New York Aug. 27, 1862, and Mr. Sanborn arrived at South Amesbury in safety. Previously he had made a trip through Ontario, Quebec, and New Brunswick, visiting Niagara Falls and many points of interest in that portion of British America. Sept. 30, 1873, accompanied by his wife, he embarked for Liverpool, his ultimate destination being the Pyramids of Egypt. Arriving in Liverpool Oct. 12, 1873, he remained about six weeks, visiting London, Brighton, Hastings, Dover, etc. November 24th, they went to Paris, en route for Florence, Italy, passing on their way through the Mont Cenis tunnel. Jan. 4, 1874, they started for Cairo, Egypt, taking cars to Brindisi, where they went on a steamer for Alexandria, and were five days on the Mediterranean. They remained in Egypt about a week, looking at Alexandria, Cairo, with its famous citadel of oriental alabaster, the Pyramids, the Sphinx; returned to Alexander; saw the Pacha's Garden, Cleopatra's Needle, and the other scenes of the curious city of that old curious land, then setting their faces homeward they took steamer for Naples, enjoying the Mediterranean scenery and the beauties of the Bay of Naples, remaining at Naples one week, then off for Rome for another week, then for various points of intelligent interest, Pompeii, Herculaneum, etc., and to Florence. In the healthful atmosphere of that beautiful city they remained about six weeks, and February 24th left for Paris, thence March 12th for London, seeing on that journey the first snow they had seen that winter. After three enjoyable weeks in London they sailed from Liverpool for Boston April 16, 1874, arriving there April 29th, reaching Amesbury the same day.

Mr. Sanborn is a pleasant and instructive conversationalist; sees everything with a practical New England eye, and can point every story with a fitting moral. He is prudent, economical, and is possessed of a shrewd common sense in business matters. The following extracts from his voluminous diary show that he is a man of more than ordinary command of language, and, if he could be induced to publish it, would give the world a humorous and valuable addition to its works on travel. The following expressive pen-picture of life in Cairo is ample single proof of this:

"Egypt, smitten and accursed, has lost all strength and energy. Long oppression has taken from her the power and the will to advance. In Egypt there is no middle class, no nobility, clergy, merchants, nor landlords. Where once stood the palaces of the Pharaohs the people have built mud-walled huts, in which they now live. Some of the features are camels, donkeys, fleas, lice, dirt, and odors not waited for 'Araby the Blest.' The architecture of the business portion of the city is that of Paris, stately edifices of hewn stone. In the suburbs you find primitive oriental mud hovels,—a hole in the roof for the chimney, and another in the wall for door and window. The ground is the floor, a rush matting serves for door. You see men, women, naked children, dogs, goats, pigs, chickens occupying the same premises. The men wear camel's-hair shirts, which serves for coat, cloak, and night-gown, all in one. The women wear long cotton frocks, dyed with indigo, without crinoline."

The other extract is of family interest: "Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 20, 1880. Forty years ago to-day I was in Yallahusha County, Miss., and took up a newspaper, Brother Jonathan, published in New York under date of Sept. 25, 1840, and saw the following about my grandmother, Abigail Rowell: 'The Exeter News-Letter chronicles the death, at East Kingston, N. H., of Widow Abigail Rowell, aged one hundred years, eleven months. She left eight children, twenty-seven grandchildren, sixty-five great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren.'"

JAMES M. SANBORN.

The first known ancestor of the numerous families of Sanborn was John (?) Sanborn, who married, in England, a daughter of Rev. Stephen Bachelor; died early, leaving his widow and three sons to the care of her father. Rev. Mr. Bachelor was born in England about 1561, took Episcopal orders, was rejected for non-conformity, went to Holland, and afterwards to America, landing at Boston, June 5, 1632, and settling for a few years at Lynn, where he, then over seventy, discharged the duties of a pastor over a church he had gathered together. Difficulties in the church arising, partly from his eccentricities, he, with quite a following, removed to Ipswich, then to Newbury, and in 1638 settled in Hampton, N. H., and was regularly installed as first pastor of its Congregational Church. Here John and William Sanborn lived and died. The name was originally, in England, Sanborne, or Sambourn, derived from the parish of Sanborn. (Another authority gives it as Sandborne.) The John above mentioned was lieutenant, many years a selectman, representative to the General Court, etc. From him is descended James Monroe Sanborn, the line of descent being John, Tristram, Tristram, John (who, born July 30, 1743, settled in Kingston, had six sons and daughters, and became one of the leading men of the town), and John. James Monroe Sanborn, son of John and Abigail (Rowell) Sanborn, was born on the homestead of his ancestors in East Kingston, N. H., Aug. 2, 1819. He was reared a farmer, had the educational advantages of good common schools, supplemented by one term's attendance at Hampton Academy. He was youngest in a family of twelve children, and remained on the farm with his father, learning of him the trade of tanner and currier, in which he was doing a large business. He entered as a youth into labor, and from early years earnestly carried both agriculture and tanning forward vigorously. His active temperament, business qualities, and warm social nature caused him to be extensively and favorably known. He was a successful farmer, and an intelligent and enterprising promoter of the interests of agriculture, and stood in the van of the working officers of the leading agricultural societies of the State; was one of the first members of Rockingham County Agricultural Society, and for many years one of its trustees. He was largely intrusted with positions of trust and honor, and was probably the most influential citizen of his town. Living and dying on his native homestead, by his actions he commanded the confidence and esteem of the community, and never was that confidence misplaced or forfeited. He had a generous heart and genial disposition, and a practical benevolence which was always controlled by the spirit of Christianity. He purchased the tannery of Moses Sanborn, at Little River, Kingston, and carried on an extensive business for about ten years.

During nearly his entire business life he was placed in various offices in the government of his town, both in its material and educational interests. Whig and Republican in belief, as such he was selectman, town clerk, justice of the quorum, representative, and in all matters his judgment was respected as superior to others, and his honesty above suspicion. He was licensed as a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1855, and ordained a deacon May 3, 1857, by Bishop Morris. As a preacher he was plain, practical, and of easy address, and his ministry was exercised gratuitously whenever occasion offered. He was nine years manager of and one of the most efficient members of the executive committee of the Hedding Camp-Meeting Association at Epping at the time of his death, which occurred July 5, 1875. He married Julia A., daughter of Reuben W. and Lois (Stevens) Currier, Dec. 1, 1842. There were two children by this marriage,—Areanna Evelyn, born April 9, 1845, married Edward A. Holmes, resides in Boston, and has one child, Lois M.; James M. died in infancy. Mrs. Sanborn died Feb. 7, 1849. His second marriage was Sept. 25, 1859, to Elizabeth H., daughter of Jonathan and Lydia (Hammond) Fletcher, who survives him. Their children were (1) James Fletcher, born March 30, 1853, graduated at Comer's Commercial College, Boston, married Mary J., daughter of Elbridge and Mary Judkins, of Kingston, Oct. 15, 1874, has two children, Winfred J., and Henry C.; (2) Julia Augusta, born March 23, 1855, graduated at Robinson Female Seminary, Exeter, married Rev. John Wentworth Sanborn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Aug. 21, 1873, had children, Elizabeth M. E. and John W., Jr., and died at Gowanda, N. Y., Aug. 14, 1877; (3) Sherman Hammond, born May 5, 1857, educated at Tilton, New Hampshire Conference Seminary, was graduated as Doctor of Dental Surgery at Boston Dental College, May 1, 1879, married Clara T., daughter of Atherton H. and Emily E. (Bradley) Stevens, of East Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 22, 1880, and is in practice of his profession at Woburn, Mass.; (4) Mary Abbie died in infancy; (5) John Munroe, born April 9, 1863, educated at Kingston and Cushing (Ashburnham) Academies, succeeded his father as farmer on the old homestead, married Clara N., daughter of Amos C. and Hattie E. (Draper) Chase, of Kingston (see biography of A. C. Chase, Kingston); (6) Moses Manson, born Dec. 4, 1865.

For nearly half a century Mr. Sanborn was accustomed to walk the streets of his native town, mingling with its people in social, business, and church relations, and never did malice or suspicion whisper aught against his integrity. He was emphatically an honest man, and the vacuum made by his loss cannot be filled by another.

In public and private life he was modest and unassuming, courteous and gentlemanly in his demeanor, sympathetic and benevolent to the distressed, and warmly attached to his friends. He was firm and undimling in the discharge of duty, energetic and indignant against any appearance of chicanery or fraud. In his death his family lost a kind and tender husband, a loving and indulgent father, and Rockingham County one of its most prominent and honored citizens, whose life and influence were inseparably connected with all prominent events in the county during the last quarter of a century, and whose memory will be cherished and respected more largely than that of almost any townsman who survives him. His widow resides with her son on the old homestead, and, like her lamented husband, enjoys a warm place in the hearts of many whom her benevolence has befriended or her Christian influence reached.

THE BROWN FAMILY.

Rev. Samuel E. Brown, son of Abraham and Betsy (Ring) Brown, was born Sept. 13, 1806. In addition to an English education, he spent one year in the study of Latin and Greek at the academy in Kingston. He taught school twelve years, with long intervals of vacation, in which he pursued his studies. He commenced his religious life in 1827, was baptized in 1828, began to preach in 1829, was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry by elders of the Christian denomination, among whom was Rev. Elijah Shaw, April 24, 1833, at Kensington, N. H. He joined the Association of Regular Baptists in 1850. He preached fifteen years in Portland, Me., in two pastorates; ten in Hampton Falls, in two pastorates; and six in South Hampton. In his early ministry he preached in Kensington, East Kingston, and other towns in Rockingham County, and in Haverhill, Salisbury, and other towns in Essex County, Mass., and for a brief period as an evangelist. His whole service as a minister was thirty-three years.

During the early part of his ministry he did the double work of teaching school and preaching the gospel. He had good natural parts, which, with severe self-discipline, constant study, and exercise of his gifts, made him more than an average scholar and speaker. But more and above all was the unction with which he was favored and the power with which he spoke. He was easy and fluent as a speaker, able and successful as a minister, and as a man he was respected and beloved. We give in this work an engraving taken from a small photograph, and though it is by no means such a likeness of the original as is desired, it will be recognized readily by those who knew him thirty years ago.

He married Elvira L. Small, of Portland, Me., by whom he had six children, and who bore his name till her death, in Lowell, Mass., Oct. 11, 1879. He died in South Hampton, June 26, 1862, and was buried at East Kingston, with the generations who have passed away. He left five sons.

REV. S. EMMONS BROWN, oldest son of Rev. Samuel E. Brown, whose biography we have given, was born in Portland, Me., Feb. 27, 1847. He graduated from Harvard College in 1870, and from Rochester, N. Y., Theological Seminary, in 1873. He then went to Germany, and passed three years at the universities of Leipzig and Halle and in traveling through parts of Europe and the East. He then accepted the chair of New Testament Greek at Rochester, N. Y. The day of his ordination in the Baptist Church, of which he was a member in Exeter, N. H., was fixed for July 17, 1877.

He was at East Kingston, on his way to that service, when struck down by typhoid fever, occasioning his immediate return to his mother's home in Lowell, and his death occurred there Aug. 5, 1877. He was a brilliant scholar and a devoted Christian man, whose memory lives in the hearts of many of this and other lands.

His remains were brought here for interment near his father in the ancestral lot.

Rev. Charles Rufus Brown, the second son of Rev. Samuel E. Brown, was born at East Kingston, Feb. 22, 1849. He entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., in 1865, remaining there and in the naval service till 1875. He graduated from Harvard College in 1877, and from the theological institution at Newton, Mass., in 1879, having passed the last year of his course at the Union Theological Seminary, in New York City. He then spent two years in study in Germany, and after a brief period with his friends, and preaching in various places, he was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry, Dec. 30, 1881, in Franklin Falls, N. H., where he is now pastor of the Baptist Church.

Of the other sons of Rev. Samuel E. Brown,—

WILLIAM EDWIN was born in Portland, Me., Oct. 23, 1853; is married; resides in Concord, N. H., and is in a hardware-store.

FRANK WARREN was born in South Hampton, Jan. 12, 1857, and is in an agricultural warehouse in Boston.

GILMAN ABRAHAM was born in South Hampton, Oct. 31, 1861. He is in the agricultural warehouse with his brother in Boston.

RUFUS BROWN.

Rufus Brown, son of Abraham and Betsey (Ring) Brown, was born in East Kingston, N. H., June 23, 1812. His ancestors were English, several brothers coming from the north of England and settling at the mouth of the Merrimac River, and Henry Brown, in 1639, had a lot of land in Salisbury. He married Abigail ———, had several children, one of whom, Abraham (1st), was born in 1649. He married Elizabeth Shepard in 1674, resided in Salisbury, was a cooper by trade, and died in 1733, aged eighty-four. One of his children, Abraham (2d), born March 21, 1690, settled on what is known as the "Peak," in South Hampton, had a captain's commission, married Hannah Morrill, had three sons and five daughters, purchased a part of the present farm of Rufus Brown, in the town of East Kingston, March 16, 1716, led an active, industrious life, and died on his sixty-eighth birthday. Samuel, born April 7, 1716, settled in East Kingston in early life, built the house where Rufus now lives, was an energetic man of business, owned mill and other property in Brentwood and elsewhere, and died in 1774. He had two sons—Abraham and Moses—and five daughters, some of whom married and settled in this vicinity. Abraham, born Oct. 8, 1745, married Mary Emmons, Dec. 3, 1770, had three sons—Abraham, Samuel, and Abel—and two daughters, and died in 1781, after a short illness, induced by exposure or an assault given by reason of his pronounced religious opinions and earnest labors. His oldest son, Abraham, born Dec.

28, 1773, married Betsey, daughter of Page Ring, Esq. (born in 1774, died May 11, 1852), May 14, 1798, inherited one-third of his father's estate, purchased the remaining two-thirds, and was a quiet, old-fashioned farmer all his days, and died Feb. 28, 1845. He had eight children, all of whom are dead but Abraham R., born April 27, 1810, and Rufus.

The Ring family came early from England. Robert<sup>1</sup> Ring took the "freeman's oath" Aug. 9, 1640; was an active man in Salisbury; had a son Jarvis<sup>2</sup>, who was great-grandfather of Page Ring, born in 1743, and whose line of descent was Jarvis<sup>3</sup>, Jr., Jonathan<sup>4</sup>, Page<sup>5</sup>. Robert died Dec. 3, 1705. Rev. Stephen Bachelor, so prominent in early Hampton history, had one grandchild, Deacon Nathaniel B., who lived in Hampton near the old meeting-house. His son Benjamin married Susannah Page, and settled where Hon. Warren Brown now lives. Benjamin had a "baker's dozen" of children. His daughter Susannah married Ebenezer Webster in 1738; removed to East Kingston in 1740 (or earlier). She was the grandmother of Hon. Daniel Webster and Hon. Ezekiel Webster. Esther, another daughter, married Jonathan Ring, of Salisbury; had one son, Page (named for his grandmother), who was father of Betsey (Ring) Brown. Susannah (Batchelder) Webster and Esther (Batchelder) Ring being sisters, their children, Ebenezer Webster<sup>6</sup> and Page Ring, were cousins; Hon. Daniel Webster and Betsey (Ring) Brown, second cousins; and Capt. Fletcher Webster and Rufus Brown, third cousins.

Rufus Brown had but limited opportunities for education, but these were improved sufficiently to enable him to transact business, and while reared a farmer, when about fourteen, he began to accompany his uncle, Abel Brown, a book publisher of Exeter, in his trips around the country, and assist in his auctions of his works. This gave him a practical business education of the best kind for him, as experience and observation have ever been his best teachers. His brother Abraham was also engaged from his fourteenth year with his uncle. After the death of Abel, which occurred before Rufus was twenty-one, the two brothers purchased the stereotype plates, stock, etc., of the uncle's estate and continued the business, Abraham doing the office duty, and Rufus attending to the traveling and sales. All these years he was on the farm with his father whenever business slackened or need for his help was urgent. After closing the publishing, Rufus started a little dealing in the line of patents, first taking a washing-machine, next a thrashing-machine, both of which he owned, manufactured, sold machines, and also "rights." He continued in this for two years.

Before he was of age he began lumbering, and from that time to the present he has been more or less engaged in that. Having accumulated some fourteen hundred dollars by sticking to business and the old home, after caring for his parents, he conceived the idea of making some money in real estate, and when the city of Lawrence, Mass., was laid out, and when the whole place was a waste field, and the dam furnishing the water-power was only in process of construction, and there were no streets there, he began dealing in lots, buying, selling, building, and renting, and by sound judgment and shrewdness was quite successful. For a time he engaged in the grocery trade, but only for about a year. Still holding to his real estate and his tenements, in 1852 he moved to Concord, N. H., as a contractor in the iron-shops of New Hampshire State prison, under Wardens Dow and Webster. Here he stayed three years, making general machinery, steel springs, axles, etc. Returning then to his ancestral home in East Kingston, he devoted himself to farming and the improvement of his farmland, that had been heretofore waste and unproductive, was brought rapidly into productive meadow, fields were cleared of their encumbering stone, which furnished material for strong walls, and his example in this direction became of benefit to others. He also thoroughly renovated and repaired and almost rebuilt the dwelling occupied by five generations, and made it the pleasant place it now is. Here he has resided ever since, a representative farmer, not ashamed but justly proud of his avocation, and the care of his estate, with his other diversified business, has been all the labor he has cared to do. Of vigorous health and active temperament, he is never idle, labors himself in the field, believes fully that "he who by the plow would thrive, himself must either hold or drive." He early appreciated the advantage of machinery on the farm, brought into use the first mower in the town, and is quick to observe and turn to utility any labor-saving invention. His word is as good as his bond, and he has never failed to pay "one hundred cents on the dollar." His home farm comprises one hundred acres in a high state of cultivation. His business engrosses his attention. When about twenty-two years old he was selectman, and has been highway surveyor; but he leaves to others more aspiring the dignity and honors of official preferment. In the fall of 1857 he and his wife passed a year of travel in Europe. This, with the relaxation afforded by short trips to the seaside, Boston, etc., has been almost the only respite from constant labor during his seventy years of life.

Plain and frank in manners and speech, he is a man of the people, and a typical New England farmer, who has made more than "two blades of grass" grow where only one grew before. In early life a Democrat, he has been a Republican from the first. He married, (1) 1843, Harriet S., daughter of Amos Batchelder, of East Kingston; she died March 15, 1846, aged twenty-nine; (2) March 12, 1851, Ann E., daughter of Watkins Roberts, of Shanballymore House, Shanballymore, County Cork, Ireland, of a family of good repute, dating its occupancy of its land from the Norman conquest; she died Sept. 14, 1875, aged sixty-three; (3) Nov. 12, 1878, Alfa E.,

Charles E. Morrill

daughter of Joseph S. and Betsey A. (Tenney) Floyd. She was born in Centreville, Me., and was for more than twenty years a resident of Boston. Mr. Brown has been very prosperous. He has left his impress in many affairs of life, and the agricultural interests of his native town have gained much by his work, and he to-day stands in the front rank of its wealthy agriculturists, and enjoys the esteem of a large circle of the leading business men of an extended area.

CHARLES E. MORRILL.

Charles E. Morrill is of an honorable line of descent. A description accompanying a coat of arms of the Morrill family, now in possession of J. F. Morrill, of Newburyport, Mass., is, "He beareth Azure, two Griffins rampant, or supporting a Diamond, argent, by the name of Morrill, granted ye Fifteenth year of ye reign of Queen Elizabeth, to Sir Hugh Morrill, of ye County of Devon, first son of Sir Robert Morrill, Inner Temple, London, son of Thomas Morrill, West Riding of England." Abraham Morrill, the emigrant, died at Salisbury, Mass., in 1682. He had lived there thirty-two years and reared a family. He must, therefore, have come from England prior to 1650. His second son, Jacob, also was a resident of Salisbury, and, on authority of W. S. Morrill, of Marlow, N. H., a close and accurate genealogist, we give among his children Ezekiel, Hannah, Thomas, Ruth, Jacob, Jr., Aaron, and Susannah. This Aaron had children,—Elijah (or Abijah, as copied by Mr. Morrill from Salisbury record), Theodate, Aaron, Jr., Theodate (2), Susannah, Henry, Judith, Joannah, and Thomas, the two last probably by a second marriage. Elijah's children were Ezra, Anne, Elijah, Jr., Mary, Robert, and Benjamin. Benjamin Morrill was born in Salisbury, Mass., in 1707. His wife, Abigail —, was born in 1711. He was a man of some consequence, had a Lieutenant's commission, and owned real estate in what is now East Kingston, for a tax of one pound and three shillings was levied against him there in 1757. He had six children,—Hannah, born Aug. 10, 1732; Sarah, Aug. 9, 1738; Benjamin, May 7, 1741; John, Dec. 23, 1743; Samuel, Nov. 23, 1745; and Samuel (2), June 26, 1749. John married Mollie Rogers, March 6, 1766, and settled in East Kingston as a farmer, and was a tanner also. Their children were Ruth, born Sept. 27, 1768 (married a Bachelor), Benjamin, John, born Sept. 13, 1774 (married a Page), Stephen, born Nov. 19, 1766 (married a Martin), Samuel, born Feb. 20, 1779 (married a Nobles), Polly, born March 3, 1781 (married a Currier), and Josiah (married a Hutchins).

Benjamin Morrill, born Oct. 30, 1770, in East Kingston, N. H., was a farmer, and, like his father, a tanner also. He married Sarah Currier, of South Hampton, and had eight children,—Amos (father of Charles E.), Stephen (father of John B.), Benjamin L., George W., Sally (married, 1st, John Swett, of Kingston; 2d, Jeremiah Leavitt, of Gilmanton, N. H.), Betsey (Mrs. Bernard French, of South Hampton, had two children, George and Frel), Emily (married John Lovering, of Kensington; had children, one of whom attained maturity, is married, and now lives in Salisbury, Mass.), and Polly (died young). Benjamin lived, a hale man, to a good old age, and never felt disease until his last illness. He was a spare man, of good height; was a minute-man in the war of 1812, loved his home, and never cared to be away from it. He was a Jeffersonian Democrat, positive in his convictions, and firm in his adherence to them. A successful farmer, he kept adding gradually to his estate. His social nature made him many friends, and his fireside was much sought by young people as a place where they could fully enjoy themselves, and the name he was generally known by was "Uncle Ben." Amos, son of Benjamin, was born in East Kingston in 1796. From very early life he was a great student. He acquired a very good English education, began the study of medicine, but, discontinuing it, became a teacher, and teaching many years, was universally known as "Master Morrill." He was a great mathematician, and especially fond of surveying. His wife he first met as a student in his school in Amesbury, Mass. She was Sarah E., daughter of Enoch Nichols, of that place. After their marriage they settled on the place in East Kingston now the summer residence of his son Charles, which was bought from one Graves. Their children were Mary Ann (Mrs. D. E. Eastman, of Manchester), George N. (a promising youth of the same scholastic tastes as his father, who died when about sixteen), Charles E., Sarah E. (Mrs. Andrew Hoyt, of Newton, N. H.), Laura O. (Mrs. F. J. Philbrick, of East Kingston), and Allan Amos (another child of promising intellect who died young, of typhoid fever).

Mr. Morrill was greatly occupied with public affairs. He was justice for many years, drew many deeds and other legal papers, settled many estates, and was general counselor for the community. He also was busy in surveying, of which he did a great amount during his short life of fifty years. He was a Universalist in religious belief, and a Democrat in politics. He died Sept. 26, 1846. His younger brother, Stephen, born April, 1801, worked with his father as a farmer, also learned the shoemaker's trade in his youth, conducting it quite largely for those days. He was the second man who brought work to the town from Haverhill, and had many apprentices. He married Emily A., daughter of Joshua and Hannah (Webster) Barstow, of Exeter. Before their marriage he and she purchased the place in East Kingston where John B. Morrill now resides, and they lived their lives there. He continued shoe manufacturing until his death, giving out a great deal of work. He also carried on farming, and added considerably, by purchase, to his land. He had four children,—John B., Hannah L. (Mrs. Henry Willey, deceased), Lewis

B. (drowned in the Big Black River, Mississippi, while serving in the great Rebellion as soldier in the Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers), Emma S. (Mrs. Moody K. Wilson, of Pembroke, N. H.). Stephen died July 4, 1855, aged fifty-four. John Barstow Morrill, born June 20, 1828, married Sept. 2, 1857, Emeline A., daughter of Joseph W. and Mary (Bailey) Follett, of East Kingston, and has two children, Charles B. and George F., both in the employ of the Boston and Maine Railroad. John B. lived with his mother, and in the spring of 1857 was appointed station agent of the Boston and Maine Railroad at East Kingston, which position he has held ever since. He is Democratic in politics, was made a Mason in "Star in the East" Lodge, Exeter, N. H.; has been superintendent of the Methodist Sunday-school since 1875, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1876. Charles E. Morrill was born in East Kingston Jan. 11, 1832. He had only a good common-school education. His boyhood was passed on the farm, but at an early age his adaptation for business life was manifest. He had, on the death of his uncle Stephen, in company with John B., continued the shoe manufacturing for about two years, when he went to Manchester to work for his brother-in-law, Eastman, in depot and store. In 1859 he entered the employ of "Stinson, Valentine & Co.," manufacturers of railway and carriage varnishes, as foreman. About 1865, Charles and John engaged in trade at East Kingston as general merchants, under title of "C. E. Morrill & Co." They continued in trade some years, when, selling out to Titcomb Brothers, Charles returned to the employ of Valentine & Co., with which house he has been identified ever since. From foreman he passed to salesman; from that to other and greater trusts, and is at present manager of their Western house. He is also president of the "Lawson Varnish Company;" both of these are located in Chicago. The Western branch of the business was established by him, February, 1879. He married, March 21, 1857, Adeline S., daughter of Ephraim Carter and his wife, Susan Hoyt, of Newton, N. H. Their children are Allan A. (born May 3, 1859), who is connected with his father in his business in Chicago; Susie A. (born Oct. 10, 1862), and Annie S. (born May 15, 1865). In 1871, Mr. Morrill made a trip to California, in the interests of his employers, returning thither the following year also. In 1878, 1880, 1881 he made trips abroad, visiting England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Ireland, Scotland, Russia, Spain, Austria, Belgium, and Holland. He is a Freemason, belonging to the "Star in the East" Lodge, of Exeter, N. H., and a Knight Templar, belonging to the Hugh de Payne Commandery, of Melrose, Mass. He is of quick, energetic temperament, carries through successfully whatever he undertakes, and has a warm social nature which endears him to a large circle of friends. His family spend their summers on the old homestead in East Kingston, which, with a strong attachment for the "old, old home," Mr. Morrill deems one of the finest places on earth, and has beautified, adorned, and improved it to such an extent as to cause him to be considered a "model farmer." He is yet in the prime of life, and, with many years of active business before him, is a fair type of the impetuous, rushing, successful American of the nineteenth century.

Geographical—Topographical—Petition for a Parish—Petition of the Inhabitants of Epping for Men to protect them, 1747—Petition in reference to Highway—Rating the Wild Land—Parish Taxes, 1748—Changing the Highway—War of the Revolution—The Lottery Bridge—Petition for the Commission of William Plummer as Justice of the Peace—Another similar Petition—Petition for the Commission of David Lawrence as Justice of the Peace—Polls of 1783—Incorporation of Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Ear-Marks—War of the Revolution—Votes of the Town—Epping in 1804—Industrial Pursuits—Masonic, etc.—List of Representatives from 1775-1882—Military Record—Soldiers of the War of the Rebellion.

The town of Epping lies in the northeastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Nottingham and Lee; on the east by New Market, South New Market, and Exeter; on the south by Brentwood and Fremont; and on the west by Raymond and Nottingham.

The surface of the town is rolling and the soil generally fertile. Epping originally formed a portion of Exeter, and the first settlements were among the earliest in the State.

Petition for Parish.—In 1741 the population and taxable property had increased to such an extent that the settlement considered itself of sufficient importance for incorporation into a separate parish, and on the 15th of January, 1741, the following petition for a parish was presented to the General Court:

To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq Governor & Commander in Chief in & over His Majesty's Province of New Hampshire in New England. The Hon<sup>ble</sup> His Majesty's Council & House of Representatives in General Court Convened.

The Humble Petition of Sundry Inhabitants of the North Westerly Part of the Town of Exeter in said Province Shews.

That your Petitioners being Settled in the aforesaid part the said Town Labour under Great Difficulties in attending the Public Worship of God by Reason of the Distance & badness of the Way to the Meeting House Most of em living More than seven miles from it, & some above nine, so that many Persons in their Families can attend the Public Worship but seldom.

<sup>1</sup> The editor acknowledges his indebtedness to ex-Governor Benjamin F. Prescott for much valuable assistance, which has greatly lessened his labors in the preparation of the history of Epping.

That being most of them new Settlers (tho' upon good land) are not able to maintain a Minister among themselves while they are Subjected to & actually pay their proportion to the maintenance of the Gospel & other Charges in the Town.

That a considerable Parish might be set off from the said Town by the following Metes & Bounds v'z. Beginning at the North West Corner of Exeter & from thence running South 29 Deg. W. partly by Nottingham and partly by Chester line four miles and an half & from thence to extend carrying that breadth of four miles and an half East & by South till it comes to the head line of New Market Parish being bounded Northly partly by Nottingham & partly by Dover Line and Easterly partly by New Market & partly by Exeter the said four miles & an half being something Broader than New Market & so extending a little beyond it upon Exeter which would Comprehend your Petitioners Estates & yet leave a Large and able Parish at the Town below 'em (which would hardly miss 'em) And tho' they are but few & Poor in Comparison of the rest of the Town yet they would Gladly bear the charge of Supporting the Gospel among themselves were they Exonerated from that & other Town Charges & duties in the other part of the Town—But as the aforesaid Bounds Comprehends a Tract of very Good Land they have reason to think from that as well as by experience that they shall Increase in number every year & Especially when accommodated better with respect to the Public Worship.

That a Parish Incorporated by the aforesaid Boundaries with the usual Privileges & Immunities would be a Considerable means of Cultivating & Improving a large Tract of Land which is now unsubdnd, inasmuch as People will be thereby Encouraged to go out & Settle there, & the Public in General as well as the said Town in Particular Benefited thereby.

Wherefore your Petitioners Pray This Hon<sup>ble</sup> Court would Please to take the Premises under Consideration and Grant that they may be Incorporated into a Parish with the usual Parish powers & Privileges by the Metes and bounds aforesaid & Exonerated from paying to the Support of the Minister of the Town & other Town charges & duties that so they may support & Maintain the Gospel a school &c. among themselves with more conveniency for themselves & Families—Or in such other manner as this Hon<sup>ble</sup> Court in their Great Wisdom & Goodness shall think proper & your Petitioners as in Duty Bound Shall Ever pray &c.

To His Excellency Benjamin Wentworth Esq<sup>r</sup> Governour and Commander in Chief in and over his Majesties Province of New Hampshire and the Hon<sup>ble</sup> His Majesties Council and House of Representatives for said Province in General Assembly Convened Humbly Sheweth the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Epping in s<sup>d</sup> Province that your Petitioners are Sensible of the weak and Defenceless State of the Town of Nottingham which Lies on our Border— That the Inhabitants there Seem very much Discouraged In-somuch that Some are Removed and others are about Removing out of Town. That if that Settlement should Break up this Parish with Part of New Market and Durham will become Frontiers which we of ourselves Shall not we fear be able to Defend and the Enemy who will be much Encouraged will have near access to the very Bowells of the Province which may Possibly have very Fatal Consequences.

We Do therefore by these Presents Humbly Request your Excellency and Honours to take the Premises with other Reasons that may occur into your wise Consideration and if it appear Proper make Provision for and send to said Town of Nottingham to be Kept there for their Safeguard and Defence—Such a number of Men as may be needful for that Purpose and as that Town is very much Exposed we Humbly Presume that a much Larger number will be necessary for that End than has been allowed them in years Past, and as the Common Road between Red Oak Hill so called and Nottingham is very Dangerous to Pass we Would Request that a Small Scout of Men May be sent to the named Gareson on Pantuckaway road to scout from thence to Sanborns Garrison when not wanted for that to Guard the People at s<sup>d</sup> Garrisons— May it Pleas Your Excellency and Honours it appears to us that our Safety in a Great Measure Depends upon the Safety of Nottingham which we Hope you will Effectually Provide for and we shall Esteem it as an Instance of your Paternal Care not only of Nottingham but of your Petitioners also who as in Duty Bound shall Ever Pray &c.

The Petition of John Dudley of Epping in Said Province Yeoman Humbly Sheweth That the Committee appointed to Lay out Lands in this Parish where they thought Proper Left Land for High Ways but as they were not then well Acquainted with the Suitableness or how they would Accommodate the Settlers there being then no Settlements made Some of them are found by Experience to be very Inconvenient Particularly one which was so ordered as to Separate a Strip of Land Ten Rods wide and Half a Mile Long of the Southerly part of my Land from the Rest which the Select Men without Due Consideration Did afterwards Return by the Persuasion of Some others but Since the Settlements in the Northerly Part of the Parish are Increasing and no way to them it Seems to appear to all to be much more Convenient and there is much Better Ground for a way on the North Side of my Land Next to Cap<sup>t</sup> Israel Gillmans Land and this the Parish being fully made Sensible of Did at a Legal Meeting by a vote manifest their Desire that the Same might be Altered as aforesaid which as it would be for my Advantage as well as for the Publick Good has Endued me in this Manner Humbly to Petition your Excellency and Honors that by your Authority the aforesaid way may be Stop<sup>d</sup> or Shut up, and that a highway in Lieu of it may be Laid Through my Land Next to Cap<sup>t</sup> Gillmans as aforesaid and your Petitioner as in Duty Bound Shall Ever Pray &c.

Seth Fogg	) Selectmen of Epping.
David Lawrence
Wm Plumer

Incorporation.—The town of Epping was incorporated Feb. 12, 1741.

The first town-meeting was held in 1741, at the house of James Norris, when the following officers were chosen: Moderator, Jacob Smith; Clerk, Samuel Smith; Constable, Samuel Norris; Selectmen, Jacob Smith, Samuel Elkins, and Nathan Sanborn; Gaugers, James Norris and Jonathan Rundlet; Tithingman, Ebenezer Mardin; Surveyors of Highways, Richard Sanborn and David Lawrence; Haywards, Jacob Sanborn and Joel Judkin.

There were also various committees appointed beside the above.

First Rate List.—The following is the first parish rate list:

Ebenezer Marden	4	8	0
Thomas Rawlings	1	14	6
John Elkins	2	8	1
Robert Bunker	0	5	9
David Hains	0	3	10
Olney Harvey	0	9	7

Ezekiel Gillman's mill	0	3	3
Calph Gillman's mill	0	7	6
Moses Swart's mill	0	15	0

Ear-Marks.—The following are specimens of the ear-marks used in the early days to distinguish sheep and cattle: John Page's mark was a crop "off the right ear and half-crop off the under side of the left ear." Ebenezer Mornson's mark was a crop off the left ear and a "hapney on the upper side of the right ear," while Jonathan Elliot's mark was a half-crop in the under side of the right ear and a slit in the end of the left.

Selectmen in 1776.—The following were selectmen in 1776: Abraham Perkins, Seth Fogg, and Enoch Coffin.

In 1774 one hundred and forty-four people were taxed for the support of the gospel.

Revolutionary War.—At the breaking out of hostilities in 1775 Epping was the sixth or seventh town in population in New Hampshire. A large number of her citizens entered the service, but it is impossible to give a correct list, owing to the imperfectness of the records. Such names, however, as have appeared in the searches for information in reference to this town are here given. In an account of the census of the town taken in October, 1775, the enumerators then report "sixty-one in the war." It can safely be said that the whole number during the war was much larger. The men from this town were in all the conspicuous battles of the Revolution, and performed gallant service in securing the independence of the country: Edmund Chapman, John Shaw, Samuel Veazey, Simon Dearborn, Joseph Palmer, John Morden Johnson, Robert Clark, Josiah Towle, Dudley Gilman, Joseph Chapman, William Kelley, James Waymouth, Joseph Bean, Nathaniel Pearsons, John Clark, Joseph French, Simeon Haines, Ebenezer Currier, Gordon Freeze, David Page, Levi Morrill, Abner Clough, Jabez French, James Sanborn, John Wadley, Abraham Brown, Francis Chambers, Jonathan Kiley, William Brown, Nathaniel French, David Fullonton, William Page, Samuel Prescott, Simon Winslow, John Stearns, William Mellen, John Tucker, Jonathan Perkins, James Norris, Jonathan Sanborn, William Haines, Jeremiah Robinson, Ebenezer Hoeg, Benjamin Perkins.

At the town-meeting held in November, 1774, it was voted "that the parish of Epping would Give and Bestow to the poor people in Boston thirty pounds lawful money," and Nehemiah Wheeler was appointed a committee to carry said donation to Boston and take receipts for the same.

Jan. 2, 1775, David Lawrence, Abraham Perkins, Enoch Coffin, Capt. James Norris, and Lieut. Seth Fogg were appointed deputies to attend a congress held at Exeter, to join the other deputies in this province that shall then be convened to choose delegates to the Continental Congress to be held in Philadelphia.

At the same meeting it was also voted that the deputies "Be a Committee to Receive a Quantity of powder from the Committee at Exeter, and Give their Receipt for it in Behalf of the Parish."

Capt. Stephen Clarke, Capt. Joseph Prescott, Capt. Joseph Chandler, Ensign Daniel Gourding, Cornet Theophilus Stevens, Dr. Ebenezer Pike, Simon Dearborn, Lieut. Daniel Barber, Ensign Chase Osgood, and Qr.-mr. Nathan G. Prescott, with the five deputies mentioned above, were appointed a committee of inspection and correspondence.

At a meeting held March 11, 1776, it was voted that "Those men that went on Thursday or Friday to the Lexington Fight should have Three Shillings per Day for Four Days."

Also voted "that those men that went to work upon the Foarts upon Piscataque River should be paid two shillings per day."

June 9, 1777, the following committee was chosen to "make up the Proportion of Men Sent for to Epping To Join the Continental Army, viz.: Maj. Stephen Clark, Capt. Daniel Gordon, Capt. Seth Fogg."

In the following year another committee for the same purpose was formed, consisting of Capt. Daniel Gordon, Lieut. Chase Osgood, and Cornet Abraham Perkins.

In 1779 a committee was chosen to "Receive & Adjust the amo<sup>ts</sup> as services that each inhabitante of said Epping hath Done in Caring on the present warr with Great Britain." This committee consisted of Josiah Norris, Seth Fogg, Enoch Coffin, Lieut. Simon Dearborn, and Daniel Folsom.

The "American Gazetteer," published in Boston in 1804, contains the following concerning Epping:
"Epping, a post town in Rockingham Co., N. Hampshire, taken from the N. W. part of Exeter, and incorporated in 1741. It contains 1121 inhabitants, 6 miles N. W. from Exeter, and 23 W. of Portsmouth." It had the distinction of being a "post town." This was a common phrase in these old gazetteers, and indicated that the privilege of a post-office was enjoyed by the citizens, which was not the case with those of every town.
In the life of the late Governor and United States

Senator William Plumer, of this town, by his son, the late Hon. William Plumer, Jr., we find the following paragraph in a letter to Judge Jeremiah Smith, giving an account of his (Mr. Plumer's) election as Speaker of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, June 11, 1797: "The mail going from this place [Concord] but once a week is a sufficient excuse for my not writing you sooner." In a foot-note by the author we find the following statement: "My father's letters were usually ten or twelve days in reaching him from Philadelphia. There was then no Post Office in Epping, and he sent nine miles to Exeter for his letters and papers, which at a later period were brought to him by a post rider once a week."

Epping now has four post-offices within its limits. Besides the one at the Centre, there is one at each of the localities designated by their names respectively as East, West, and North Epping.

The "Gazetteer" above referred to gives Epping, from the census of 1800, 1121 inhabitants. But if we examine the census reports farther back we shall find there had been a considerable loss. In 1767, thirty years before the date of Governor Plumer's letter above referred to, the town had 1410 people in it, and six years later, 1773, there were 1648, making it the fourth town in population in Rockingham County,—Exeter then 1741, Londonderry, 2399, and Portsmouth, 4466. There was a loss from this time till the census of 1800, after which there was a gain during each decade till 1850, when we had a population of 1663, which was the largest we have ever had. In 1870 we receded again to 1279, a loss in two decades of 398. This embraces the war period, and was a time of general decrease in farming towns, and rapid growth in manufacturing centres. Present population (census of 1880) is 1536, and shows a gain during the last ten years, which is owing to the introduction of the shoe manufacturing business, and increased railroad facilities by the construction of the Nashua and Rochester line. And yet the town has less population than at a period some time previous to the date of Governor Plumer's letter, when there was no post-office nearer than Exeter, with a mail once a week.

Shoe Manufacturers.—Among the early manufacturers of shoes in this town were Benjamin M. Smith and Dudley Norris. Their operations were small as compared with subsequent establishments. These manufacturers carried on the business but a short time. Benjamin M. Smith had associated with him his sons Rufus H. and Aaron, who during their lives were operators in shoes, but not always in this town. In 1870, Col. B. W. Hoyt, a native of Epping, began to manufacture shoes in limited numbers, but finally enlarged his business till he manufactured more than seven thousand cases annually at the time his establishment was burned in the summer of 1880. In the fall of 1882 a new company with a large capital stock was organized through the influence of Col.

Hoyt, a new building was erected, and large operations will be carried on in the manufacture of shoes. Bartlett Brothers & Co. in 1881 erected a large and commodious building, and have been manufacturing shoes since that time. Rufus H. Smith & Co., also James C. Corning & Son, have also manufactured many shoes, while giving employment to many hundreds of men, women, and children, and adding largely to the business interests and prosperity of the town.

Brick Business.—The manufacture of brick is now an important enterprise, and has been since 1872. There are now the following who are engaged in the business: Levi Thompson, who owns and operates the old yard, almost within the village limits, where brick have been made for more than sixty years, but in small quantities to supply local demand. Mr. Thompson now manufactures nearly one million a year. George S. Rundlett has an extensive yard near by in the same clay-bank, and manufactures nearly two and one-half millions annually, and William R. Bunker and Robert Brown, also near the village, in three separate yards, manufacture nearly two millions annually. The brick are of superior quality. It is estimated that twenty-five hundred cords of wood are consumed here annually in burning the kilns, and employment is given to many men.

Industrial Pursuits.—The chief occupation of the inhabitants is agriculture, and the growing of apples forms an important industry.

Manufacturing is also carried on somewhat extensively, that of shoes being the largest interest.

The hosiery-mill of F. H. Carpenter, at West Epping, is also a leading interest in the town. This was originally a woolen-mill.

The box-factory owned by Cyrus F. Dow, at West Epping, is also a large concern.

Other manufactures are as follows: woolen-mill, Charles H. Norris; knitting-mill, E. H. Pearson; box-factory, planing and saw-mills, Charles A. and Henry W. Miles; grist-mill, Charles H. Miles.

Sullivan Lodge, No. 19, F. and A. M.—Columbian Lodge, No. 2, of which this lodge is the successor, was instituted in Lee, probably not far from 1800. It went down, and in 1807 Sullivan Lodge was instituted at Deerfield, with Joseph Mills, Michael McClary, Seth Fogg, John Butler, James H. McClary, Daniel Gilley, Benjamin Moody, William Gordon, Benjamin Butler, John T. Coffin, Samuel Locke, and Simon A. Heath as members. The lodge was subsequently removed to Lee, and in 1869 to Epping. It is now in a prosperous condition, with a membership of seventy-nine.

The following is a list of the Past Masters: Samuel Scales, Israel Bartlett, Henry F. Hopkins, Jonathan Bartlett, George W. Tilton, Hosea B. Burnham, James H. Bartlett, Charles W. Sanborn, and Benjamin W. Hoyt.

The present officers of the lodge are William H.

Gliden, M.; Fred P. Knox, S. W.; Nathaniel G. Plumer, J. W.; W. N. Dow, Treas.; George G. Prescott, Sec.; A. L. True, S. D.; Daniel W. Cate, J. D.; Albert G. Barber, Chaplain; Charles H. Edgerley, Tyler.

The Knights of Honor also have a lodge in this town.

CHAPTER XXXI.

EPPING.—(Continued.)

ECCLIASTICAL.

The Congregational Church—The Methodist Episcopal Church—The Hedding Camp-Meeting Association.

Congregational Church.<sup>1</sup>—When Epping, originally a part of Exeter, was incorporated, Feb. 12, 1741, the parish and the town were virtually the same, and all legal business respecting the institutions of religion was transacted in regular town-meetings. According to the town records, vol. i., among the votes passed at the first town-meeting was one whereby Jonathan Norris and others "were chosen to be a committee to agree with a minister or ministers for the ensuing year." Votes are also on record "respecting the erection of a meeting-house."

On the 31 of September, 1744, it was voted that "Ensign Jonathan Rundlett" and others "be a committee to agree with a minister to preach with us." Said Rundlett was great-grandfather of our present church treasurer, Alfred T. Rundlett. Others are with us to-day whose ancestors were foremost in establishing and maintaining the institutions of the gospel in the early history of the town.

The town voted, March 11, 1745, that David Lawrence and others "should be a committee to agree with a minister."

Mr. Lawrence was grandfather of Hon. David L. Morrill, a native of this town, who was once pastor of the Congregational Church in Goffstown, afterwards U. S. senator, and in the years 1824-26 Governor of the State of New Hampshire.

Similar votes were passed in succeeding years, showing that the early inhabitants of this town viewed the preaching of the word as indispensable.

The following "Copy of an Epping paper," sent the writer by the "Depy Secy State, as requested by ex-Gov. B. F. Prescott," is equally expressive of the same interesting point:

"To His Excellency Beining Wentworth Esq<sup>r</sup> Captain General and Commander in Chief in and over His Majesties Province of New Hampshire and the Hon<sup>ble</sup> His Majesties Council and House of Representatives for s<sup>d</sup> Province the Humble Petition of the Free Holders and inhabitants of the parish of Epping in said Province Humbly Sheweth

That your Petitioners Having with Great Labour and Expense Surmounted many Difficulties that Have Attended our first Settlement in this Place, are yet very Likely to be much Burdened by Charges Necessarily Coming on the Parish in order to the Settlement and Support of a Minister of the Gospel Buying Land for a Parsonage Building a Parsonage House and a House for the Publick Worship of God all which we apprehend very Necessary to be Done but our own Inability together with some other Difficulties have Caused these things (Necessary and Desirable as they are) to be yet unaccomplished. That there is Scarce one Fifth Part of the Land in the Parish Improved the owners of many Large tracts Living out of the Parish who are not Obligated by any Law in Force to bear any part of the Public Charges So that the Improvers and Settlers alone have Hitherto been obliged to bear not only the Burden of Taxes but to Clear and Repair the Highways and to Maintain Several very Chargable Bridges and all this under the Troubles and Hardships of the War. That the value of the Non-Residents Lands is much Increased by the Settlements which we are making amongst them in almost all Parts of the Parish. And that the Building a Meeting House and Settlement of a Minister being Designed for the Good of the Whole Parish it is Likely that many of those owners of Lands Here who are not at Present Inhabitants may be Equal Sharers with us in the Benefits accruing therefrom.

"We do therefore Humbly Petition your Excellency and Honors to take the Premises into your Consideration and if it shall appear Just and Reasonable by a Law to Impower the Select Men of the Parish Afores<sup>d</sup> to Rate all the Owners of Lands in Said Parish who are not Inhabitants in it or to Charge their Said Lands in Such Proportion and for So Long a time as to your Excellency and Honours Shall Seem Proper for the Ends aforesaid and your Petitioners Shall as in Duty bound Ever Pray ac:

"Epping March ye 30th 1747"

Signed by "Jacob Freeze Joseph Edgerly Jonathan folsom Daniel Ladd Israel Blake Jonathan Rundlett Jeremiah Prescut Thomas Burley" and thirty-five others.

"In H. of Rep. May 21st 1747 Voted—That in answer to the preceding petition all y<sup>e</sup> Lands in said Epping be subjected by an act to a Tax of two pennys a acre p<sup>l</sup> annum for four years next ensuing for & towards y<sup>e</sup> Building a Meeting House & Settling a minister & that ye Inhabitants of s<sup>d</sup> Epping make it appear by an account to be rendered annually to y<sup>e</sup> Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly that y<sup>e</sup> money has been apply<sup>d</sup> for y<sup>e</sup> uses aforesaid on pain of refunding y<sup>e</sup> same.

D. Pierce Clk<sup>r</sup>"

Our regular church records commence as follows:

"Deem<sup>y</sup> 7th 1747

"The Rev. Robert Cutler was ordained to be pastor of the chh of Christ in Epping —and the first pastor—"

The church is supposed to have been organized about this time. The next record is:

"The first Church meeting—"

"May ye 6th 1748. The Chh met according to desire to choose a deacon or Deacons and to consult other affairs that might be thot : necessary."

"After serious and earnest prayer to God for direction, Jacob Freese was chosen sole Deacon."<sup>1</sup>

Agreeably with the advice of a council, Dec. 9, 1755, Mr. Cutler asked for "a dismission from his people," which was granted Dec. 23, 1755, after a pastorate of eight years.

Rev. Mr. Cutler was a native of Cambridge, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard College in the class of 1741. He was settled over the church in Greenwich, Mass., Feb. 16, 1760, where he died Feb. 24, 1786, aged about sixty-eight years.<sup>2</sup>

After the dismissal of Mr. Cutler the ordinances of the gospel were administered by several ministers for more than two years. Thirty-six were baptized.

Pastorate of Rev. Josiah Stearns, thirty years and four months. A paper was drawn up, May 18, 1757, addressed to Mr. Josiah Stearns, of Billerica, Mass., and signed by "freholders and inhabitants of the parish of Epping, with the members of the church," in all one hundred and sixty-six men, urging the importance of his becoming their minister, and assuring him that they would vote him an "honorable support," and "do anything" for his "comfort and support during his ministry." As the result, Mr. Stearns "was ordained pastor of the church March 8, 1758."

The people were true to their engagement, and after his death, which occurred when he was in the fifty-seventh year of his age, after a pastorate of thirty years and four months, July 25, 1788, "the parish of Epping generously assumed all funeral charges, and voted to continue his salary to his widow for the eight remaining months of the year." (See town records.) During his ministry ten hundred and sixty were baptized, two hundred and fifty-nine owned the covenant, and eighty-six joined in full.

During the four and a half years between the death of the last pastor and the settlement of another the pulpit was supplied by thirteen candidates. Pastorate of Rev. Peter Holt, twenty-eight years and two months, Rev. Peter Holt, born in Andover, Mass., June 12, 1763, and graduated at Harvard College, 1790, was ordained and installed pastor of this church Feb. 27, 1793. In 1803 the parish of Epping erected the most commodious and finely-finished meeting-house which has ever adorned this town.

Col. Seth Fogg, who died Nov. 20, 1806, left a bequest of one hundred dollars to the selectmen of this town, the interest of which he evidently intended to be used annually towards the support of the ministry of this church.

<sup>1</sup> Other business was transacted, among which was the adoption of a covenant, and, according to the custom of those days, a half-way covenant, being for the accommodation of persons who wished to be baptized and have their children baptized, though they were not ready to be received into full fellowship.

During Mr. Holt's ministry the laws of New Hampshire were so altered as to leave it optional with each citizen to contribute towards the support of public worship or not. The old "parish of Epping" ceased and the "Congregational Society" took its place. Other denominations offered ministerial services for less pay, while on the part of very many there was a growing disregard of all religious observances. As a natural consequence the attendants and supporters of public worship here decreased. Under these discouragements Mr. Holt resolved to leave this field of labor. At his urgent request his remaining people, though ardently attached to him, united with him in calling a council, which resulted in his dismission April 25, 1821. By him eighty-nine were baptized and sixty-four received into the church. After leaving Epping, Mr. Holt preached in several places acceptably and beneficially. He died in Greenfield, March 25, 1851, aged eighty-seven years and nine months.

Mr. Holt was of noble appearance. He was a good and honorable man and an able evangelical preacher, highly esteemed at home and abroad.

Not long ago an old letter came to light addressed to Deacon William Stearns by Hon. William Plumer, Sr., when in Washington as a member of Congress, in which he had occasion to speak of Mr. Holt as a man, and he did it in terms of high regard. It was interesting in showing how Mr. Holt was viewed by that class of minds.

After Mr. Holt left, the people were much heartened. No move being made to employ a preacher, Deacon Stearns gave notice that he would go to the meeting-house and read a sermon. He pursued the usual order of worship. At his request neighboring pastors came and administered the Lord's Supper. Journeying ministers occasionally spent the Sabbath with said deacon and preached. At length he wrote to the New Hampshire Missionary Society, and they sent a minister for several weeks. Then the people raised some money and employed one minister after another. Seven were baptized and eleven received into the church.

To Joseph I. Foot, a recent graduate of Andover Seminary, the church and society extended a call to become their pastor, Nov. 25, 1825; but he "did not think the support sufficient, and declined." Nine years after he was elected to the presidency of Washington College, East Tennessee. After his sudden death, by being thrown from a horse, the trustees of that institution wrote of "Rev. Joseph I. Foot, D.D., as a man of superior talents and extensive and various learning, a most able divine, accomplished writer, and lovely companion."

The selection of such a man for a minister shows the capability of this people to appreciate great worth, while it also exposes a very common evil, a disposition in congregations to seek more in a minister than they ought to expect to realize.

Rev. Forest Jeffers' pastorate, five years. Mr. Jeffers was born in Wells, Me., Aug. 4, 1794, educated at Bangor Theological Seminary, and ordained and installed pastor of this church Oct. 25, 1826. When settled, the contract between him and the society "ran for five years," at the close of which time he was regularly dismissed. He is spoken of as having "enjoyed the affection of his associated brethren and the confidence of our churches and congregations as a good and acceptable minister of Jesus Christ." He left a good record here, had a successful pastorate of some years in Middleton, Mass., and at length went to Boston as a city missionary, where he died June 20, 1873, aged seventy-eight years, ten months, respected and beloved by his numerous friends. During Mr. Jeffers' ministry here thirteen were baptized and thirteen received into the church.

Some time after Mr. Jeffers left, Rev. Samuel Utley was employed as stated supply; after him Rev. John Le Bosquet in like manner. Three were baptized and eight received into the church.

In the summer of 1842 the former meeting-house was abandoned and a new one was built in the most compact part of the town.

Rev. Calvin Chapman, born in Bethel, Me., Nov. 8, 1814, graduated at Bowdoin College 1839, Andover Theological Seminary 1842, was ordained and installed pastor of this church Dec. 8, 1842. He was regularly dismissed April 10, 1845. He was said to be "able and faithful." During Mr. Chapman's ministry five were baptized and nineteen were received into the church.

After the dismissal of Mr. Chapman the pulpit was supplied by Rev. Enoch Corser, a sound and able preacher. During his ministry, in 1846, Capt. Joseph Blake, not a member of the church, but of the society, died, leaving by will to the society about one and three-quarters acres of valuable mowing land, the income of which is to be annually appropriated towards the support of preaching in this church. The pulpit was also supplied a short time by a grandson of the second pastor, now Eben S. Stearns, S.T.D., chancellor of the University of Nashville and president of the State Normal College. Two were received into the church.

Rev. Lyman White's ministry, five years and six months. Mr. White was a native of Roxbury, a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1846, of Andover Seminary, 1849. He was employed here as stated supply Sept. 9, 1849; was soon ordained as an evangelist, and Jan. 4, 1854, was installed pastor of this church. He was regularly dismissed May 2, 1855. By those who sat under his preaching here he is spoken of as able and interesting in his pulpit performances. Both the congregation and Sabbath-school increased in numbers under his ministrations. Seven were baptized and nineteen received into the church.

Though the last ministry was prosperous, at its close the people were not ready for immediate, united, efficient action. They had some preaching, however, and one child was baptized.

The ministry of Rev. Josiah H. Stearns, from June 16, 1857. The present minister, born in Epping, Oct. 1, 1812, a son of a former deacon of this church and grandson of a former pastor, became a member of said church Sept. 3, 1830. He graduated at Dartmouth College 1840, Andover Theological Seminary 1843. Being under engagement with the Congregational Church in Demysville, Me., he went immediately to labor with them, and was ordained and installed pastor Nov. 6, 1844. He was regularly dismissed, by advice of council, that he might labor with this church, and arrived here June 16, 1857. Having preached to his former people on the previous Sabbath, he preached to this people on the next following.

Brother Dudley Norris died March 1, 1860, leaving to this church five hundred and twenty-five dollars, the income of which is to be appropriated to the support of preaching.

One thousand dollars, raised by subscription, was paid for a pipe-organ, which was built here for the church, and ready for use Aug. 21, 1866.

Aug. 21, 1865, this church received from Brother Isaac B. Morrill, deceased, a bequest of five shares in the Boston and Maine Railroad Company, the income of which is to be appropriated to the support of preaching. Sept. 1, 1867, a beautiful church service was received as a present from Deacon Jacob E. Prescott.

For forty-six years preceding 1871 this church had received aid from the New Hampshire Missionary Society in supporting the ministrations of the word. At said date we assumed the responsibility of self-support, and have maintained it ever since.

The church edifice was thought to be unfavorably located, and during the summer and fall of 1875 an eligible site was purchased by the society, the house was moved upon it, enlarged, and greatly improved at a cost of $6717.63. This sum covers improvements on the surroundings of the house, and some finished work done soon after.

By the efforts of our own people, in which our ladies have acted a noble part, aided by the generosity of a few family friends, among whom stand prominently Mr. D. B. Fitts and family, of Newport, R. I., the premises are held free of debt.

Brother Rufus Smith died Jan. 8, 1882, leaving to the society a bequest of three hundred dollars.

For the spiritual improvement of Christians, and to win others to Christ, we depend mostly on the usual means of grace. Our Sabbath services, preaching, Sabbath-school, superintended by the minister, and social meetings are very regularly held; so are week-day meetings, both monthly and weekly. But help from abroad has at times been beneficial. The Young Men's Christian Association have repeatedly visited us and left a blessing. So have other Christian workers. It was specially so in the union effort and revival of 1873. During this period sixty-three have been baptized, and one hundred and two received into the church.

The good accomplished by this church has not been confined to operations at home. Important positions as preachers, professors in colleges, and educators in other institutions of learning have been occupied by children of members of this church, while some have gone forth to engage in other callings, we trust to exert an influence for good morals and religion. We have a record of what we have publicly contributed during the last fifteen years and seven months for missionary and other religious operations to give the gospel to needy parts of the world. The amount is $2559.27. From this we can judge what had been sent out during previous years. The mites of small churches, if regularly contributed, aggregate more than many would anticipate.

The Methodist Episcopal Church.<sup>1</sup>—The Congregational Church was the only ecclesiastical organization in the town (if we may except a Society of Friends) till the introduction of Methodism, which event came to pass near the beginning of the present century.

As nearly as can now be learned, the first sermon preached here by a Methodist minister was by Rev. Epaphras Kibby in 1799. He was sent by Rev. George Pickering, presiding elder, to preach to a vacant Congregational Church in Kingston, as was sometimes done in those days, and making frequent evangelizing tours into the neighboring towns, he came to Epping and was invited by Rev. Mr. Holt, the Congregational pastor, to preach in his church, which he did, greatly to the satisfaction of the people. Mr. Holt was not aware at the time that Mr. Kibby was a Methodist, and when he learned that he was of the sect "everywhere spoken against" he very naturally refused him admission to his pulpit on his subsequent occasional visits to the town.

We should not be too severe on these old Puritan pastors for their frequent refusals to countenance these early itinerants. They felt that they were constitutional guardians of the flocks, and they were honest in their suspicions and prejudices towards these strangers, who came, as they thought, in a disorderly and irregular way, and brought doctrines they had been trained to regard as dangerous heresies, and proclaimed them with a zeal which seemed to them the fruit of ignorance and fanaticism. Nothing but the good sense and true piety of these early pioneers could have enabled them to finally win their way among the people, and even to the respect and fellowship of these honest but mistaken pastors, as they did after no very long time.

When Mr. Kibby was denied the use of the regular pulpit, he was invited by the late Capt. Jonathan Fogg to hold his services in his hospitable home, near the centre of the town. This Mr. Fogg was a prominent citizen, and a brother of the late venerable Rev. Caleb Fogg, of the Maine Conference, who is well remembered by the writer of this sketch, who in his boyhood often saw him and heard much of him as a strong but somewhat eccentric man.

Mr. Kibby appears to have been a young man, and is represented as a "traveling preacher on trial." He was a man of marked abilities as a preacher, and was afterwards distinguished as a leading minister in New England Methodism.

During the years 1800, 1801, 1802 there was no regular Methodist preaching in this town, but occasional services by Mr. Kibby, Daniel Webb, and probably some others. In 1803, William Gookins' name is mentioned in connection with Epping, and he probably also preached in Hawke, now Danville, and Poplin, now Fremont, and some other towns. Of this man we have no further information.

Rev. George Pickering preached, mostly in the house of Capt. Fogg, in 1804.

The interest in the Methodist meetings continued and increased, and it was felt that some permanent place of worship was needed, but the friends of the cause were few and not rich in this world's goods. Capt. Fogg was moved to build a house of worship for the Methodists, and proceeded to construct a small chapel, the same building which has been enlarged, but now stands in a dilapidated condition, and will soon become a complete ruin. This property was so encumbered by conditions as to its continued occupancy as a place of worship that it ceased to be at the disposal of the society, when it was given up for our present house of worship. Hence the church is not responsible for its present unsightly aspect. It was about this time, 1804 or 1805, according to the best light we can get as to the date, that the first "class" was formed, consisting of some four or five persons, whose names unfortunately are not known to the present generation. These few brave men and women and honored pioneers of our church in this town "budded better than they knew," for though this has never been a strong or popular organization, yet it has during the last eighty years maintained its position as a centre of Christian influence in this community, and has been the means of incalculable good to many souls and to the general interests of the town. We wish we could commemorate them by perpetuating their names, but, though not recorded here, are they not written in heaven?

At this time there were but 113,134 members in our whole church, and the number of preachers was but 400. In 1797, seven years before the class was formed, the statistics of members were given by States, as the connection was not then divided into Annual Conference.<sup>2</sup> The province of Maine had 616,

Massachusetts had 905, and New Hampshire had but 92 members. Francis Asbury and Richard Whatcoat were the only bishops. Epping at this time contained a population of 1121, only about 400 less than at the present time. There were but five larger towns in Rockingham County.

The records of our society, which no doubt were meagre enough in those earlier days, have unfortunately been lost, and we have no written evidence of what transpired up to 1846. We can, therefore, give in this sketch only such items relating to this period as we have been able to glean from Stevens' "Memorials of Methodism," and such minutes of the Conference as we have had access to, and the uncertain recollections of some of the oldest of our people now living. Epping was no doubt connected with neighboring towns in those days, forming part of a circuit, as was the custom of the time. In 1805 and 1806, Nathan Fox was the preacher on a circuit embracing Epping, Poplin (now Fremont), and Sandown. Mr. Fox was followed in 1806 and 1807 by Rev. Henry Martin. In 1808, Rev. Wm. Stevens was the "preacher in charge," but Revs. Alfred Metcalf and Thomas Asbury were associated with him on the circuit. In 1809 and 1810, Revs. Asa Kent and Daniel (or Edward) Hyde and Daniel Wentworth were the associate preachers, and during their ministry a gracious revival was enjoyed and many were added to the church. No one of those then brought into the society are now living of whom we have any knowledge. The last survivor was the late Mrs. Betsey Norris, of Fremont, who has recently died at the age of ninety-three years.

The society had now acquired a permanent standing in the town, having a comfortable though humble place of worship, and the good will of some of the leading families in the place.

At this time the Methodist "societies" in this part of New Hampshire were embraced in the Boston District, New England Conference. The first note of the number of church-members we find in 1808, when there are reported in the Conference minutes one hundred and sixty-four on the whole circuit. How many of these belonged in Epping we do not know. Unfortunately the local records of the church in this town for this period are lost, and we have to depend on the meagre reports in the published Conference minutes of the time. The following limited account, taken from that source, is all we have relating to our church and its circuit connection from 1808 to 1837. In 1810, Salisbury, Mass., Poplin (Fremont), and Salem were connected with Epping in a circuit. Revs. Asa Kent, Benjamin Sabin, and John Jewett were the preachers. There were two hundred and eighty members. In 1811, Revs. John Williamson and Orlando Hinds were the preachers. They report two hundred and forty-three members. In 1812 the circuit embraced Epping, Poplin, and Salem, Revs. B. F. Lombard and Orlando Hinds preachers.

In 1813 no change appears in the circuit bounds. Revs. Leonard Frost and John W. Hardy were the preachers. Number of church-members, two hundred and forty-four. In 1814, Revs. Ebenezer Blake and Elias Marble, preachers.

We have no more record till 1826, when Rev. O. Hinds and Rev. John Brodhead were the ministers. Members reported, 207 white and one "colored." In 1830, Rev. Warren Wilber preached in Epping, and reports sixty-nine members. In 1832, Rev. S. Green and Rev. J. Woorster were the preachers. In 1833, Rev. Jared Perkins preached in Epping, and Rev. Samuel Hoyt was his associate.

Rev. Mr. Perkins was one of the most prominent ministers of the church in New Hampshire. He was for many years a presiding elder. He represented the Third New Hampshire District in Congress. In 1835 Rev. Silas Green was pastor in Epping, which appears disconnected with any other towns. Sixty-seven church-members were reported. In 1836, Rev. C. Fales was the pastor, and Rev. S. A. Cushing in 1837. Members, 66.

In 1838, Rev. Samuel Hoyt was the preacher on the Epping charge. He was very much beloved, and had a season of revival. I find some old members yet who were converted under his labors and were baptized by him. He stayed two years. He reports at the close of his years in Epping and Poplin, 180 members; his salary at Epping, I suppose (for A. M. Osgood was associated with him, and probably preached at Poplin), was $300, which was all paid except 88. Received for missions, $6.

Rev. Samuel Prescott came in 1840 as Mr. Hoyt's successor. He served two years. He was a devoted and faithful pastor. He reports at the end of his second year for Epping and Poplin 206 members. I suppose there must have been a revival which brought an addition to the church. His claim was $235, and he reports a deficiency of $60 at the end of one of his years.

Rev. John Smith was appointed in 1842, and continued two years. The first of his years Poplin, as usual, was connected with Epping, but he had Epping alone his second year. His salary was $365, and he received $241.67. Members, 165. In the report of the second year it reads "Epping and Candia," though the latter place does not appear in his appointment. How many of these members were in Candia we do not know.

In 1844, Rev. Matthew Newhall was stationed at Epping. He remained only one year, reporting at its close: members, 70; salary, $300.

Rev. Caleb Dustin came as the next pastor, and served one year. He was followed in 1846 by Rev. H. N. Taplin. He remained two years. He was greatly beloved by the people for his amiability and faithfulness. He reports in 1848 claims all paid for the first time, viz., three hundred dollars; eighty-two church-members, a gain during his labors.

His successor in 1848 was Rev. A. C. Manson. He served one year, was very popular, and had a successful year. Here we find the first current records, which give the following as the official members in 1847: Class-leaders, Gardner Tilton, Jonathan Cram; stewards, D. Clifford, B. M. Smith, J. G. Webb, J. P. Sanborn, J. F. Lane, Jeremiah Sanborn; Ezra F. Barber, licensed exhorter.

In 1849, Rev. C. H. Chase came as the successor of Mr. Manson. He remained two years and had prosperity in his work. The meeting-house was repaired inside. He reports at the end of the second year fifty-seven members. His claim was three hundred and twenty-five dollars. He gives but fifty Sunday-school scholars.

Rev. John Gould came after Mr. Chase in 1851. It reads in the minutes "Epping Mission" for the first time. This we suppose was about the beginning of that period during which missionary money was appropriated to feeble charges in the regular work. Mr. Gould remained but one year. He reports but forty-six members. His claim of three hundred dollars was all paid. Number of Sunday-school scholars, fifty-six.

It will be seen that the charge was not gaining but rather losing in strength and membership. Rev. J. M. Hartwell came after Mr. Gould in 1852. The appointment reads "Epping Mission and Poplin." He remained but one year. The local records are deficient for these years, and so we can give no account of the official members, or what was especially done in the society, except by the Conference minutes.

In 1853, Rev. Elihu Scott was the pastor, and served one year. He is remembered with interest by the people to this day, as he was greatly respected when he was among them. He had previously lived in the place when presiding elder of Dover District, owning a pleasant home near the church, the same property subsequently owned and occupied by Rev. M. Newhall. Mr. Scott returned for Epping and Poplin one hundred and four members and eleven probationers, which indicated some addition by revival. Twenty dollars were raised for missions, a larger amount than ever before.

In 1854, Rev. Lorenzo Draper was appointed to Epping and Poplin, but preached in Epping, as did the preachers generally who had both places in charge. He stayed but one year, and was succeeded in 1855 by Rev. Kimbal Hadley. Mr. Draper reports at the end of his year: members, one hundred and seven; claim, three hundred and eighty dollars. Mr. Hadley remained but one year. He reported, members, one hundred and eleven. He was succeeded in 1856 by Rev. Ebenezer Smith, who was in a supernumerary relation. His labors were very acceptable and profitable, and though he was not a sound man in health, and still held his residence in Concord, where he had served for several years as chaplain to the State prison, few pastors performed more work than Mr. Smith did. Rev. Matthew Newhall lived in town as a superannuated minister, and was a friend and helper to the pastor and the church. Mr. Smith reports in 1857 for Epping fifty members; probationers, seventeen; showing that there had been spiritual prosperity.

From 1857 to 1863 the church was "supplied" by young men who were licentiates and students in the "Bible Institute" at Concord. Their names are as follows in the order of their services: — Glover, F. T. George, Joseph Wilde, James V. Saunders, and N. A. Fisher.

A student supplied in 1858-59, but we do not learn his name. The reports in the minutes of 1859 from Epping are very meagre. The society was in a feeble and languishing condition in these years. I find in the Quarterly Conference record for July 17, 1859, this minute: "Voted, that Brother George be made preacher in charge."

Rev. A. Folsom came to the church in 1863, and served two years with great acceptance and success. He lived at his home in Raymond, and walked back and forth, and all over his field of labor, holding numerous meetings and visiting the people. A good revival was enjoyed, and several persons were added to the church. It was during Mr. Folsom's ministry that the proposition to purchase the Universalist meeting-house began to be agitated. Mrs. Gardner Tilton offered to give two hundred dollars towards the fund for that purpose. It was principally through the friendly agency of Dr. Nathaniel Batchelder that the proprietors of the house were induced to sell out their rights to our church.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Folsom aided this enterprise by his best efforts, and it became a certainty before his term expired, but was not taken possession of till May, 1866. When Mr. Folsom came to the charge D. Clifford, Gardner Tilton, E. K. Jenness, J. P. Sanborn constituted the board of stewards; who the other officials were does not appear on the record.

Rev. C. E. Hall, then a student at Concord, came to the charge in 1866, having just been received on probation in the Conference. The old church was abandoned in May, and the new one, having been put in order and fitted up with an altar, etc., was occupied by the congregation. No doubt the old house, which though a humble structure and altogether unsuited to the wants of the society, was abandoned with some feeling of regret; it had been used for so many years, had been the birthplace of precious souls, gracious seasons of refreshing had for years been witnessed within its walls, and many dear ones had been carried forth from its portals to the house appointed for all living. It had been a house for the little band through all its varying fortunes of trials and triumphs. No doubt many a heart was sad and some tears were shed as the last echoes of the voice of worship sounded from the venerable walls of the poor, decrepit, but still dear old structure.

<sup>1</sup> The Universalists were at one time quite numerous and influential in this town. They built this church in 1818, and kept up regular services for many years. They had languished and became very weak at this time, and as there was no prospect of their house being occupied again, they were disposed to transfer it to our people. Some two or three pews, however, are reserved by their old proprietors, and they occasionally claim the use of the house for some of their ministers.

The new (new to this people and new in its improvements), was found a much more convenient and comfortable place, and this, together with the interest attendant upon the change and improvement, and the popularity of the young and eloquent pastor, tended to the increase of attendance upon public worship.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Hall returned in 1867 the statistics of the charge as follows: members, 50; probationers, 16; value of church, $1500; Sunday-school scholars, 85; salary, $500, all paid; missions, $21.55; Preachers' Aid Society, $5; centenary funds, $58.35.

In 1867, Rev. James Noyes was appointed as Mr. Hall's successor, and served one year. He was much beloved by the people, and had a prosperous year. He was particularly active in promoting the cause of temperance. The Sunday-school also was promoted by the efforts of Mr. Noyes and his excellent wife, whose labors were abundant in every good work. He reports in 1868: members, 53; probationers, 15; claim, $500.

Rev. J. Steele came in 1868, and served one year. He reports at the close of his year: members, 47; probationers, 5; Sunday-school scholars, 127; salary, $600. Mr. Steele was the first resident pastor since 1855. The Ladies' Circle expended of its earnings during his year some $50 for stoves and furniture for the parsonage, and procured carpets for the church at a cost of $75.

In 1869 the appointment reads quite oddly: "Sandown, Fremont, and Epping supplied by A. R. Lunt." Mr. Lunt came from the East Maine Conference. He lived at Epping, and preached here a part of the time. Mr. Lunt was very acceptable to the people, and labored with good success. He reports in 1871 63 members and 26 probationers, showing some gain, as there was some revival; his salary, $600. He was reappointed to Epping, as a member of our Conference, in 1871, and had another pleasant and prosperous year; 64 members and 21 probationers are reported in 1872; $35 were raised for missions.

Rev. D. W. Downs supplied as pastor, appointed by the presiding elder in 1872-73. His pastorate was very successful, a blessed revival was enjoyed, and many valuable additions were made to the church. Meetings were held under the direction of the Rev. C. L. Fowler, who was assisted by the Rev. T. Carter. The old parsonage was considerably improved through Mr. Downs' efforts. He reports in 1874, however, only thirty-one members, showing a considerable decrease from the year before, probably by a needed revision of the register, but there were no probationers reported as the fruits of their revival. He received a larger salary than any one before him, eight hundred dollars; Sunday-school scholars, one hundred and ten; raised for missions, eighteen dollars. The society house on Hedding Camp-Ground was built through Mr. Downs' efforts. It cost two hundred dollars. He was followed by Rev. C. H. Smith in 1874. Mr. Smith served but one year, when, on account of impaired health, he ceased his active ministry and took a supernumerary relation. Mr. Smith received eight hundred dollars as salary. During Mr. Smith's year the parsonage, now owned by the society, was purchased and occupied by the pastor. A fund, donated by the late Gardner Tilton, one of our old and faithful members, amounting to some eleven hundred dollars, and held in trust by two of our brethren as executors of his last will and testament, subject to claim by a long-absent son, was applied to this purchase, being loaned to the trustees, who gave security by mortgage. The parsonage cost some eighteen hundred dollars. To avoid double taxation, viz., on the Tilton fund and the house bought in part with the money also, the mortgage has since been surrendered, notes taken up, and a bond of indemnification given to the executors in case the son ever returns. This was done by advice of legal counsel. On his removal in 1875, Rev. W. H. Jones was appointed to the charge and remained three years,—the first instance of a "third term" on this charge. Mr. Jones' labors were acceptable and useful, and he carried with him when he left the good will of the people. Evidently a good number of the probationers who remained on trial through Mr. Smith's term were brought into the church in full under Mr. Jones' labors, as he reports in 1876 ninety-seven members and sixteen probationers. He received his full salary of eight hundred dollars.

During Mr. Jones' first year the Congregational Church held their services in connection with those of our own church, while their own house of worship was being reconstructed. This was done by invitation on the part of the Methodist pastor and people, Mr. Jones and Rev. Mr. Stearns preaching alternately, and the social and sacramental services united, the most perfect and pleasant state of harmony continuing throughout. Some additions were made to the parsonage furniture during these years.

In 1876-77 the work of improving the interior of the church was undertaken and carried on by the "Ladies' Aid Society." The wood-work was painted, the walls tinted, new matting for the aisles, and carpet for the pulpit-platform and altar. A new pulpit and furniture to correspond were procured, together with new stoves and pipe, and a clock placed on the wall. The old blinds outside were removed, and new ones placed on the inside, and various other needed improvements made, which added much to the beauty and convenience of the house. An elegant Bible and hymn-book were presented for the pulpit by Mr. Bennett, of Lowell. The custom of one sermon on Sunday was adopted during Mr. Jones' administration.

<sup>1</sup> The bell now on the church was procured during Mr. Hall's term. J. P. Sanborn was the agent for its procurement, and the funds were raised in part by a levee (in which Dr. Batchelder was an efficient helper), and in part by subscription secured by L. E. Fogg. Its cost was three hundred dollars.

Rev. J. R. Bartlett came as Mr. Jones' successor in 1878, and remained one year. The old parsonage, which had been rented since the purchase of the new one, was sold for five hundred dollars, and the amount applied as a payment on the debt for the new one, thus reducing the indebtedness to two hundred dollars. Mr. Bartlett was very efficient in promoting the cause of temperance, and took an active part in legal prosecutions against violators of the law against the selling liquor. He reported in 1879: members, eighty-seven; probationers, twelve; Sunday-school scholars, eighty; raised for missions, fifteen dollars. His salary was eight hundred dollars, which was all paid. During Mr. Bartlett's year the parsonage was much improved by rebuilding the chimney in the L, so as to enlarge the kitchen and add to its conveniences very materially. A new carpet was procured for the parlor.

Mr. Bartlett was succeeded in 1879 by Rev. J. Thurston, the present pastor (and the compiler of this sketch). During his first year the effort, commenced the year previous, to paint the outside of the church, rebuild the front steps, erect new chimneys, etc., was carried to completion. Mr. Thurston served as pastor three years. A new communion service of plated ware was obtained in 1880. The church register was thoroughly revised, resulting in a decrease in the list of church-members.

An historical sketch of the church was compiled by the pastor, and recorded in permanent form for local propection and reference. Mr. Thurston reported, in 1882, sixty-nine church-members.

Several ministers have been raised up in this church who have gone forth to the gospel field as itinerants, and have all, I believe, a good record. Rev. J. Stevens was a native of this town, and here he was converted and licensed to preach, and recommended to the Annual Conference. He did efficient service while his health held out. He returned to this town and worshiped with this church till his death.

Rev. D. W. Barber was also a son of this church. He joined the Conference in 1844, and is yet living, though in superannuation, after years of faithful service.<sup>1</sup>

Rev. George Barber, of Maine, and Rev. John W. Sanborn, of Western New York, were raised up in this church.

Hedding Camp-Meeting Association.—Camp-meetings were held in Fowler's Grove, in South Newmarket, annually from 1857 to 1862, inclusive. At the meeting in 1862 arrangements were made for a permanent camp-meeting establishment, and a committee of ministers and laymen was appointed to secure a suitable location, purchase land, and make preparations for a meeting in the autumn of the next year.

The ground now occupied at East Epping was bought of Daniel and Ezra F. Barker, and cleared and otherwise prepared, and the first meeting was held in 1863, under the direction of Rev. A. C. Munson, presiding elder of the Dover District. Rev. Calvin had acted as agent of the committee in the purchase and preparation of the ground. An act of incorporation was secured from the Legislature of 1863, the organization taking the name of the "Hedding Camp-Meeting Association," in honor of the late Bishop Hedding. The following-named gentlemen were the original corporators: Rev. Calvin Holman, Rev. D. P. Leavitt, Rev. A. C. Munson, Rev. Sullivan Holman, Rev. Eleazar Smith, Rev. J. Thurston, H. C. Matthews, C. W. Wentworth, T. D. Wentworth, S. Y. Brook, and N. Herrick, Esqs.

The charter declares that the above-named persons, "their associates and successors to be made a body politic and corporate for such religious, moral, and charitable, and benevolent purposes as said corporation may from time to time designate." A meeting of these corporators was held on the camp-ground on the 25th day of August, 1863, when the organization was completed by formally accepting the charter, adopting a constitution, and the choice of officers.

The association consists of all the pastors within the bounds of the New Hampshire Conference who may be in attendance, all "tent-masters," and owners of cottages on the grounds. The Executive Committee, consisting of the president of the association (who is chairman), secretary and treasurer, and eight committee-men, all chosen annually by the association except the president, who holds his office by virtue of his presidingship for the time being.

The duty of the Executive Committee is to take charge of all the property and business, and to carry out the instructions of the association. They are required to make an annual report of their doings and a statement of the financial condition of the association. The charter allows the association to hold property to the value of ten thousand dollars, free of taxation. The constitution provides that whenever any profit shall arise from the business above what is needed for the annual expenses and improvements it shall be devoted to the "Preachers' Aid Society" of the New Hampshire Conference, and if the ground and fixtures at any time shall cease to be used for camp-meeting purposes, they shall be transferred to the same society, and the income annually appropriated to the benefit of widows and orphans of deceased ministers and such aged and disabled ministers as may need assistance. The Executive Committee conduct the establishments for boarding and refreshments and stabling, etc. No other person is allowed to carry on any temporary selling on the grounds without the consent of the committee. The income from the business, together with an allowance of ten cents for each passenger coming by the railroads, have been sufficient to meet the expenses and make necessary improvements. Additional land has been purchased from time to time, and the association now (1882) holds about two hundred acres.

Rev. A. C. Munson was the president of the association from 1863 to 1867, four years. Rev. J. Thurston was chosen secretary, and J. M. Sanborn, of East Kingston, treasurer, in 1864. In 1868 the grounds were enlarged by the purchase of adjoining land. Avenues were laid out and lots offered for sale, and private parties began to erect cottages, and families to make the grounds a place of summer resort. In 1869 the building devoted to the boarding department was erected. Rev. J. Pike, D.D., was the president from 1867 to 1871. The land on the north, known as the "Seammon land," extending to the Pawtucaway River and the county road, about sixty acres, was purchased, and the Barber farm subsequently. Rev. Dr. O. H. Jasper was president from 1871 to 1875, and Rev. Dr. L. D. Barrows succeeded him in 1875, and served two years. Rev. Dr. J. Pike again became president in 1877, and served four years. Rev. George J. Judkin became president in 1871. J. M. Sanborn, of East Kingston, served as treasurer for a number of years, and was one of the most efficient promoters of the enterprise to the time of his death, in 1875. He was followed by Rev. Dr. E. Adams, of Concord, who served as treasurer from 1872 to 1877. Prof. Stephen W. Clark, of Portsmouth, was treasurer in 1877-78. Rev. G. W. Norris was chosen to that office in 1878, and still holds the position. Rev. James Thurston, of Dover, served as secretary from 1864 to 1871, with the exception of one year, 1877. Rev. Otis Cole, the present secretary, was chosen in 1881.

Camp-meetings have been held annually on these grounds. The time of beginning is fixed by a standing order on the last Monday in August. Meetings have been held on the Sabbath twice, but the association has adopted the policy of not holding Sabbath meetings, and of excluding from the grounds all gatherings and exercises not strictly religious. This last rule has been observed, if we except in a few instances temperance and Sunday-school meetings.

The financial affairs of the association have been faithfully and judiciously administered, and its obligations have been promptly met. Its present indebtedness is about two thousand dollars.

Arrangements were entered into with the Concord and Boston and Maine Railroads, when the association was formed, by which the conveyance of passengers at reduced rates was secured, and the sum of ten cents on each ticket sold is paid to the treasury for the expenses of the meeting. Similar arrangements are annually made with other railroads in the State. In 1881 the Concord and Portsmouth Railroad Company built a track from East Epping station to the grounds, the association paying the land damages.

Society of Friends.—Friends, commonly called Quakers, first settled and formed church organization in Hampton and Dover, N. H., prior to 1680, and about the same time set up Monthly Meetings, each of which were composed of several particular meetings lying contiguous. These Monthly Meetings were held monthly for religious worship and for the transaction of the varied concerns which interested them as a church and society, and kept record thereof.

The first Friends' meeting-house built in Rockingham County was at Hampton (now Seabrook) in 1702, at or near the spot where the meeting-house now stands. The earliest record which has been preserved by Hampton Monthly Meeting bears date 6th mo. 15, 1701. An unbroken record has been preserved to the present time, to wit, 12th of 9th mo., 1882.

Hampton Monthly Meeting was changed to that of Seabrook in 1793, because Seabrook was taken from Hampton and incorporated a separate town some time before. Since its organization the Monthly Meeting has been held a portion of the time at various other places within its limits, namely, at Amesbury, West Newbury, Epping, Pittsfield, and Weare.

Weare was separated from Seabrook Monthly Meeting in 1795, and was constituted a separate Monthly Meeting, called Weare Monthly Meeting of Friends.

The next Friends' meeting-house built in said county and within the limits of Hampton Monthly Meeting was at Newtown (now Newton), where a Friends' meeting-house was built prior to 1810 by some Friends living there. A meeting was set up by the Monthly Meeting, and continued for about eighty years; many of its members bore the name of Peasley. Their history dates back to the earliest settlements in Massachusetts, as Joseph Peasley died in Haverhill in 1662, the father from whom descended the Peasley family.

The descendants of the Newton Peasleys are scattered from Maine to California, some of whom are yet connected and in fellowship with the society of Friends.

The Friends' Meeting at Newton was discontinued in 1804.

A few Friends resided in Brentwood as early as 1738, held religious meetings around at their houses at first, and built a house for worship in 1740. James Bean was a preacher among them. Samuel Dudley and Jonathan Beede were prominent members for a time. Hampton Monthly Meeting approved of this organization in 1746, but some of the individuals composing this meeting, including James Bean, did not conduct the meeting or otherwise behave to the satisfaction of the Monthly Meeting, and it was discontinued in 1748. James Bean still continued his disorganizing course, and in a few years the meeting was entirely broken up, and those constituting it moved to other localities or ceased to be members of the Society of Friends.

A few Friends resided in Epping prior to 1746, and attended meeting with their friends in Brentwood until the disorganizing course pursued by some of its members. The Friends at Epping withdrew from them, and held meetings for religious worship at their houses until 1788, when Friends at Epping built their first meeting-house on the ground near the present post-office at West Epping.

A new house was built by Friends of West Epping for religious worship, near the old one, in 1851.

Seabrook Monthly Meeting of Friends is held three times each year at West Epping, and has been for many years. Joshua Folsom, Jonathan Beede, and Joseph Peasley were prominent members, the two former ministers.

Joshua Folsom was much from home the last twenty years of his life in missionary labor, with the approval of his Monthly Meeting. He visited most or all the localities of Friends in New England, New York, and Pennsylvania. He died in 1793. Benjamin Folsom, his son, was a speaker among the Friends at Epping, and died in 1850, in his ninety-fourth year.

Mehitable Folsom, now in her ninety-third year, was for many years a public speaker. The meeting is at present favored with the religious services of Daniel Beede and Abigail M. Hanson.

Universalist Society.—Between 1835 and 1840 a movement was made to organize a Universalist Society. A liberal religious sentiment had strongly developed itself here as elsewhere. It finally resulted in the associating together of several gentlemen of wealth and social influence, who purchased a site and erected the edifice now occupied by the Methodist Society. This structure was built in about 1837. The first pastor was James H. Shrigley, who preached here one-half of the time and the other half in Exeter. He was a gentleman of pleasing address, and a forcible speaker. He was followed by a Mr. Moore, who remained only about one year. The Revs. Hosea and Moses Ballou, Henry Jewell, Thomas Whitmore, and other eminent ministers of this denomination preached occasionally, and the Rev. Nathaniel Goldsmith, now a resident of the town, occupied the pulpit for several years. The interest which first brought the society into existence soon began to abate. Men died or moved to other places, so that it was found impracticable to sustain preaching and keep the church in repair. The result was the Methodist Society abandoned their old house of worship and purchased this, and refitted it to meet the wants of this society. The Universalist Society occupied this church, and kept up their organization for about twenty-five years.

CHAPTER XXXII.

MISCELLANEOUS

Native Ministers—Physicians—Public Officials—Attorneys-at-Law—Graduates from Colleges—Railroads—Banking Institutions—Population—Origin of the Name of the Town.

Native Ministers.—Many gentlemen from this town have chosen the profession of ministers of the gospel, and among them may be mentioned Rev. Nicholas Dudley, David L. Morrill, Samuel Stearns, and Josiah H. Stearns, who were members of the Congregational Church; Revs. Caleb Fogg, Jacob Stevens, Daniel W. Barker, Nathaniel Ladd, George Barker, and John W. Sanborn were members of the Methodist Church; Benjamin F. Shepard was an Episcopalian, and Norris Hodgdon was a Universalist. These gentlemen made honorable record in their profession.

Physicians.—Of the physicians who were natives of the town, mention may be made of Theodore and George W. Kittridge, both of whom became eminent; the former recently died in Massachusetts, and the latter in Newmarket, N. H., where he earned a wide reputation for his skill as a physician and surgeon. He was also a prominent citizen, and his public record is elsewhere given. Prescott Lawrence graduated at the Harvard Medical School in 1823. Dr. Albert L. Norris, of Cambridge, Mass., is a native of the town, and he ranks high in his profession, and Dr. John W. Chase, of Dedham, Mass., has a large, successful, and varied practice.

Nathaniel Bachelder practiced medicine for a long period, following his father, Dr. Nathan Bachelder, who practiced long before him. They were both eminent and had a large practice. Among those physicians who were not natives of the town may be mentioned Ebenezer Fisk, Eliphalet How, O. Williams, George Kittredge, John Ladd, Ebenezer Moore, William Gilman, L. H. Angell, Lucero J. Gibbs, Dr. Eastman, J. Chesley, and others. The physicians now present in town are Hosea B. Burnham, Albert C. Boswell, and Frank W. Spaulding.

Public Officials.—This town has occupied a prominent position in the State for one of its size, and many of its citizens who have remained within its limits, as well as those who have gone elsewhere, have occupied conspicuous positions in the county, State, and national governments. The following, though an incomplete list, will give the positions some have held, and all to the satisfaction of those who appointed or elected them to their places of trust:

Governors of the State.—William Plumer, from 1812 to 1813, and from 1816 to 1819; David Lawrence Morrill, from 1824 to 1827; Benjamin F. Prescott, from 1877 to 1879. Governor Morrill resided in Goffstown at the time he occupied the chair, but he was born in Epping, June 10, 1772, and died Feb. 4, 1849. He was a student at Phillips' Academy in Exeter in 1790. He studied medicine, and commenced the practice of his profession in Epsom, N. H., in 1793. He then studied theology, and was ordained a pastor, but relinquished that profession to resume the practice of medicine. He was a representative to the General Court of the State in 1811, 1812, and in 1816. He was United States senator for six years. He was chosen State senator, and served as its president in 1823. He was a gentleman of varied learning, and wrote much on religious and secular topics. He was one of the prominent men of the State. During his administration as Governor, Gen. Lafayette visited this country and was given a public reception at Concord.

Col. Joseph Towle, of Epping, was then in command of a portion of the militia of the State, and was present on this memorable occasion. Col. Towle subsequently became major-general of the forces of the State.

United States Senators.—William Plumer, from 1802 to 1807; David L. Morrill, from 1817 to 1823; John Chandler, from 1820 to 1829. Mr. Chandler was a native of this town, and was born of humble parentage on what is known as "Red Oak Hill." He removed when young to the province of Maine, and there by industry became prominent in the affairs of that State, and when the province was a part of Massachusetts he represented it in the State Senate from 1803 to 1805, and in the Congress of the United States in the Lower House from 1805 to 1808, and for three years was sheriff of Kennebec County. In 1812 he was appointed a brigadier-general, and took a conspicuous part in the Canadian campaign. He was wounded and taken prisoner at Stony Creek, and in that engagement had his horse shot from under him. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1820, being one of the first two senators from the State of Maine after its separation from Massachusetts. He served in this position two terms, until 1829. In 1829 he was appointed collector of the port of Portland, serving till 1837. He died at Augusta in September, 1811.

Representatives in Congress.—William Plumer, Jr., from 1819 to 1825; George W. Kittredge from 1853 to 1855. Dr. Kittredge resided in Newmarket at the time he was chosen. John Chandler, of Maine, an account of whom is given under the head of United States senators.

Presidents of the New Hampshire Senate.—William Plumer, 1810; David L. Morrill, 1823.

Speakers of the New Hampshire House of Representatives.—William Plumer, 1791, 1799; David L. Morrill, 1816; George W. Kittredge, 1852.

Secretary of State.—Benjamin F. Prescott, 1872, 1873, 1875, 1876.

Electors of President and Vice-President.—William Plumer was one of the electors in 1820. He cast his vote for John Quincy Adams, while the others voted for James Monroe. But for this vote Mr. Monroe would have had a unanimous election. The favorite of Mr. Plumer was the next President.

State Councilor.—Samuel P. Dow in 1872, 1873.

State Senators.—William Plumer, 1810-11 and 1811-12; Joseph Shepard, 1816-17; Samuel P. Dow, 1858-59. Mr. Dow was a citizen of Newmarket when he was elected senator.

Postmasters.—William Stearns, 1809-10; William Plumer, 1810-11; William Plumer, 1811-17; George W. Plumer, 1817-28; Samuel Plumer, Jr., 1828-30; Nathaniel Batchelder, 1830-34; Nathaniel Morrill, Jr., 1834-41; George W. Lawrence, 1841-45; John W. Morrill, 1845-49; James M. Godfrey, 1849-50; Charles L. Godfrey, 1850-52; James L. Rundlett, 1853-61; George E. Lawrence, 1861-72; David Stickney, 1872-82; Walter H. Stickney, 1882.

Attorney-General.—Hon. Daniel French, a native of Epping, was attorney-general of the State from 1812 to 1815. He was a resident of Chester at the time he held this high position.

County Treasurers.—Joseph C. Plumer, 1833 and 1834; Charles M. Norris, 1857-59; George E. Lawrence, 1866-68; Winthrop N. Dow, 1872-74, and appointed by Supreme Court April, 1882, to fill vacancy.

County Sheriff.—Joseph Towle was sheriff of the county from 1835 to 1840, the appointment being for five years.

County Commissioner.—Joseph C. Burley, 1880-82.

Attorneys-at-Law.—There have been many prominent and successful lawyers in town, especially in its early history, before it became the practice for members of the bar to locate in places more densely populated. Among this number can be mentioned Jotham Lawrence, William Plumer, Sr. and Jr., Samuel Butterfield, Amos A. Parker, Hiram Osgood, Silas Betton, Daniel Clark, James McMurphy, John S. H. Frink, Horace C. Bacon, Enoch Bartlett, Joseph F. Wiggin, J. Warren Towle, George Stickney, George W. Stevens, H. F. Hopkins, Elijah B. Hazen, W. H. Drury, and others, who remained for a short period. Epping for many years was a business centre, and the practice of the law was quite prominent in town.

Graduates from College.—Nicholas Dudley, Harvard, 1767; Samuel Stearns, Harvard, 1794; William Plumer, Jr., Harvard, 1809; Benjamin F. Shepard, Dartmouth, 1833; John S. Ladd, Dartmouth, 1835; Josiah H. Stearns, Dartmouth, 1840; William Plumer (3d), Harvard, 1845; Samuel G. Stevens, Dartmouth, 1850; Joseph Warren Towle, Harvard, 1851; Benjamin F. Prescott, Dartmouth, 1856; Charles Edward Lane, Dartmouth, 1866; Theodore Moses Barber, Dartmouth, 1870.

The above became prominent members of society. Nicholas Dudley, Samuel Stearns, Josiah H. Stearns, and Benjamin F. Shepard became ministers of the gospel. William Plumer, Jr., was a lawyer, a gentleman of fine literary taste, and a member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States. John S. Ladd became a lawyer, and is at present an able judge of the municipal court of Cambridge, Mass., and Benjamin F. Prescott became Governor of his native State. William Plummer (3d) read law, and has practiced his profession. Samuel G. Stearns adopted the profession of teacher. J. Warren Towle, a lawyer. Benjamin F. Prescott read law, and afterwards became secretary and Governor of the State. Charles Edward Lane is agent in Chicago for a large publishing house, while Theodore M. Barber is Professor of Latin in the Western University of Pennsylvania.

There have been many other eminent graduates from the academies and schools who have taken prominent position in the various professions.

Railroads.—There are two railroads in the town, viz., the Concord and Portsmouth and the Nashua and Rochester. They form a junction a little south of the village. The Concord and Portsmouth Road was constructed in 1850-52. The Nashua and Rochester was opened Nov. 24, 1874. The Concord and Portsmouth Road is now operated by the Concord Railroad under a long lease. The Nashua and Rochester road is operated by the Worcester and Nashua Railroad. These roads are of great advantage to the town, and they afford superior facilities to the people to ship wood, lumber, brick, bark, and manufactured articles of all kinds, as well as the products of the soil, which are quite abundant in the town, such as hay, potatoes, apples, straw, etc.

Banking Institutions.—There has never been in town but one bank of discount, and that was incorporated under the State law, and closed before the present national banking system went into operation. The name of this bank was "Pawtucketaway." It was chartered in 1854, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars. John H. Pearson, of Concord, was its president, and Charles W. Sargent, of Epping, cashier. It was a successful and well-managed institution. The larger portion of the stock was owned in Concord. This bank surrendered its charter in 1864, after ten years of successful business. The directors were John H. Pearson, George Clough, James W. Sargent, George A. Pillsbury, Peltiah Brown, of Concord, Nathaniel Bachelier, of Epping, and James H. Butler, of Nottingham.

In 1873 the Epping Savings Bank was incorporated. Its charter expires in 1893. The president of this institution is Joseph C. Borley, of Epping, and George S. Rundlett is treasurer. The following gentlemen are the board of trustees: James L. Rundlett, William R. Bunker, David Stickney, Dudley L. Harvey, Hosea B. Barnham, John H. Pike, James H. Bartlett, Alfred T. Rundlett, Benjamin W. Hoyt, John Ledy, of Epping, Joseph N. Ciley, of Nottingham, and Winthrop N. Dow, of Exeter. This bank has been carefully and economically managed since its organization, and has proved a safe place for people to deposit their surplus earnings. The amount of deposits now are nearly sixty thousand dollars.

The population of the town has varied from period to period since the Revolution. At that time it was the sixth or seventh town in number of its population in the State. Soon after the Revolution many of the young men with their families moved into neighboring towns where they could get farms cheap, and many went to the province of Maine. There was no very distant outlet for the population, as happened later when so many of the Eastern people went West and settled. In 1850 the population by the census showed the largest number the town ever had, but that is due to the fact that a large number of men, and some with their families, were employed in the building of the Portsmouth and Concord Railroad. This was a temporary population of the town, and soon the number fell back to its legitimate limit. In 1880 the number of inhabitants rose again up to 1536. This was owing in large degree to the extensive shoe manufactories which have been established, and also the increase in the manufacture of brick, which requires many men. In both departments of business the employes became permanent citizens, and the number is liable to increase rather than diminish in the future. There are other branches of business springing up, which will no doubt increase the number of inhabitants, such as the box-factory in the west part of the town, on the Lamprey River, now operated by Cyrus F. Low, where he uses upwards of twelve hundred thousand feet of lumber annually in the manufacture of boxes for shoes. There is also another box manufactory of a similar character at the village, operated by Charles A. and Henry W. Miles, but at present less in extent.

Origin of the Name of the Town.—Col. Joseph L. Chester, LL.D., of London, England, a native of Connecticut, but now lately deceased, the leading antiquarian of England, in reply to an inquiry of Hon. Benjamin F. Prescott, in January, 1876, in reference to the origin of the name of Epping, in the United States (and there is no other town of that name except Epping in Rockingham County), says, in a letter dated Feb. 12, 1876, "Epping is a nice little town in Essex, about seventeen miles from London. The parish is called Epping-Upland, and Epping is a market town in the parish. The town is in about the middle of the forest called 'Epping Forest,' but the town gives the name to the forest and not vice versa. Epping was originally a royal manor, and the forest a royal chase. It now belongs to the nation, and the forest is free to the public. We are very proud of having so large a bit of woods so near London, and the forest has always been a great resort for holiday-makers. No doubt some of the early settlers of your place came from Epping or its vicinity. Epping, according to writers on such subjects, is derived from Gippau, the possession of Gippa, a man's name in the old Anglo-Saxon times,—i.e., Gippa's Forest, Epping Forest. The forest was probably the possession of one Gippa at the period when there were no surnames."

Epping was formerly a part of Exeter, and was incorporated into its present limits Feb. 23, 1741. It contains nearly thirteen thousand acres. The surface of the town is uneven, but none of the hills are high. It is well supplied with streams of water. The largest of these is the Lamprey River, on which there have been several mills for grinding grain, sawing boards, shingles, and other varieties of lumber, as well as woolen-mills for the manufacture of cloth, knitting of stockings, and other fabrics. At the present time the power at the centre village is used for grist-mill, saw-mill, planing of lumber, the manufacture of boxes from boards, and woolen manufactures and the carding of wools. The power on the same river in the westerly section of the town is now used in running a saw-mill, grist-mill, box-factory, and the manufacture of stockings and other woolen goods. The privilege on this stream just below the last named has been abandoned, although it is superior to either of the others, owing to its situation and the height of the fall. For more than a hundred years a grist-mill and a saw-mill stood here, and were patronized from far and near. There was also a shingle-mill and wheelwright-shop. At one time there was a manufactory of rubber goods when that business first commenced in this country. For some cause it was soon abandoned.

The town has no wild scenery, but the surface is undulating and pleasing to the eye, and with its numerous streams and wooded hills and valleys it is considered one of the finest towns in Rockingham County. The soil generally is good and well suited to the products raised in the State. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is that of farming, and as much skill is displayed by them as is seen anywhere else in the State in the cultivation of their lands.

The products are hay, oats, wheat, rye, barley, corn, potatoes, beans, apples, pears, etc. For the last twenty-five years large quantities of excellent apples, principally of winter varieties, have been raised, which have found a ready market in Boston and other places, owing to their superior flavor and fine texture. Much lumber has been cut in this town within the past few years, and wood, which have been sold in towns and cities in our own and other States. Almost all varieties of growth grow rapidly and luxuriantly here, and many more acres are covered with forest than there were fifty years ago, though the size is by no means so large or valuable. The tendency among all farmers now is to allow the poorer places to come into growth, wherever it may be, and thus in every thirty or forty years get a larger income than they possibly could in any other way from such tracts of land.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

BENJAMIN F. PRESCOTT.

Hon. Benjamin F. Prescott, whose portrait is herewith given, was born in Epping, Feb. 26, 1833. His parents were Nathan Gove Prescott and Betsey Hills Richards. His father was the fourth generation upon the homestead now owned and occupied by ex-Governor Prescott, while his mother was a native and resident of Nottingham. His father died in 1866, but his mother still resides with her son upon the homestead, which has been in the family for about one hundred and thirty years. The subject of this sketch inherited a vigorous constitution, and passed his boyhood upon the farm, doing every variety of work which a New Hampshire farmer's son is called upon to do. He attended the district school until his age would admit of his leaving home to pursue his studies in the higher seminaries of learning. In 1847 he was sent to Pembroke Academy (N. H.), and remained there portions of the time till 1850, when he entered Phillips' Academy, in Exeter. Here he pursued a classical course of study until the autumn of 1853, when he entered the sophomore class in Dartmouth College. He graduated from this college in 1856. He taught winters while in college, and some months after graduation. He then read law, and was admitted to practice in all the courts of the State. He opened an office in Concord, N. H., and entered upon his profession, but relinquished it in 1861 to become associate editor of the Independent Democrat, the leading anti-slavery paper of the State. He remained thus associated till 1865, when his connection with the paper closed.

For a short period he was a special agent of the United States Treasury Department for New England, but was removed because he opposed the policy of Andrew Johnson and fearlessly proclaimed his opposition. In the years 1872, 1873, 1875, and 1876 he was elected Secretary of State, and in March, 1877, was elected Governor, and was re-elected in March, 1878. He was elected a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Chicago in 1880, and was selected chairman of the New Hampshire delegation. For fifteen years previous to 1877 he was secretary of the Republican State Committee, and was largely instrumental in perfecting the organization of the State which secured the most important triumphs of the party. His administration was conceded to be one of the most successful the State has ever had. He took a lively interest in all matters pertaining to its welfare and advancement, and allowed no opportunity to escape when he was able to render assistance to the people.

He is deeply interested in agriculture and all matters which build up the influence and power of his State. He was married in 1869 to Miss Mary Little Noyes, of Concord, N. H., a lady of fine accomplishments and cultivated manners. They have one son, who takes the name of his father, and was born June 16, 1879. While occupying the executive chair Governor Prescott responded to the great variety of calls made upon him, and on all occasions acquitted himself in a manner acceptable to the people. He has historical taste, and is a member of the New Hampshire Historical Society, and was for many years vice-president of the same. He is also a fellow of the Royal Historical Society of Great Britain. He has also given great attention to art, and the one hundred and seventy-five portraits and marble busts in the State-House in Concord, Dartmouth College, Phillips' Exeter Academy, Pembroke Academy, the State Normal School, and the New Hampshire Historical Society attest the interest he feels in preserving the faces of those who occupy a prominent place in the history of the State and the institutions connected with it. He has also done much to advance the educational interests of the State, and is at the present time a trustee of Dartmouth College, and also trustee of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts.

REV. JOSIAH HOWE STEARNS.

In the "Genealogies and History of Watertown, Mass.," by Henry Bond, M.D., the Stearns family occupies more than one-eighth of the entire volume of 1094 pages.

In said book is a picture of the family coat of arms, thus described: "Arms, or a chevron between three crosses, flory sable; crest, a cock standing proper."

"A coat of arms similar to this formerly belonged to the occupants of the old Stearns homestead, in Watertown. It is the same as that borne by families of the name of Sterne in the counties of Bucks, Cambridge, Hertford, and Norfolk, England; the same also as that borne by Richard Sterne, Archbishop of York, who was descended from the Sternes of Nottinghamshire."

"The name in Europe is spelt variously by families bearing the same coat of arms, and probably of the same family line."

"It is probable that all the families of the name of Stearns in the United States are descended from three early immigrants,—Isaac and Charles, who settled in Watertown, or Nathaniel, who settled in Delham."

Isaac Stearns came to America in 1630, in the same ship, as is supposed, with Governor Winthrop and Sir Richard Saltonstall, and settled in Watertown. He was admitted freeman, May 18, 1631, the earliest date of any such admission, after which he was much in public office.

The births of only three of his children are found in the town records, and some were born before he left England, as the parish register of Nayland records those of two daughters at least.

His son, John Stearns, was one of the first settlers of Billerica. He married Sarah, only daughter of Isaac and Sarah Mixer, of Watertown.

Their son, Lieut. John Stearns, whose birth was the first on the Billerica records, was a man much respected and having a large influence. He married Elizabeth Bigelow, daughter of John and Mary Warren Bigelow, of Watertown.

Their son, John Stearns, of Billerica, married Esther Johnson, descendant of Edward Johnson, of Woburn, author of the history of New England entitled "Wonder-working Providence of Zion's Saviour in New England."

One of their sons, Hon. Isaac Stearns, of Billerica, was a soldier in the French war, a representative and senator in the State Legislature, and highly respected as a soldier, a civil magistrate, a legislator, and a Christian. He was grandfather of Hon. Onslow Stearns, who was Governor of New Hampshire, 1869 and 1870.

Another son of the said John Stearns, Rev. Josiah Stearns, of Epping, was born in Billerica, Mass., Jan. 20, 1732. At the usual age he was sent to school, where he soon discovered such powers of mind, diligence in application, and sobriety of conduct as attracted the especial notice of his instructor, and induced him to urge upon his parents the expediency of giving him a liberal education. At the age of fifteen he entered Harvard College, and was graduated at nineteen. He at once felt specially desirous to preach the gospel, and having been solemnly dedicated to this work by his pious parents, he commenced his theological studies immediately after leaving the university. At the age of twenty-one years he began to preach with great acceptance, and the eyes of many in different places were soon fixed upon him as their intended pastor. But not feeling prepared to take the charge of a parish at that early age, he declined preaching as a candidate for a time and followed teaching, while he engaged in occasional ministerial labors and in the further prosecution of his theological studies. At length he decided to enter on the momentous duties of a parochial charge whenever God pointed the way to him, and after receiving several calls he decided to accept that from the Congregational Church in Epping, where he was ordained and installed at the age of twenty-six years.

He was a close and thorough student. He studied the Scriptures in their original languages with unremitting diligence. So intimate was his knowledge of them that he could readily cite the chapter and verse where almost any text was to be found. The late Dr. Thayer, of Kingston, mentioning this fact, added, "The Bible especially was his library." Still he had a small library of choice works, and his thirst for knowledge led him "to borrow of friends one volume at a time, and when he had read it through its contents were his own." He was eminently a man of prayer. "The place of his retirement witnessed the fervent outpourings of his soul, frequently for two hours at a time." He was an ardent friend of liberty, and he sacrificed most of his worldly interest in support of the American cause (Alden's Epitaph). He was a member of the first "Provincial Congress," in which he regarded himself as fully committed to the risk of his personal safety. Returning therefrom he called his children around him, told them of the stand he had taken, and added, "If the cause shall prevail it will be a great benefit to the country, but if it shall fail, your poor old father's head will soon be a button for a halter."

Some of his sons were in the field during a great part of the Revolutionary contest. He had held a negro as property; but, though he had given the boy advantages for mental and moral improvement with his own children, he felt the inconsistency of holding a fellow-being in legal bondage while thus struggling for national independence, and pronounced him henceforth free, whereupon Peter, in company with his master's sons, shouldered his musket and did good service in the common cause as a freeman. Mr. Stearns was tall in person and interesting in his pulpit performances. He held the untiring attention of his audience, which not unfrequently filled the seats and aisles of his meeting-house, while in pleasant weather a number stood around the doors and windows.

The following anecdote illustrates the dignity and influence of his character. He happened to pass through a room where a party of military officers were engaged in very free and profane conversation. The individual who was speaking at the time suddenly stopped and seemed abashed. His comrades rallied him on his timidity as soon as Mr. Stearns disappeared; and the officer's immediate reply was, "Parson Stearns would awe the devil."

Of his published discourses, one was preached at an ordination, two on the occasion of a national fast, being especially designed to move the people aright during the Revolutionary war, one on "Early Piety," with a brief memoir of Samuel Lawrence; two were on 1 John iv. 8: "God is love," preached in Exeter, and published after his death at the request made to him in his last sickness by Hon. John Phillips, for the use of the members of the Academy. In a letter referred to in the Congregational Quarterly, January, 1868, page 3, Dr. Abbott, a former preceptor of Phillips' Exeter Academy, calls "Rev. Mr. Stearns, of Epping, the friend and favorite preacher of Dr. Phillips."

Mr. Stearns was also intimately acquainted with Hon. Samuel Phillips, the founder of Phillips' Academy at Andover, Mass., and he was one of the first trustees of that corporation, which now includes the theological seminary. He was deeply interested in the early training of the children of his parish, and he regularly met them on Saturday afternoon in his meeting-house, whither they flocked from all parts of the town to be religiously instructed by their pastor, according to the order of the Assembly's Catechism.

In the Essex Journal and New Hampshire Packet of Aug. 27, 1788, is the following biographical notice, written, it is said, by Dr. Tappan, of Newbury, Mass., afterwards Professor of Divinity in Harvard University: "Mr. Hoyt,—The Rev. Mr. Stearns, whose death was announced in your last, sustained a character too great and too good to be passed over in silence. The God of nature had imbued him with singular abilities, which by the aid of erudition fitted him for extensive usefulness. His assiduous application to the work of the ministry was truly worthy of imitation."

In him shone an assemblage of virtues and graces which rarely meet in the same person. He had a lively fancy, a penetrating judgment, a correct taste, and a mind as expanded as the heavens. His conversation was ever reasonable, grave, pathetic, and instructive. His public discourses were replete with good sense, with important truths in a clear and instructive light, and received the approbation of the best judges. He despised pageantry without the appearance of affectation. He trusted to nothing mortal, pitied but envied not such as had their portion in this life. His advice in council was often sought and ever approved. He had a constitutional firmness, and was capable of the most dispassionate reasoning. He repudiated errors, ancient and modern, and rejoiced to the last in his faithful adherence to the doctrines of grace. Elevated by the purer sentiments, he ever possessed a mind calm and serene. God, who is all-wise in counsel, was pleased to try his faith and patience in the furnace of affliction. He died in the fifty-seventh year of his age, after a lingering and painful sickness.

He had two wives: the first, Sarah Abbot, being the mother of six children; the second, Sarah Ruggles, also the mother of six children, among whom was Rev. Samuel Stearns, pastor of the Congregational Church in Bedford, Mass., who was graduated from Harvard, and whose five sons—four of them graduates of the same university—have been eminent as preachers and educators.

William, the youngest son of Rev. Josiah Stearns, was born Nov. 23, 1773. According to the custom in those days of binding apprentices from the ages of fourteen to twenty-one years, he was legally bound to Henry Ranlet, a printer of Exeter. Hon. John Phillips soon became so much interested in the boy that he offered to fit him for college. William was anxious to accept the offer, but Mr. Ranlet utterly refused to relinquish his legal claim to his services. The boy saw no way but to accept the situation, and apply himself diligently to the duties of his apprenticeship.

Soon after he became twenty-one, with a partner he published The American Herald of Liberty, a paper that was commenced by Mr. Ranlet in 1785.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Stearns also brought out some other publications, and "in 1795 or 1796 he was engaged in printing, and also binding, the first edition of the New Testament ever issued in this State."<sup>2</sup> Probably but few copies of this edition were distributed, as the office was burned shortly after, and many parts of the Testaments were found in the street the morning following the fire.

A few years later Mr. Stearns removed to Epping, where he purchased a small farm, opened a store, and was appointed the first postmaster of the town. He held the offices of selectman and town clerk for many years, and represented the town in the Legislature several times. He was also justice of the peace, and his writings were noted for accuracy.

He was twice married, his second wife being Abigail Richards, daughter of Lemuel Howe, of Templeton, Mass. Her genealogy may be found in the family memorial, beginning with John Alden, of "Mayflower" fame. Their children were: 1, William Ruggles, who died unmarried; 2, Josiah Howe; 3, Mary Elizabeth; 4, Samuel Richards, who died in childhood.

The second, Rev. Josiah Howe Stearns, born Oct. 1, 1812, was graduated from Dartmouth College and Andover Theological Seminary. He married Eliza Kilby, daughter of John Kilby, Esq., of Dennyville, Me., where he was ordained and installed as pastor of the Congregational Church Nov. 6, 1844. Their children were: 1, Abby Thayer, married Frank W. Spaulding, M.D., a graduate of Bowdoin College and the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, now a practicing physician in Epping. 2, William Charnock, who died in childhood. After the death of Mrs. Stearns, notwithstanding the mutual attachment between him and his people, the Congregational Church in Epping, his native town, having been without regular preaching for two years, Mr. Stearns became its acting pastor, June 16, 1857, in which capacity he has served until the present time.

It is a singular coincidence that while his grandfather, during his ministry to the same people, preached the sermons referred to above in the interests of the nation during the Revolutionary struggle from the text, "Then all the children of Israel, and all the people, went up, and came unto the house of God, and wept, and sat there before the Lord, and fasted that day until even, and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before the Lord, saying, Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin, my brother, or shall I cease? And the Lord said, Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hand" (Judges xxi. 26, 27, 28), that the present minister during the war of the Rebellion was requested by Company A of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers to preach to them on the Sabbath before they left home, Aug. 24, 1862, and he complied, taking for his text, "And he said, My presence shall go with thee." (Exodus xxxiii. 14.)

Another connecting link between the ministry of the two exists in the fact that one of the last infants whom the grandfather baptized was received to full fellowship in the church eighty-six years later, in her old age, by the grandson.

Including the New Testament with what Paul says of the Old (2 Tim. iii. 16), Mr. Stearns believes that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," and that the best rule for public discourse is to take different classes of texts, containing the great variety of Scripture teachings, in the proportion in which they stand in the Bible, because God must know better than man in what proportion they are needed. Then he sees that following this rule is conducive to long pastorates, that thereby the minister may be duly active in the cause of temperance and every other genuine reform, and not be chargeable with dwarfing attention to any one subject. That his ministrations of the Word will be most productive of true converts, making stable Bible Christians, with broad views and generous aspirations, building up themselves on their most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost (Jude 20), to be established in every good word and work (2 Thess. ii. 17).

Mr. Stearns' genial manner and scholarly attainments have given him a conspicuous place in the Congregational ministry, while he is beloved as a pastor, and highly esteemed as a neighbor and citizen.

(The photograph from which the accompanying portrait of Mr. Stearns was engraved was taken some years ago.)

GEORGE W. PLUMER.

George Washington Plumer, third son of Governor William Plumer and Sally Fowler, his wife, was born on the old Plumer homestead, Epping, N. H., Feb. 4, 1796. He received a good common-school education, supplemented by a three years' course at Atkinson Academy, New Hampshire, from which he was graduated at fifteen. Here he had the association of two sons of John Q. Adams, James Wilson, and she who afterwards was the celebrated Mrs. Harriet Livermore, with others of some abilities, among whom he was equal in standing, in studies, and in social position. After his school life he engaged one year as clerk for Gen. Upham, in Portsmouth, from 1811 to 1812 or 1813. He then returned to Epping, and went into general merchandising in company with his brother Samuel. In this pursuit they continued until 1837, and were the leading business men of this section, having in connection with their Epping store a store at Gilmanton, another at Brentwood, and a manufactory of shoes at Epping. The country stores of those days were the exchange bureaux of the farmers. There the commodities of the farm or the forest were exchanged for the necessary articles of clothing and household supplies, and the enterprise of the merchant was the factor tending most to increase the wealth and prosperity of the section, even while seeking chiefly personal advantage. The principles of the men of that day were their convictions, the convictions of deliberate judgments and pure and unselfish patriotism. In these they were persistent and conscientious. Their glowing love of country, their lofty independence, their devoted courage, all were the results of close observation and close, connected habits of thought, the New England intellect following its habitual "ideas" to completeness in concrete matters. To deal with such men year after year from an extended section, to keep their patronage and their good will while working for profit, requires not only a high degree of business ability, but a straightforward honesty of purpose and integrity, and also a facility in reading men and motives, a shrewdness and practical common sense that would insure success in many more aspiring stations in life. These characteristics were shown by these our merchants in a marked degree, and the "Plumer Store" was well patronized and enjoyed the reputation of the utmost fair dealing, and the merchants were high in the esteem of their associates.

Mr. Plumer married Betsey, daughter of Samuel and Betsey (Gilley) Plumer, Sept. 19, 1824. The next spring he moved to his farm of sixty acres, which by various purchases and additions at last was enlarged to over two hundred broad acres. In the quiet domestic scenes of agricultural life he was engaged until December, 1837, when he removed to Epping, built the house now for so many years his home, on a part of the "old homestead," and retired with an ample competency from active business. He has been quite a dealer in real estate, owning lands in Illinois, Iowa, etc. Like his father, he has been a close and keen observant of the political horizon, and although keeping out of the active current he has been largely interested in the many and great reforms he has lived to see accomplished. In early manhood he was a Republican. This finally became the Democratic party. Later on for many years he was a Whig, and since then Republican. His first vote for President was cast for James Monroe, and he has voted at every Presidential election held since then, and at nearly every town-meeting. The only offices he would accept have been accorded him by a very complimentary vote of his townsmen. He has represented Epping in the Legislature, has been selectman, and nearly all his life, from an eligible age, a justice of the peace.

Mr. Plumer is a large man physically and mentally.

Of close, logical powers of thought, he is tenacious of his opinions, but has ever taken care that his opinions have a substratum of reason. He has always enjoyed the esteem of the better element of community, and although stern and unwavering in his opposition to wrong, believes that the reformation of the criminal and not the pain inflicted upon him is the object for which justice seeks. Consequently he would naturally be found advanced and liberal in matters of religious thought, and we find him, and his intelligent wife as well, in full accord with the doctrines of Universalism, and an able and chivalric supporter of them. His hospitable roof has covered many of its leading speakers, notably the celebrated Hosea Ballou and Abel C. Thomas. His home circle has been cheered by an amiable, loving, and devoted wife and his children,—George W., died July 11, 1881, aged fifty-four years; Sarah E. (Mrs. F. V. Noyes, of Billerica, Mass.); Catherine J. (Mrs. James B. Pierson, of Epping).

With his magnificent proportions, his erect figure, his locks covered with the frosts of age, George W. Plumer, in his eighty-seventh year, looks like a noble specimen of the hale, honest, and upright New Englander of a century ago, and we can but wish that the coming of the night of life may be in his case very far away. Confucius, in his five classes of men, describes one as "philosophers." "They are they who, in their words, their actions, and in the general conduct of their lives, never depart from the line of strict rectitude; who do right because it is right; whose passions are subdued; who are always the same in adversity and prosperity; who speak when they ought to speak, and are silent when they ought to be silent, having firmness enough not to conceal their sentiments when it is proper to utter them, although they should lose thereby their fortunes or their lives; who despise no one, nor prefer themselves to others; who are not content to derive their knowledge from ordinary sources, but, push their investigations to the fountain-head, so as to free their knowledge from all mixture of error; not discouraged when they fail, nor proud when they succeed." In placing Mr. Plumer in this class we will receive the approbation of those who have known him long and well.

DANIEL W. LADD.

Daniel Ladd was the first of the name who settled in America, and probably the ancestor of all the families bearing this patronymic in New England, and was descended from an ancient family of the county of Kent, in England, who were landed proprietors as early as the fifteenth century.<sup>1</sup>

He sailed from London, accompanied by his wife Ann, March 24, 1633, in the ship "Mary and John," Robert Sayers, master. He first settled at Ipswich,

Mass., where he was admitted a townsman, an important privilege in those days, and had an allotment of land. His name is the fifth on the list of sixty-eight who founded the town of Salisbury in 1638.<sup>1</sup>

In 1640 he, in company with eleven others, removed to Pawtucket, on the Merrimac River, and organized the town of Haverhill, in which he held a prominent position, and lived respected and honored to an advanced age. He died July 27, 1693.<sup>2</sup>

Nathaniel Ladd, the fourth in lineal descent from Daniel, the English ancestor, and the first native permanent resident of the name in Epping, was born in the easterly part of the town, near Lamprey River, in 1745. He married Mary Ames, of Canterbury, and built on the North River road a handsome house upon an attractive estate, which was occupied by himself and his descendants for nearly a century. He died July, 1798. His widow died in 1829. Their graves are a short distance westerly from the campground of the Methodist Association. He was a man of cultivated tastes, and published some essays on moral and economical subjects. He had James, Nathaniel, Daniel, Mary, and John.

James Ladd, of Hereford, Lower Canada, married Elizabeth Gould, of Hamlin, and had Mary A., James G., Betsey G., Nathaniel Gould, Zoroaster, Seneca, Eudocia, Ira W., Sophronia, William, and Susan Laurett.

Nathaniel Gould Ladd, M.D., of Malden, married Abigail V. Mead, and had William S., Helen, Smith M., Wesley, Mary F., Marshall, and Abie Josephine.

William S. Ladd, banker, of Portland, Oregon, married Caroline Elliot, and has William M. and Charles E., who are graduates of Amherst College.

Nathaniel Ladd, the second son, married Dorothy Smith, of Epping, in 1793. He died in the Island of Trinidad, 1818. He had Nathaniel, Dorothy, and Daniel Watson. Nathaniel, the grandson of the common ancestor, became a clergyman. He married Mary Folsom, née Gordon, and had Louisa, Mary J. A., Daniel W., and Olivia E. V.

Daniel W., son of Rev. Nathaniel, married Lucy Ann Dustin, and had Eliza Ann, who has received the degree of M.D. from Boston University; Nathaniel W., Joseph F. G., and John S., all of whom are graduates of Dartmouth College.

Dorothy Ladd married Winthrop Hilton, of New Market.

Daniel Ladd, of Stewartstown, the third son of the first Nathaniel, married Elizabeth Goodwin, and had two children.

Mary Ladd, daughter of the said Nathaniel, married Elisha Sanborn, of London, and died at the age of forty-five.

John Ladd, M.D., of Epping, the youngest son of Nathaniel, the common ancestor, was born Jan. 28, 1782.

He was a student of Phillips' Exeter Academy, when the death of his father occurred and interrupted the course of classical studies which he had intended to pursue in preparation for entering the medical profession. By teaching school he obtained the means of accomplishing his purpose, and commenced the study of medicine with the eminent Dr. Lyman Spaulding, president of the College of Surgeons, New York University, Western District, from which school he received his degree.

He was commissioned upon the medical staff of the Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry in the war of 1812. From 1806 to 1829 he was a resident of Lee, in the county of Stratford, where he was elected to various responsible offices. He was an active member of the Jeffersonian Republican party, and was invited to deliver occasional public addresses. He wrote with facility in prose and verse, and was a frequent contributor to the newspapers of the day.

His range of information was extensive, especially in history, philosophy, and theology. His opinions were broad, liberal, and hospitable to all forms of faith. At his house clergymen of all classes always found a cordial welcome, and it is worthy of note that there for nearly thirty years, with only incidental interruptions, a religious Conference meeting was held every week, which friends of various denominations in the neighborhood were accustomed to attend.

He married Profunda Robinson, of New Market, in 1806. Both died in August, 1845. Their children were Caroline P., who died in 1843, at the age of thirty-six years; John S., born July 2, 1809; and Mary A., born in 1816.

John S. Ladd, of Cambridge, Mass., a graduate of Dartmouth College of the class of 1835, and member of the Massachusetts bar, was president of the Common Council of the city of Cambridge in 1851, and member of the General Court in 1845, '46, '47, and in 1852, and of the Constitutional Convention of 1853. He was appointed judge of the Police Court for the District of Cambridge in 1854. His first wife, Adelia Babson, of Rockport, died June 6, 1842. He married Mary A. Butler, of Bedford, Sept. 5, 1847. Their children were Babson S., born Sept. 6, 1848; Mary Adelia, who died in infancy; Mary Butler, born Dec. 27, 1851; Allston Channing, born June 20, 1854; and John Franklin, Nov. 30, 1856. Babson S. Ladd, of Boston, a graduate of Harvard University of the class of 1870, and member of the Suffolk bar, married Ella Cora Brooks, daughter of Hon. John W. Brooks, of Milton, Mass., and has Paul Dean, born Feb. 16, 1880.

Story Butler Ladd, a graduate of Harvard University Science Department, 1873, and member of the bar of the District of Columbia, married Eliza Brigham Paine, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Holbert E. Paine, of Washington, D. C.

Daniel Watson Ladd, son of Nathaniel and Dorothy (Smith) Ladd, was born at Concord, N. H., May 21, 1798. His immediate ancestors were natives of Epping, as given above. When only six weeks old he was adopted by his aunt Lydia Watson and uncle Daniel Watson (his parents having passed away at that time), by whom he was treated with the utmost tenderness. His advantages for education were limited to the public schools and private instruction by Rev. Mr. Holt, pastor Congregational Church at Epping. He was a fine scholar, and diligently improved his opportunities. His rapid progress, literary tastes, considerate and affable deportment made him a favorite with his fellow-students and teachers. During all his active life, amid the many duties arising from various departments of business, he ever found time to gratify his taste for reading. He never made any pretensions to scholarship, nor boasted his intellectual acquisitions, yet he was, in the true sense of the term, an educated man and of rare culture. He loved the old English authors, and was conversant with ancient and modern writers, and held daily converse with the rich treasures of the Bible, which he studied for light and knowledge, and that book was emphatically a lamp to his feet. He commenced business with Daniel Watson, then a merchant at Epping Corners, and assisted him in keeping public hotel at the Watson mansion, supervising his large landed estate in Epping and elsewhere, and at his death succeeded to his property.

He was particularly fortunate in his domestic relations. He married Rebecca, daughter of Samuel Plumer and Betsy Cilley, his wife, in 1820. She was born Feb. 16, 1799; was granddaughter of Gen. Joseph Cilley, of Revolutionary fame, and is now living, her mental faculties unimpaired, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. Their children were Daniel W., born Aug. 29, 1824; Sarah P., born Dec. 27, 1822, died Feb. 24, 1854. She was a person of rare excellence of character, and her memory is precious indeed. Samuel P., died in infancy; Lydia Watson, born Jan. 28, 1827; and S. Plumer, born Feb. 19, 1829. Mr. Ladd was pre-eminently a business man; in connection with the management of his large landed estate he was for many years director of Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company. In legal matters many preferred his counsel to that of professional lawyers, and such was the confidence reposed in the soundness of his judgment and his ability that his services were always in demand, and much of his time given to probate business,—referee trials, justice cases, and as pension agent, in which latter business he was very successful, seldom losing a case.

He was an able and effective defender of any cause he espoused. He never under any circumstances yielded his convictions of right to the dictates of expediency, nor trimmed his sails for the uncertain breeze of popular favor. In sympathy, however, with every good enterprise, he was willing to go with the tide of apparent progress when its movements were to him in the right direction. In all public matters in which he was interested, his judicious counsel, energy, and perseverance assigned him a foremost position, while his keen logic made him a formidable opponent. His resolute courage, quiet nervous force, and indomitable will surmounted all obstacles without seeming effort. He was punctual to every duty presenting itself in all the varied departments of activity of his useful, instructive, and exemplary life. The crowning glory of his noble character was that deep, earnest reverence for and submission to the will and guidance of his Heavenly Father. No man was ever more truly a Christian. He looked through every act and circumstance back to the guiding hand of a Heavenly Father, and reverently said, "It is well." In all those intimate and tender relations of the family,—son, husband, father,—he was all that each of those names implies in its most noble sense. He ever gratefully referred to the providential hand which led him into the pure and healthful home atmosphere of his foster-parents, to the tender care of the beloved sister of his amiable and accomplished mother, who was every way fitted for the charge. These parents lived to see their fondest hopes and brightest anticipations realized, while he grew up to reciprocate, as only noble natures can, the wealth of affection bestowed on him by loving deeds and an unwearied care and tender devotion to their happiness and comfort in all the years of their lives. As a husband and father, he was kind, loving, indulgent, and the warm affection of his wife and children demonstrates its power and intensity.

He was a Democrat. This, in a man like him, means a close and logical analysis of the systems underlying political creeds, and acceptance of that tending most to benefit the world, and his warmest sympathies and earnest labors were for the perpetuity of the Constitution, which, like Thomas Jefferson and other exponents of Democracy, he deemed the bulwark of our liberties, and every departure from its teachings a wandering from the truth and a peril to national existence. Amid all the political storms of his period he kept the Constitution as his chart, and was firm and unshaken by the blasts of passion and prejudice. Never ambitious for official preferment, he declined inflexibly highest honors. At the Democratic Congressional Convention at Epping, where he was chairman, he was unanimously selected by the leaders of the party and urged to take the nomination for member of Congress, but he could not be persuaded, and giving his influence to his esteemed friend Tristram Shaw, he was nominated and elected. He once reluctantly consented to represent his town in the Legislature, serving them with ability and fidelity, but never again would allow his name to be used for any office. For his friends he would labor with untiring zeal, and here a prominent and marked feature of his character was shown. He was never envious, rejoicing always in the success and welfare of all.

From early years he was a prayerful student of the Bible. He read it as if God through it was holding personal converse with him. With all the strength and firmness of the early martyrs he believed in "the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," and lived a life of faith on the Son of God. His religion was in the heart, elevating and ennobling his entire nature. For years he belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Society, and was in full sympathy with it; but when political strife disturbed the holy air, and in place of the harmony and peace resulting from the faithful preaching of "Jesus Christ and him crucified" political faction and hatred took its place in the pulpits, he could no longer feel it his home. The policy of false expediency never held empire in his mind. He deeply deplored the severance of his church relations, but, strong in his conscious sense of right, he gave his example as an argument and a protest against such profanation. He ever sought the health and prosperity of his soul from him alone "who hath the words of eternal life;" and always from a child attributed his success in material things to his Heavenly Father's blessing, and was always submissive to his will. His Christian benevolence was as quiet and unobtrusive as the giver. None knew of his charity save the recipient. His love for education caused this benevolence to be manifest in a magnificent manner, as will be seen by this extract from his will:

"I give and bequeath unto Josiah H. Stearns, James L. Rindlett, and John L. Folsom, all of Epping, George W. Kitteridge, of New Market, and Perley Robinson, of Fremont, three thousand dollars, in trust, to establish and maintain an Academy for the instruction of Youth in Epping, to be located North West-ly of the public Cemetery, and to be called the Watson Academy, and desire them to manage and direct said school as a board of Trustees, and in case of a vacancy in their number the same is to be filled by the remaining Trustees."

Two prominent traits of Mr. Ladd are here brought out,—filial affection and gratitude to his dear foster-parents and a high appreciation of education. This last trait often caused him to give advice to young men, which brought rich fruit and was gratefully cherished. His only other public bequest was to the Epping Central Cemetery, for improving and beautifying the grounds, which was the last resting-place of the kind benefactors of his youth.

A single glance at the lifelike likeness accompanying this memoir will show the honest and earnest purpose actuating its possessor, and a strength of will and decision making a positive and rare individuality. He was a man of no weak convictions, but of high sense of honor, uncompromising integrity, love of right and hatred of wrong, tempered by the utmost affability, and a uniform courtesy and kindness to all, and a sincere desire to see others happy. His habits of life were simple and abstemious, free from ostentation. In personal appearance he was dignified, somewhat clerical, slightly above medium height, of fine elastic step, clear and full voice, and an entertaining and instructive fund of conversation. His health was always delicate, yet he accomplished more than many robust men.

During the last year of his life Mr. Ladd seemed reaching after every possible excellence, confidently leaning on his Father's arm, trusting implicitly in His mercy as a staff and a stay in his old age, as if conscious of his rapid approach to the regions of blessedness. Through the gathering twilight and along the shadowy way his faith and trust grew stronger; his spiritualized vision seemed to discern the mansion prepared for him in his Father's house in His kingdom above. Thus he fell asleep in Jesus, Easter Sunday, April 5, 1874.

S. Plumer Ladd, son of Daniel Watson Ladd, named in honor of his grandfather, Samuel Plumer, a brother of Governor Plumer, a man of wealth and influence, and of great intellectual powers, was born on the 19th of February, 1820. He was educated at Phillips' Exeter and Hampton Falls Academies. He sustained the character of a good scholar; gifted with rare endowments of mind, he was generous, sympathetic, and persevering; true to his convictions, an able defender of those principles he deemed to be right; a Democrat, and an earnest worker in the political field. He is a farmer, and resides at "Red Oak Hill;" married Sarah P. Dodge in 1853; has children,—Sarah P., Peter, Paul, Rebecca, Silas B. (died young), Lydia W., Evelyn L. (died in infancy), Ellen L., Clara M., Louis P., Laura J., Dexter, Harry, Samuel Y., and Cora B. Peter and Paul early evinced a creditable ambition to rely upon their own resources. Self-reliant, faithful to every trust, kind and courteous to all, they have secured an honorable record for integrity and truth in all their business relations.

Daniel Watson Ladd (2) was born at the Watson mansion in Epping, N. H., Aug. 29, 1821. He was educated at South New Market, Hampton Falls, and Hampton Academies, where he is said to have maintained the character of a fine scholar and a lover of books. He married Dorothy E., daughter of Jonathan Thyng, Esq., of Epping. She was born March 1, 1828, and died June 9, 1881. Their children were Sylvia W. (died young), Bina W., Charles W. (died young), Lizzie W. (died in infancy), Jenny W., Sylvia W. (Mrs. F. R. Hazelton, of Concord, N. H.), Daniel W. (3), and Alva W. Mr. Ladd is an earnest advocate of the education of the masses and elevation of the grade of instruction by the town, State, and nation. A total abstainer himself from spirituous liquors, he endeavors to raise all others to the safety plane of total abstinence. He was always a prohibitionist, ever a "woman's rights" man, and a friend to the progress, advancement, and improvements of the nineteenth century.

ALVA W. LADD.

Alva W. Ladd was born in Epping, March 27, 1862. He was son of Daniel W. Ladd (2d) and his wife Dorothy. He became a member of the Congregational Church when but eleven years old, and until his premature death maintained the high character of that sacred relation. At the age of thirteen he, with his brother, Daniel Ladd (3d), entered Phillips' Exeter Academy. At his entrance he was the youngest student of the school, but he soon displayed evidence of an unusual degree of talent and intellect, and in spite of his youth rose rapidly above his matured companions. He stood at the head of his class in moral, religious, and intellectual character, and was graduated in the class of 1880. He then entered Harvard University, and proved himself as capable there as at Exeter, entering with no conditions and three honors, a remarkable accomplishment. With the brilliant promise of a magnificent future his friends were forced to be content, for his devotion to study with a rapid succession of diseases sapped his constitution, and May 8, 1881, he died of hemorrhage of the lungs at nineteen years of age. He was active and enterprising, never being willing to submit to anything but the Divine Will, but always reconciled to that, even saying as his last hours passed away, "I am willing to go." The following extract from a letter written by Professor Perkins to Rev. J. H. Stearns tells more fully the esteem in which he was held by the faculty of Phillips' Exeter Academy:

Alva W. Ladd,

"MY DEAR SIR,—I am surprised and deeply pained to hear of the death of A. W. Ladd. I did not know that he had been ill, and your note was the first intimation I had of this sad event. He went through our entire course of study, and was graduated from our school, ranking in scholarship among the first in his class. He was a faithful, industrious, conscientious scholar, and made a diligent use of his opportunities. I believe he was a true Christian. He early identified himself with the work in the academy for cultivating and strengthening the influence of Christian character, and in all his course here was consistent with his profession in his daily walk and conversation. I can recall no word or act of his which was likely to exert an influence hostile to the purest and best Christian sentiment."

THOMAS FOLSOM.

The Epping Folsoms come from that branch of the family so long resident in Exeter. Joshua Folsom, born in Exeter, 1719, in early life a shipwright, married Abigail Mead; had two children born in Exeter,—Abigail, born 1744, and Thomas, born 1746. In 1746 he removed to Epping, became a large land-owner, built the first grist-mill at West Epping, and constructed many other mills all along the country to Sandwich, where he also built one. He was an active and very stirring man. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and from 1772 until his death a prominent preacher. He as such visited nearly all the Yearly Meetings in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, and it is said did more to establish his faith in Sandwich and form a society there than all others. He died in Epping, Dec. 20, 1793. His children born in Epping were Bettie, born 1748; Joshua, born 1759; John, 1753; Mary, 1755, married a Fry, of Kittery, Me.; Benjamin; Samuel; and Abigail, 1763, married Daniel B. Alley, and settled in Henniker, N. H.

Benjamin Folsom, born Jan. 6, 1757, had but three months' "schooling" in his life, but through reading and native ability became well read; remained on the old home of his father all his days; was a farmer and mill-owner, but never labored hard, as he was a life-time sufferer from asthma. He was once elected representative from Epping, but refused to serve. He never meddled with politics, was a quiet, peaceful citizen, and notwithstanding his asthma attained the old age of ninety-three years, dying Aug. 26, 1850.

He married, Sept. 14, 1782, Abigail, daughter of John Peaslee, of Newton, N. H., a lineal descendant of the distinguished Joseph Peaslee, the emigrant, who died in Haverhill, Mass., March, 1762 or '63. Their children were John, born Oct. 3, 1784; Mead, born July 10, 1785; Sarah, born July 2, 1787, married Israel Norris, of Epping; Abigail M., born Jan. 27, 1797, married first, a Jones, of Gilmanton, second, Timothy Hanson, of Farmington (see biography); Hannah F., born Sept. 4, 1799, married David Sawyer, of Newbury, Mass.; Thomas, born Feb. 13, 1802.

Thomas Folsom had the education given by the common schools of the first of the century, supplemented by six months attendance at the Friends' school in Providence, R. I. His uncle Thomas, from whom he was named, gave him a farm of two hundred and twenty acres of land, and he at once began practical life. He married, May 1, 1823, Sophia, daughter of Ephraim and Mary (Page) Morrill, of Berwick, Me. (For early history of Morrill family see biography of Charles E. Morrill, East Kingston.) After a number of years passed in farming and trading, about 1842, Mr. Folsom purchased the mill privilege at West Epping, then much out of repair, and constructed both grist- and saw-mills, still, however, attending to his farming. He was compelled afterwards to enlarge his facilities in both directions, and for many years of active life he attended to both. He still owns the grist-mill, but the business in both mills has been for some time in the hands of his sons.

The children born to him and his worthy wife are Maria, born April 22, 1824, married Eben Merrill, of Amesbury, and died childless. George, born May 27, 1825, resides in California; has four children,—Mary A., George F., Edwin, and Charles A. Alvira M., born April 30, 1827, died young. Charles N., born July 1, 1829, died young. Abby P., born Feb. 11, 1831, died unmarried when about twenty. Mary E., born May 23, 1833, married Levi W. Hoag, and has six children—George E., Clement H., David F., Albert B., Mahlon, and Walter. Thomas Charles, born March 26, 1836, married Mary Bickford, and has five children,—Mable A., George F., Edwin S., Charles A., Mary E. He is a farmer and lumber manufacturer.

David E., born May 15, 1838, now owns a large sheep ranch in Montana, where he resides; is a civil engineer, employed much of the time in surveying lands by United States government. He married Lucy T., daughter of Benjamin H. Jones, in January, 1878. Their children, George B. (died young) and David M.

Thomas Folsom has been much in public affairs. He has been an unwavering Democrat, has held all the important town offices, has been selectman thirteen years, auditor of accounts fifteen years, and was member of the Constitutional Convention of 1867. Plain and unostentatious, with a direct honesty of speech characteristic of the society of which he is a birthright member, probably no man in his native town stand higher than he in the regards of its best citizens.

JOHN LEWIS FOLSOM.

John Lewis Folsom was born on the old Folsom homestead, which he now owns, and where he has always resided, June 25, 1817. He is descended from Joshua Folsom, who came from Exeter and settled in West Epping in an early day. For a more complete history of Joshua Folsom, see biography of Thomas Folsom, Epping. Joshua had children, one of whom was Benjamin, born on the 6th day of the First month, 1757; married Abigail Peaslee. She was born Twelfth month 3, 1769. They had children, of whom John Folsom was one, born Tenth month 3, 1783; married Mehitable Morrill, who was born Fifth month 18, 1790. Of this union the following children were born, viz.: Ann E., Mary P., John L., the subject of our sketch, Benjamin M., all born in Epping, N. H., and all married. John Folsom was a farmer and miller by occupation, and a Democrat in politics. He was a member of the Society of Friends, as his ancestors were, and as his descendants have been. He died First month 26, 1846. His wife still survives him, and is now (1882) in her ninety-second year. She has been a recorded speaker in the Society of Friends for a great many years. She still retains her faculties to a wonderful degree, is hale and hearty, and her name is cherished by her many friends.

John Lewis Folsom received a common school education, supplemented with about six months at the Friends' Academy at Providence, R. I. He has always been a farmer, and to-day owns some six hundred and fifty acres besides having given his only son one hundred. All of this large tract lies within three miles of West Epping. His buildings are among the best in the county. He has not confined himself to farming alone, but has owned and run a saw- and grist-mill. At the present time and for a few years past, he has been engaged in the lumber and coal business. In politics he is a Democrat. He has been chairman of the selectmen of his town for several years, town treasurer many years, and representative to the State Legislature in 1857 and 1858. He has also been nagistrate of his town. On the 29th day of the Ninth month, 1842, he married Mary Ann, daughter of Moses Beede, of Fremont, N. H. She was born Second month 28, 1816. Their children are,—(1) Charles E., born First month 24, 1845. (2) Abby B., born First month 20, 1848; she died Twelfth month 28, 1851. (3) Evelyn A., born Eighth month 23, 1852.

Mr. Folsom is an enterprising and intelligent farmer, and one of the best citizens in Epping. Like his fathers, he is a member of the Society of Friends. His son was educated at the Manchester Business College at Manchester, N. H. He is a Democrat in politics, and as such, though young, has been selectman four years and town treasurer several years.

D. L. HARVEY.

Jonathan Harvey, a resident of Newburyport, Mass., about 1734, married Susanna George, of South Hampton, N. H., and removed to Nottingham, N. H. He was a soldier in the French war, and was in engagement at Ticonderoga, N. Y. His fourth son, Jonathan, married Susan Hedlock, of South Hampton, settled in Nottingham, was a farmer in moderate circumstances, reared a family of seventeen children, and died in 1845. His oldest son, James, born in 1780, married Lois Folsom Ladd, of Epping, in 1809, and became a resident of that town, dying there Jan. 26, 1855. He had three children who attained maturity, of whom Dudley Ladd Harvey was oldest. He was born Aug. 25, 1811, in Epping, N. H. He passed his early life with his father, a cooper and small farmer. He had limited common-school advantages for education. Has from early childhood led a life of hard and incessant labor, the first money earned by him being earned by cooping. This trade he followed for some time, but abandoned it for lumbering, farming, nursery-growing, etc. He began the world poor, but the results of a life of honest toil, with industry, economy, and business ability have given him a solid and worthy financial standing, showing him the owner in fee simple of more than three hundred broad acres of good farming land. He was engaged in lumbering from the age of twenty to that of forty. Was commissioned captain in New Hampshire State Militia in 1836, and served as such for four years. He was appointed justice of the peace in 1846, and has served four years as selectman of Epping, being chairman three years. He was for six years a director of the Rockingham Fire Insurance Company of Epping, and trustee of Epping Savings-Bank.

Mr. Harvey married April 8, 1835, Mary Swain, daughter of Jonathan and Sarah (Dearborn) Swain, of Epping. Their children were Mary A. and Jonathan Swain. The latter died Oct. 8, 1876, aged twenty-five years.

Mr. Harvey has all the requisites of a model farmer, and ranks with the leading successful agriculturists of this section. He has kept his eyes and ears open to all sources of information in his favorite field, and has become well and favorably known to a very large circle by his thirty years' contributions to the Boston Cultivator, Germania Telegraph, and other agricultural journals. He is an unassuming, useful, and respected citizen.

J. C. BURLEY.

The Burley family is of old-time Saxon origin, and the name has more than twenty-five different spellings, "Burley" and "Burleigh" being most general. Gyles Brodley was living in Ipswich, Mass., in 1648, and was a commoner there in 1664. He was a planter and a man of means for those days. Fol's History of Ipswich says he left a widow (Elizabeth) and children,—Andrew, James, Giles, and John,—who, however, probably died before his father. His will, made July 18, 1668, disposes of real estate and personal property, giving legacies of fifteen pounds each to his children, "to be paid in corn and cattle equally alike." James, above mentioned, born in Ipswich, Feb. 10, 1659, married (1) Rebecca Stacy, (2) Elizabeth —; removed to Exeter, N. H., where he became a resident, dying there in 1721, aged sixty-two years. Thomas,<sup>1</sup> third son of James, born April 5, 1697, had a son Thomas,<sup>2</sup> born July 2, 1723; died June 1, 1805. He married Sarah, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Gordon) Haley, purchased lands and settled in Epping, N. H., where his great-grandson, J. C. Burley, now resides. [The father of this Mrs. Burley was born in 1692, and attained the remarkable age of ninety-six, dying in 1790. In 1695, when he was but three years old, his father, Sergt. Haley, was killed by Indians near Saco Fort.] This worthy couple had eight children, the youngest of whom was Thomas.<sup>3</sup> He was born Aug. 14, 1766, became a wealthy and influential farmer, married (1) July 21, 1798, Nancy, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Hoyt; (2) May 18, 1818, Mary, widow of Ezekiel Brown, and daughter of Gordon and Mary (Prescott) Lawrence. He was a very strong man, of vigorous health and great powers of endurance, and was well esteemed by the community. Capt. Benjamin Burley, son of Thomas<sup>3</sup> and Nancy (Hoyt) Burley, was born April 10, 1803, married Nov. 7, 1826, Elizabeth Ann, daughter of Greenleaf and Jane (Nealey) Gilley, of Nottingham, N. H. She was a woman possessed of uncommon force of character, brilliant, energetic, kind-hearted, and greatly beloved sister of Hon. Joseph Gilley, of Nottingham, and Hon. Jonathan Gilley, member of Congress from Maine, and was born July 11, 1804, and died Oct. 3, 1876.

Capt. Burley was a leading farmer of Epping, was of medium size, light complexion, fine and curly brown hair, with a mild blue eye which looked squarely at you. He was a man of more than ordinary executive ability, conducted his business matters successfully, was intrusted with many offices and positions, both in town and State, and discharging them conscientiously, always had the approval of his constituents. He did not have a long life, dying June 26, 1861. Universalist in religious belief, the same broad charity which underlies that faith was the corner-stone of his life. "He believed in your goodness until you proved your own unworthiness, and even then his great heart threw out love to welcome back the erring. A friend once, a friend forever. A man intuitively given the guardianship of orphans, and ever the poor widow's friend. He could not see grief without extending sympathy and consolation to the afflicted." He was a diligent, noble, pure-hearted man, and when he passed away the whole community felt the loss. He had two children,—Joseph C. and Nannie Jane (born Nov. 21, 1832; died Oct. 3, 1855).

J. C. Burley was born on the homestead so long in the family, in Epping, N. H., Jan. 13, 1830. He received a thorough common-school education in his native town, inherited the landed estates of his ancestors, but was not content with the quiet monotony of a farmer's life, and in 1854 commenced his active business career as station agent of the Boston and Maine Railroad, at Newmarket, N. H. Dec. 17, 1855, he married Sarah E., daughter of Samuel Haley, of Epping.

From 1855 to the present Mr. Burley has been an exceedingly active and successful business man. Probably no man of his years in the town has ever done more than he, or been connected with more diversified fields of enterprise. On the death of his father he returned to North Epping to superintend the management of the home-farm and care for his mother through her declining years, and here, in a typical New England home, he has since resided. He has been chosen to fill the prominent and responsible town offices, and in 1878 was elected county commissioner, which position he still occupies. He has been chairman of the board since 1881. He was chosen a director of Newmarket Bank, under the State law, and with that and its successor, the Newmarket National Bank, he has been connected for a quarter of a century. He has been president of the latter since 1879. He has also been president of Epping Savings-Bank since its organization. In 1871 he engaged in partnership with Hon. Samuel Plummer Dow in lumbering operations, which were continued, and successfully, until Mr. Dow's death, in 1874. Mr. Burley was also an active promoter of the Rochester and Nashua Railroad, and assisted in its organization, and was chosen and is still a director.

Mr. Burley is probably the largest farmer of Epping; is largely engaged in lumbering, his present partner being Col. Winthrop W. Dow, of Exeter, Republican in politics, is a staunch supporter of the Union. Universalist in religious belief, believes in showing his faith by his works; and in all the various departments of his extended business he has shown rare executive abilities, and far-reaching sagacity. This is amply proven by the results; and his great success has been the natural result of his quick comprehension of a subject, his careful deliberation and conservative examination, and the steady tenacity with which he adheres to his course when he has marked it out. He has health to enjoy life, and a winning magnetism that, in a quiet way, makes him many friends. In private life he is characterized by modest and unassuming ways, great attachment to home and the home circle. His sister, Nannie, before mentioned, was a lovely character of refined tastes, and the same strong affectionate nature. She was educated at New Hampton, and between her and her brother existed one of the strongest attachments. Sociable and amiable, she was pleasing in her ways, had a large circle of friends. Mrs. Burley has been a congenial companion to her husband. Her willing hands, wise counsels, and ready and warm sympathy have largely aided in erecting the structure of prosperity. Their children are in the eighth generation of the American family, and are Nannie, born Oct. 5, 1857, married Harry W. Burleigh, of Franklin; Harry Benjamin, born May 26, 1867; Alice, Sept. 23, 1870; Jennie Ciley, Sept. 10, 1872; and Benjamin Thomas, Nov. 26, 1874. To sum up, Mr. Burley is a broad and liberal gentleman, faithful to every trust, generous and active in encouraging everything to benefit humanity or improve the condition of his town or county, and enjoys the friendship of a large circle of the better element of society.

JOHN HENRY PIKE.

John Henry Pike, son of William and Elizabeth Folsom (Hilton) Pike, was born in New Market, N. H., July 7, 1829. (For Pike family, see history of South Newmarket.) Quick and ready to learn, he took front rank in the district and private schools, which were his only educational advantages. When very young his father died, leaving his wife and four children in limited circumstances. Mrs. Pike kept her children with her and moved to Newmarket village to reside, but the illness of her sister, Mrs. Eliphalet Dearborn, of Epping, called her for a season to attend to the management of Mr. Dearborn's household. This temporary visit became a stay of years, which was only concluded by the decease of Mrs. Dearborn. Mrs. Pike was descended from Edward Hilton, grantee of Dover (see history of Dover), and was a woman of strong intellect, good judgment, and practical common sense. She was a successful teacher, and is now (March, 1882) living in good health and clear intellect at the advanced age of eighty-four, honored, loved, and respected by all who know her. Mr. Pike, then a young lad, accompanied her, and worked on the farm under Mr. Dearborn's supervision. He was a man of good judgment and ideas, liberal, kind-hearted, frank and outspoken, and the impress of his teaching and example in many ways was not lost upon the young lad earnestly longing to battle with the active world of business. When sixteen Mr. Pike worked one season as a farm hand for Nathan G. Prescott, father of ex-Governor Prescott; then returning to Mr. Dearborn's, he was ill for two years. He then engaged as clerk for his brother-in-law, J. H. Prescott, a merchant trading in what was known as "the Plumer store." Here his need was met, and he soon manifested the qualities which have made him so successful a business man, and finding it so congenial to him soon purchased an interest, and entered into copartnership with Mr. Prescott, under firm-name of "J. H. Prescott & Co." They continued in trade at the Plumer store for two or three years, and then erected a store and dwelling at "Boar's Head," whither they transferred their business, and, in connection with Robert Pike, started the little village existing at that point.

Mr. Pike, after a partnership of five years at that place, bought Mr. Prescott's interest, and continued alone until about 1853, when he sold out and removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., and engaged in trade as a merchant of hardware, paints, oils, etc. His business was lucrative, but his health failed, and after only nine months' residence there, by medical advice, he returned to the pure air of Epping, and purchased the Prescott place, where D. L. Harvey now resides. Here he worked as a farmer for two years, building up largely his health and strength. He then removed to "Boar's Head," and again began merchandising, which he continued "off and on" till 1860. He also commenced to operate in wood and lumber, buying wood lots, getting off the timber, and then selling the land, and was one of the first, if not the very first, to follow this as a business in the town. This business he still continues, and extensively, and he has amassed property rapidly in this as in all other branches of trade in which he has engaged. He was for fifteen years intimately connected with and in partnership with the late Hon. Samuel Plumer Dow, and in all their multifarious and complicated affairs there was never an unpleasant word or an inharmonious interview. He has also been connected in business with J. C. Burley, W. N. Dow, and others, and their business relations have but strengthened the ties of friendship. In 1862, Mr. Pike entered into trade at Epping Corners, but that business was given to his son, John Q. Pike, who is now in trade.

Mr. Pike has also dealt largely in real estate, bought and sold stocks, mortgages, etc., and has been and is the most successful business man in Epping. Yet in all his extensive and varied interests he has never been sued nor has he ever sued any one. Quiet and unostentatious, he has shrank from political honors and preferment, neither caring for nor seeking office, but has been town clerk three terms, chairman board of selectmen three terms, and town treasurer. Although often solicited to accept higher positions, he has steadily refused to leave his private business. In politics he has ever been an un-swinging Democrat.

Mr. Pike married Oct. 9, 1850, Eliza J., daughter of William and Deborah (Davis) Thompson. She was born in Middleton, N. H. Their children are William H., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; John Q., a merchant of Epping; Charles Edward, a druggist in Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Albert Hilton, a student in his third year at Phillips' Exeter Academy.

In connection with others, Mr. Pike started the Epping Savings-Bank. He has been chairman of its investing committee, and by his personal attention and business foresight he has made it a financial success, causing it to pay a dividend of five per cent. when other banks were paying but four.

The qualities which enabled Mr. Pike to rise from the poor circumstances of his boyhood to the position of wealth and standing as a business man which he now occupies (the largest tax-payer of his town) have been a keen, quick perception, an intuitive knowledge of cause and effect, a steady determination to do exactly as he agreed, keeping his word in business matters involving pecuniary loss, even though not legally obliged to do so. A case in point: In one of his early timber operations he verbally agreed to sell one hundred cords of bark at seven dollars per cord to certain parties. Within a few months the price advanced to fourteen dollars per cord. Notwithstanding this rise Mr. Pike delivered the bark at the price first named, thus voluntarily assuming the loss of seven hundred dollars. He is essentially a self-made man, and his life, although his health has always been delicate, has been one of steady and active devotion to business. His great success has been the natural result of his ability to readily examine and comprehend any subject presented to him, power to decide promptly, and courage to act with vigor and persistence in accordance with his convictions. In carrying out his designs for personal advancement he has been public-spirited, as is shown by his disposition of the George Lawrence place, where he now resides, where he has sold off building-lots, built houses, improved and beautified it, so that the appropriate name of Pleasant Street has been given to it.

H. B. BURNHAM, M.D.

Hosea Ballou Burnham, son of Miles and Salome (Hall), daughter of David Hall, was born in Chester, now Auburn, N. H., Oct. 15, 1829. Miles Burnham was born in Northwood in 1793. (His father's name was Jacob. He was son of Paul Burnham, of Durham, N. H., who was born in Essex, Mass.) He passed his early life in Boston, was a carpenter by trade, and became a merchant and hotel-keeper in Chester. He had six children, of whom Dr. Burnham was third. He was a steadfast adherent to the principles of political economy enunciated by Thomas Jellerson and others of that school. His death occurred Sept. 30, 1850; that of his wife Sept. 29, 1881. Jacob, the earliest of the name we can now trace, was a farmer in Northwood and Nottingham, one of the sturdy yeomanry of those early days, and with his vigorous constitution lived to the advanced age of ninety-two years, dying in 1836.

The Burnham family is of English ancestry, and the American starting-point is Essex, Mass. Dr. Burnham received his education at the common schools of Chester until he was thirteen, then attended Gilmanston Academy, New Hampshire Conference Seminary, at Sumborntown Bridge (now Tilton), N. H., and Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn. He began the study of medicine with the late William D. Buck, M.D., a physician of high repute in Manchester, N. H. He attended medical lectures at Berkshire Medical Institution, Pittsfield, Mass., Harvard Medical College, Boston, and Vermont Medical College, Woodstock, Vt., from which latter school he was graduated in 1853. During his student life he taught in the public schools of the city of Manchester.

Immediately upon graduation he opened an office at Lawrence, Mass., and entered into the general practice of medicine. His stay here was short, and in the fall of 1854 he removed to Epping, where he has ever since been engaged in the active practice of his profession. His whole time has been given to the demands of this practice, and he has been very successful, acquiring a high standing among the medical men of this section of the State, and is quite noted as a surgeon, having performed successfully many of the difficult operations in surgery. He has always been a diligent student, and has kept in the front rank of the progressive physicians of the day. He has been county physician since 1871, and has had entire medical charge of the Rockingham County Institution, and the insane asylum connected therewith. He is a member of the New Hampshire Medical Society, American Medical Association, and of the Rockingham Medical Society, of which he is president. He was appointed examining surgeon in the United States Pension Department, Nov. 15, 1872, and still retains the office.

Dr. Burnham has not remained an idle spectator of events, but has largely interested himself in matters appertaining to the improvement, development, and education of the community, and has been superintendent of school committee thirteen years. He has never swerved from the Democratic principles of his ancestors, but has held aloof from politics, having no desire or craving for political preferment; but has his fifth commission as justice of the peace, his first one being dated in 1855. He is a member and Past Master of Sullivan Lodge, No. 19, F. & A. M., of Epping, and is a member of St. Alban Chapter, No. 15, of Exeter. Dr. Burnham is a man of fine physique, of culture and refinement, and is possessed of more than ordinary social qualities that endear him to a large circle. As a business man he takes high rank, and has been financially very successful. He was first treasurer of Epping Savings-Bank, and is now one of its trustees. Broad and liberal in all things, he freely concedes to all the right to differ from him in opinion, but holds with firmness to his own, which is only adopted after a careful examination of the subject. He is Unitarian in religious belief.

SHERBURNE FOGG.

The Fogg family is closely identified with the early history of Epping. The first of the name moved here from Hampton, and settled near the centre of the town, upon the place now owned by Daniel W. Ladd, and a field opposite the Methodist Episcopal Church is still called the "Fogg field." This was Col. Seth Fogg, a tanner, shoemaker, and farmer. His first wife was a Philbrick. This family numbered seven children,—Sally, born March 7, 1758; David, born Aug. 16, 1759; Caleb, born March 17, 1761; Jonathan, born Oct. 4, 1764; Sherburne, born Oct. 17, 1768; Polly, born June 23, 1770; Seth, born Nov. 30, 1771.

The second marriage of Col. Seth Fogg was with a Mrs. Smith, and this union was blessed with one daughter, Eleanor, born Oct. 29, 1777. Eleanor married Dr. George Kittredge, of Newmarket, and was the mother of Dr. George Kittredge, 2d, who recently died at Newmarket. Of the birth of Col. Seth Fogg we find no record, but we learn from the family Bible of Sherburne Fogg that he died Nov. 20, 1806, and his first wife's death occurred June 1, 1774. He was a colonel in the militia; in religion a Congregationalist, but not a church-member. He was constant in his attendance upon church services, and remarkably strict in his observance of the Sabbath. He remembered the church in his will and left one hundred dollars, the interest to be paid annually to "a learned minister of the gospel." Also a like sum, the interest to be paid annually to a "grammar-school master." The ministry and schools still have the benefit of this gift, known as "Fogg's donation."

We find the name of both wives of Col. Fogg upon the records of the Congregational Church in Epping, showing that they were fully identified with that body. Their children were baptized by Rev. Josiah Stearns, pastor of the church at that time, grandfather of the present pastor. At the baptism of each it is recorded, "on the mother's account."

Sherburne Fogg was the fifth child of Col. Seth Fogg. He was twice married,—first to Mehitable Maloon, of Epping, July 15, 1792, when about twenty-four years of age. Her family came from Meredith to this place. She was born May 10, 1769, and died Oct. 3, 1835. Their children numbered seven, viz.: their first was a son, born Jan. 18, 1793, and died without a name, Feb. 27, 1793. Seth was born Dec. 18, 1793; Maria, born June 27, 1796; Jonathan, born Oct. 18, 1798; Franklin, born July 4, 1801; Jesse, born Feb. 21, 1805; Ruth, born Nov. 7, 1808. Ruth married David Fogg, and was the mother of Martin V. B. Fogg.

His second wife was Mrs. Hannah Sargent, of Brentwood, to whom he was married Nov. 14, 1839. Her maiden name was Hannah Hubbard. She died March 19, 1855, aged seventy years.

The farm and home of Sherburne Fogg was on "Red Oak Hill," three-fourths of a mile north from the centre of the town. It contains about one hundred acres, and was originally two farms, owned respectively by Benjamin Sauborn and Capt. John Chandler, father of Gen. John Chandler, of Maine. There was a garrison on this farm, the cellar of which can now be pointed out. Here all his children were born. He was a farmer of average intelligence, industrious habits, and accumulated a good property. In politics he was a Democrat. He subscribed to no particular religious belief, but the family attended the Methodist Church after its organization, and here he contributed for the support of preaching. It was his custom to give the early preachers stationed at Epping a tree standing in the forest, which, after being converted into cord-wood by them, he would draw to the parsonage. His last days were quietly passed in the family of his grandson, Martin V. B., whom he made his heir, and here, upon the farm where he had lived and labored so many years, he passed away, Oct. 10, 1857, at the ripe old age of eighty-nine years. The engraving accompanying this sketch is from a picture taken two years before his death.

M. V. B. FOGG.

Martin Van Buren Fogg was born in Epping, April 6, 1834. His father was David Fogg, born in Enfield, July 29, 1809, and died in Epping, April 18, 1862. His mother was Ruth Fogg, daughter of Sherburne Fogg (whose engraving and biographical sketch appear in this work). She died July 31, 1835. Their children numbered three, viz.: Lucy Maria, born Jan. 11, 1830. She married Davenport Morrison, of Fairlee, Vt., where she died June 16, 1868, leaving nine children. Andrew Jackson, born Dec. 19, 1831. He married Mary Emma Willis, of Exeter, and resides there. They have one son, David Fogg's second marriage was with Irene Burnham, daughter of Jacob Burnham, of Nottingham. She was born June 23, 1809, and died in Epping, Aug. 4, 1874. They had two children,—Lewis Everett, born Oct. 6, 1843. He married Ellen Pitkin Newhall, daughter of Rev. Matthew Newhall, of Greenland, June 23, 1872. They reside in Epping, and have one son, Mary Adelaide, born Oct. 14, 1852. April 16, 1874, she united in marriage with Harold W. Windram, of Lynn, Mass., where she died Feb. 20, 1876. David

W. V. Fogg

SHERBURNE FOGG.

Fogg's father was Jesse J. Fogg, born in Enfield in 1785. He died there Sept. 5, 1820. His mother was Lucy Pierce. She died in Kensington, Dec. 31, 1827. His grandfather was David, son of Col. Seth Fogg (see sketch of Sherburne Fogg). He was twice married. His first wife was Catharine Barber; his second, Ruth Dustin. David Fogg was for some years a landlord at Epping Corner, so was his grandson David in years after. The old hotel is still standing, and is known as the "Fogg stand."

Martin from early boyhood was a favorite grandchild of Sherburne Fogg. When fifteen years of age he went to live with his grandfather. Here he labored upon the farm, attending school in the winter. His education was limited to the instruction received in the district schools of those days. When he became of age arrangements were made for his permanent stay with his grandparents. On the 26th of March, 1855, he was united in marriage with Ruth Jane, daughter of Sherburne Rollings, of Epping. She died April 30, 1874. Her mother was Nancy Sanborn, of Epping. Two children were born to them.—Edson, born July 30, 1856. He married Georgianna, daughter of Dr. Sanborn, of Kingston. He died April 16, 1874. Emma Jane was born Sept. 7, 1860. The second wife of Mr. Fogg was Annie Martha Swain, daughter of Richard and Sarah Sherburne Swain, of Barrington. She was born Oct. 1, 1839. Mr. Fogg partook largely of his grandfather's characteristics. He was a practical, capable farmer, a man of excellent judgment. For over twenty years he was more or less engaged in dealing in cattle and wood and lumber. In politics he was a Democrat; has served the town as selectman, collector of taxes, etc. He died of apoplexy, March 14, 1882. His funeral was largely attended at the Methodist Church, the pastor, Rev. James Thurston, officiating. We quote from his address: "He was a descendant of an ancient and honorable family, among the early settlers of the town. It is something to say that Martin Fogg brought no reproach on the name. He was a man of fair intelligence, of industrious and thrifty habits, of honesty in all his dealings, of decided convictions, self-respectful, affectionately attached to his own, a true husband, a loving father, a faithful brother, a good neighbor, a respectable and useful citizen. And now he is gathered to his fathers, having fallen in the prime of middle life."

E. B. MOORE, M.D.

Edward Bucknam Moore, M.D., was born in Lancaster, N. H., June 12, 1804; died suddenly of angina pectoris, in Chelsea, Mass., Sept. 16, 1874. His ancestors on the paternal side trace their descent from Col. Jonathan Moore, a British officer, who is believed to be of Scotch origin. His sword is preserved as an heirloom in the family of C. K. Moore, of Parsonfield, Me. The colonel had two sons, Jonathan and William (1st). William had four sons,—William (2d), Coffin, Harvey, and Peter. These four came to America long before the Revolution (at what precise date is not known), and settled in New England. Their descendants are now scattered throughout the United States. William (2d) married a sister of Col. Peter Gilman, of Stratham, N. H., by whom he had five sons, among whom was William (3d), who was taken by the Indians in one of their incursions, and he resided or was detained among them for many years; Coffin (2d), Peter, Henry, and John. Coffin (2d) was grandfather of Dr. Moore, and was born at Stratham, Feb. 25, 1739. He studied medicine, and practiced with success to a good old age. He married Comfort Weeks, of Greenland, March 3, 1760. They had four sons and three daughters. Their third child was Coffin (3d), father of Edward B., born at Georgetown, Mass., April 30, 1768, and died at Lancaster, N. H., Aug. 22, 1842. He was at Lancaster about 1787, with Gen. Edward Bucknam, who was for many years the principal surveyor in Coos County, and whose daughter Mary he married in 1789. They had eight sons and three daughters.

Dr. Moore was the fourth child. His father was a respectable farmer, who spent the inclement days of winter in making and mending shoes for his family and for his neighbors. His labor and industry supported his family and gave them the best common-school advantages that his means and the facilities of the town afforded. The mother of the doctor was second daughter of Gen. Bucknam, and was born in Lancaster, N. H., July 22, 1769, dying there May 4, 1837. The general was born at Athol, Mass., June 21, 1741, and died at Lancaster, N. H., March 9, 1813. He married Susannah, daughter of David Page, one of the first settlers of Lancaster. They had two sons, Edward and George, and five daughters.

As an indication of the strong will and unconquerable desire of Dr. Moore to obtain an education, it is worthy of mention that up to his nineteenth year he worked upon his father's farm except the three winter months, when he was permitted to attend school. The two last winters he taught school. In the spring of 1821 he left Lancaster with twenty dollars as an outfit, and this sum saved from his labor as teacher. He went to Pembroke, N. H., where he fitted for college. Having resolved to study medicine, and meeting encouragement, he became a pupil (without a complete college course, which he never ceased to regret) in the office of Dr. Thomas Brown, of Deerfield (formerly of Manchester, with whom he passed four years), except the three winter months of each year, which he gave to teaching, to obtain the requisite means to pursue his professional studies and attend lectures. He attended one session at Dartmouth and another at Bowdoin, and was graduated as M.D. in 1828. He then went to Concord, N. H., where he opened an office and procured such books for his library as he could afford with his slender means; but after six months he removed to Epping, where he engaged in practice with good success.

He married, April 10, 1830, Elizabeth, daughter of Hon. Samuel Lawrence, of Epping. (See biography.) His business became large and remunerative, and he prosecuted it assiduously until the spring of 1847, when he removed to Boston, Mass. He took the office that had been occupied by Dr. Lane, a prominent physician, who had just died of cholera. His reputation had preceded him, and he soon found himself fully engaged in practice. He promptly identified himself with the interests of the profession and the city, and was chosen to fill various public offices. He was a member of the Boston school committee in 1849-50, of the Boston primary school committee from 1851 to 1854, of the Massachusetts Medical Society, of the American Medical Association from 1855, of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society from 1858, and an honorary member of California State Medical Society. He was appointed coroner for Suffolk County in 1858, a position which he held at his death. He was also one of the distributors of the Howard Benevolent Society for the last twenty years of his life. From an early period of his professional career he was a member of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows. He was also a devoted Freemason, and had received the thirty-third degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish rite. He gave but few contributions to medical literature, but he was by no means an idle man, nor wanting in literary ability. Dec. 10, 1873, he published his thirtieth annual report of the proceedings and workings of the Great Council of Masons of the several States.

Dr. Moore was a man of great probity of character, strong and stable in his friendships, devoted and untiring in doing good. As a physician he was successful and popular, because he sought to deserve honor by the noblest means, that of rendering zealous and intelligent service to those who sought his professional aid. He was a constant reader of the best books. He attended the meetings of the medical societies, and thus kept himself abreast of the latest and best means of relieving human suffering. He was not only well informed, but self-reliant and assuring in the sick-room, and was conscientious and faithful in the discharge of all professional duties. For twenty-four years prior to 1868, he was hardly ever without one, and had often several students in his office, and was recognized by all who knew him as the friend and patron of the young physician. He had three children, two sons and a daughter, the only one now living being Samuel Lawrence Moore, M.D., a graduate of Harvard, and a practicing physician of ability in Boston, who successfully continues the fame of an honored ancestry.

JAMES L. RUNDLET.

James L. Rundlet, son of Abraham and Hannah (Lawrence) Rundlet, was born Aug. 8, 1805, on the Rundlet homestead, in Epping, where his father and grandfather were also born. His grandfather, James Rundlet, was born Jan. 23, 1735; was one of the thrifty yeomen of his period; married Sarah Rowell, born Jan. 31, 1742. Their children were James, John, Mercy, Sarah, Abraham (born April 19, 1769), Anna, Molly, Rhoda, Dorothy, Jennima, Honor. Abraham was a farmer, always was resident in Epping, was diligent in his business, successful and much esteemed. He was noted for his skill in framing buildings, for which his services were much sought. He married, Nov. 20, 1793, Hannah, daughter of Edward Lawrence. She was born Nov. 30, 1770. Their children were two,—John, born June 11, 1795, died June 18, 1857, and James L.

James L. worked on the farm with his father, and acquired all the knowledge obtainable at the common schools of his youth; married, before reaching his majority, Elsie, daughter of Samuel Plumer (brother of Governor William Plumer). She was born Sept. 26, 1804, and died Sept. 8, 1839. Their only child, Elizabeth P., married Rufus Sanborn, and now resides in South Newmarket. Mr. Rundlet began farming on a part of the old homestead (two hundred acres), which his father divided between his two sons, and continued successfully in that until 1838, when he moved to Epping Corners and engaged in general merchandising, which he conducted with ability and manifested the needed requisites of a successful merchant,—integrity, fair dealing, and shrewd caution. He followed this and dealing in real estate until 1861, and was extensively engaged in the latter branch, owning at one time twelve houses and lots in Epping, and two hundred and fifty acres of land.

He married Olive B., daughter of John S. Rundlet, March 6, 1840. She died Sept. 18, 1860. By this marriage he had one son, Albert S., who died at the age of three years, and one daughter, Clara H., who married Alvin R. Thompson, a grocer in Epping. Mr. Rundlet also kept a hotel at Epping for several years, was always a farmer, and probably few have been identified with a greater range of business endeavor than he. He has a wide range of acquaintance and a strong circle of attached friends. He married Mrs. Harriet Winslow, widow of George Winslow, and daughter of Zebulon Sanborn, March 20, 1861. They have no children. About 1862, Mr. Rundlet went out of active business, and removed to the pleasant home now occupied by him, and which he built, and is now, at the age of seventy-seven years, blessed with a handsome competency, largely the result of his foresight, industry, and prudence; and in his declining years can look back on a very active life, with the consolation of having borne a man's part in the battle of existence, and winning success therein.

James L Russett

Samuel Laurence

He has been ever true to the grand principles of Democracy, never yielding to any pressure, but believing in the truth of the teaching of Thomas Jefferson and the other fathers of the party. His allegiance has been unswerving. He has been honored with the trusts of several responsible positions, was selectman several years, and represented Epping one year in the State Legislature. His careful and prudent management has been evinced in many ways, and he was always a wise counselor to those who asked his advice. He has settled numerous estates; is trustee of Epping Savings-Bank; was selected as one of the trustees by Daniel Watson Ladd in the management of the munificent bequest left by him to found an academy in Epping. He was appointed postmaster of Epping by Franklin Pierce, and held that office nearly nine years. His religious belief is Universalism.

All in all, Mr. Rundlet is a good type of the best class of our citizens, of worth and merit, but slow to place himself forward, but one of the strongest defenders of what he knows to be right, and may safely be classed as one of the representative conservative men of Epping.

SAMUEL LAWRENCE.

The first of the name of Lawrence who settled in Epping was David, who came from Stratham, then Exeter, and settled on the Exeter road, near "Boston Bridge." He was a farmer, married Annie Gordon, reared a large family, among them David (2d), Edward, Gordon, perhaps a Samuel, and Annie, who married a Morrill, and whose son, David Lawrence Morrill, was Governor of New Hampshire in 1825-26. Her other child, Samuel Morrill, became a physician and apothecary in Exeter. She afterwards married a Johnson, passed all her days in Epping, and died there not far advanced in life. David (2d), born in Stratham, or Epping, purchased the place now occupied by his grandchildren, of about forty acres at first, for a horse, saddle, and bridle; was a successful farmer, quite a large land-owner for those days, adding to his estate steadily year by year, owning at last one hundred and forty acres. He was positive in character, yet uniformly courteous and polite. Of strict honesty and integrity, his word was always to be depended upon. His townsmen held him in great esteem, and he filled various important offices, among them town clerk and justice of the peace. During the Revolution there was so much travel on the road passing his place that he was induced to make his house a hotel, which he did, entertaining many persons now nationally noted, Gen. Sullivan often making it his headquarters. He had a vigorous constitution, and lived to see several years past fourscore. He married, in 1765, Lydia, daughter of Joseph and Ruth (Mathes) Sias, born in Durham, Sept. 4, 1745. They had six children,—Sarah, married Joseph Clough, of Canterbury; Joseph Sias Ruth, married, first, a Clough; second, Enoch Gerrish, of Boscawen; David (3d); Jotham (his son, Alex. H., became a prominent lawyer in Washington, D. C.); Samuel.

Samuel Lawrence, born Dec. 26, 1779, in Epping, in the house built by his father, and used as an inn, as before mentioned, and now occupied by his children, had common-school education, became a farmer and a successful and representative one. He represented Epping in the Legislatures of 1825-26. He was of erect carriage, quick in his movements, like his father, courteous and agreeable in his intercourse with others, social, quite humorous, enjoying company. He always attended church, although not a member, and was anxious for every one else to do so, and had a very large circle of friends. He was a careful and methodical man of business, and of rare good judgment, and was often appealed to for counsel in knotty cases requiring a wise and cool head to properly solve. He married Betsey, daughter of Dudley and Alpha Thung. Their two children are Elizabeth, born May 15, 1810, married Dr. Edward B. Moore (see biography), and Rufus King, born April 28, 1815. Mrs. Moore was educated at Pembroke Academy, and married, April 29, 1830, Dr. Edward B. Moore, and now, a widow, resides with her brother on the home of her childhood. Rufus King received his education at Hopkinton, Hampton, and Greenland Academies, in younger years taught district school, became a farmer on the farm he inherited. About 1840 engaged in trade as general merchant at Epping Corners, continued here four years, then returned to his farm, where he has since been engaged in agriculture. He married, April 19, 1864, Laura P., daughter of Jacob and Anna Davis, of Nottingham. She died April 19, 1869, leaving two children,—Samuel L., born Jan. 16, 1865, died Sept. 2, 1881, and Annie E., born Sept. 27, 1868.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

EXETER.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlement—John Wheelwright and others—Names of Pioneers—The Exeter "Combination" of 1634—Wheelwright's Residence—Exposure of Exeter to Indian Hostilities—Edward Cranfield's Despotism—Exeter's Resistance to Governor Taxation—The "Mast-Head" Troubles.

THE town of Exeter lies in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by South Newmarket, on the east by Stratham, on the south by Hampton, Hampton Falls, Kensington, East Kingston, and Kingston, and on the west by Brentwood. The surface of the town is generally level and the soil fertile.

<sup>1</sup> We are indebted to Governor Charles H. Bell for the greater portion of the following "History of Exeter." Governor Bell has ever manifested a praiseworthy interest in historical matters, and has contributed many valuable additions to the historic literature of the State.

The earliest permanent settlement of New Hampshire by Europeans was made at Little Harbor, now within the limits of Rye, and at Dover Point, in 1623. How soon afterwards the more adventurous of the "fishermen and traders," who constituted the early population there, explored the river as far upward as the Falls of Squamscott we have no record. There is a distinct tradition, however, that there were residents in Exeter before the arrival of Wheelwright and his followers from Massachusetts in 1638. Whether they were occupying under the deed of the Indian sagamores of 1629 to Wheelwright, or whether the alleged deed of that date is spurious, are questions which need not be discussed here.

Rev. John Wheelwright, a friend and fellow-colleague of Oliver Cromwell, who had been vicar of Bilsby, in Lincolnshire, England, brought his family to this country in 1636, landing in Boston. The next year he was banished from the colony of Massachusetts on account of alleged "antinomian and fanatical" religious opinions, and in the spring of 1638 established himself, with several persons who were driven from Massachusetts for the same cause, with a number of his former friends and parishioners from England, and with others of whom we have no definite previous knowledge, at the Falls of Squamscott, to which he gave the name of Exeter.

Mr. Wheelwright at once gathered a church here and became its minister. He also drew up a form of civil government, which was essential for the peace and good order of the infant settlement, as the laws of Massachusetts were not in force here, and New Hampshire had as yet no laws. The instrument drawn by Wheelwright was styled a "combination," and was signed by the heads of families and inhabitants.

The following is a copy of the combination :

COMBINATION AT EXETER, 1639.—Whereas it hath pleased the Lord to move the heart of our dread sovereign Charles, by the grace of God king, etc., to grant license and liberty to sundry of his subjects to plant themselves in the western parts America, we, his loyal subjects, brethren in the church in Exeter, situate and lying upon the river Pascataquaque, with other inhabitants there, considering with ourselves the holy will of God and our own necessity, that we should not live without wholesome laws and government among us, of which we are altogether destitute, do in the name of Christ and in the sight of God combine ourselves together to erect and set up amongst us such government as shall be to our best discerning agreeable to the will of God, professing ourselves subjects to our sovereign lord King Charles, according to the liberties of our English colony of the Massachusetts, and binding ourselves solemnly by the grace and help of Christ and in his name and fear to submit ourselves to such godly and Christian laws as are here established in the realm of England to our best knowledge, and to all other such laws which shall upon good grounds be made and enacted amongst us according to God, that we may live quietly and peaceably together in all godliness and honesty.

It was modified after a time, and readopted in its primary form in 1649, as appears by the original instrument of that date, in the handwriting of Wheelwright, and signed by him and thirty-four others, now preserved in the town clerk's office.

Wheelwright's Church, which was of course a primitive structure and of small dimensions, was situated on the hill north of the house of Richard Bliss, Esq., and near the brick and tile manufactory of Wiggin & DeHoff. It was the fashion of that day to make a burial-ground of the yard which surrounded the church, and for many years it has been common to find the bones of the early settlers of Exeter in the clay excavated for the manufactory. Wheelwright's house is located by tradition a little southwest of the church, in the field in rear of the house occupied by the Misses Rowland. The first minister of Exeter remained here but about four years, when, upon the extension of the jurisdiction of Massachusetts over the settlements of New Hampshire, he removed, with some of his warmest supporters, to Wells, in Maine.

The people of New Hampshire remained under the government of Massachusetts until 1689. During that period Exeter was a place of little political importance, not being once represented in the "great and general court," as were Dover, Portsmouth, and Hampton nearly every year. Yet the material interests of the people were steadily on the increase here, and there were valuable accessions to the population. When John Cutt was appointed the first Governor of the province, Exeter furnished him one of his ablest councilors in the person of John Gilman.

Then came the eventful period of the Indian hostilities, in which Exeter, being on the frontier, was for a series of years greatly exposed to the incursions of the savages. Many of her citizens lost their lives and others were carried into captivity during this trying period of her history.

Exeter partook largely of the popular indignation that was aroused in the province by the tyrannical conduct of Governor Cranfield, and at a later date was the scene of a rather serious outbreak against the crown officials for attempting with a high hand to enforce the laws against persons charged with trespassing upon the forest pines marked for masts for his majesty's navy.

In 1682, Edward Cranfield came to New Hampshire as Governor. He soon exhibited himself in his true colors as a grasping, unprincipled despot. The people of the province feared and hated him, and when his arbitrary conduct became intolerable, some of them were so enraged that they actually entered into a combination for the avowed purpose of overturning the government.

On the 21st of January, 1683, the little village of Exeter witnessed a striking spectacle. A dozen horsemen, armed with swords, pistols, and guns, with a trumpeter, and headed by Edward Gove, a member of the Provincial Assembly from Hampton, with a drawn sword, rode through the snowy street of Exeter towards Hampton. A son of Gove and the brothers Wadleigh, Joseph, John, and Robert, Thomas Rawlins, Mark Baker, and John Sleeper were undoubtedly of the party, and probably Nathaniel Ladd, Edward Smith, William Healy, and John Young also. All of them were well known in Exeter, and the greater part of them were residents, and they made no secret of their purpose to rise in arms against the tyrannical government of Cranfield.

But it was yet too early for a successful resistance to the arbitrary measures of a royal government, and when next the good people of Exeter saw their insurgent townsmen it was after they had been tried and convicted as accomplices in the crime of high treason and had been, by direction of the crown, respited and pardoned. Though this lesson failed to teach Cranfield moderation, it showed the people of Exeter that they must adopt a less hazardous mode of resistance to the unwarranted acts of the authorities. In the course of the year the Governor, being disappointed in his designs of making great gains from his office, resorted to the illegal expedient of taxing the people without the consent of the Assembly. To John Folsom, constable, was committed the tax against the inhabitants of Exeter for collection, but he reported to the Governor that the people refused to pay, on account of the illegality of the assessment.

Thereupon the warrant was delivered to the provost-marshal of the province, who was ordered to collect the taxes or imprison the delinquents. But he found the duty no sinecure. He first went to the house of Edward Gilman, where he was met by the wife of Councillor John Gilman, who informed him that "she had provided a kettle of scalding water for him if he came to her house to demand any rates."

He received at the same time a like hospitable assurance from the wife of Moses Gilman, and other women took pains to let him know that they were preparing red-hot spits, so as to give him a warm reception. Some half a score of the sturdy yeomanry of Hampton, on horse-back and armed with clubs, then made their appearance on the scene, in order to insure that the marshal and his deputy should receive all due attention; and, to cap the climax, the Rev. John Cotton, at that time probably officiating as the clergyman of Exeter, joined the company, "with a club in the hand," the emergency seeming to justify a resort to carnal weapons.

The assembled party then began good-humoredly but systematically to hustle the marshal and his deputy up and down the house, and laughingly inquired of them, "What did they wear at their sides?" alluding to their swords, which were indeed rather ridiculous appendages on such an occasion.

The unfortunate officers soon betook themselves to the Widow Sewell's hostelry, ostensibly for refreshment; but their tormenters followed them there, and pushed them about, called them rogues, took the bridles off their horses, and then turned them loose, and in short made the place in a thousand ways too hot to hold them.

The marshal at length found that he had brought his wares to a poor market, and in despair abandoned the attempt to collect illegal taxes in Exeter, which, it is believed, was never resumed.

A half-century again elapsed before Exeter witnessed another outbreak of popular feeling. The sovereigns of England depended much upon their American colonies for ship-timber for the royal navy, and very stringent laws were enacted against the felling of any pine-trees suitable for masts which stood upon common lands. The surveyor-general of the woods kept a sharp eye upon all such timber, and marked it with the broad arrow, which denoted that it pertained to the crown. It may naturally be supposed, however, that the lumbermen of the frontiers would pay but scanty heed to the regulations which forbade them to touch the finest growth of the forests. When the surveyor's back was turned, it is probable that the woodman's axe spared few of the monarch pines, whether they bore the king's mark or not. The surveyors could not help suspecting, if they did not know, that the laws were disregarded, and jealousy and bitter feeling necessarily sprung up on this account between the king's officers and the inland inhabitants of the province.

In 1734, David Dunbar was Lieutenant-Governor and surveyor-general of New Hampshire. He was arbitrary, having been a soldier, needy and jealous. He became convinced that the lumbermen of Exeter were cutting about the mill at Copyhold, now in Brentwood, trees which belonged by law to his royal master, and determined that he would put a stop to it.

Accordingly he paid a visit to the mill in person, but while he was looking about for evidence of the violation of the law, he was greatly terrified by shouts and shrieks from the surrounding woods, and the discharge of fire-arms nearer than was agreeable. Dunbar therefore determined that discretion was the better part of valor, and beat a retreat. But a few days after he dispatched ten men in a barge up the river from Portsmouth, with directions to seize and bring off the suspected timber. The men arrived at the village in the evening, and put up for the night at the public-house kept by Capt. Samuel Gilman, the same house now standing on Water Street next to the Town Hall. After a part of them were in bed, and while the others were carousing there at ten o'clock at night, they were suddenly set upon by a party of men in disguise, who threw some of them out of the windows, and drove the others out at the doors. The party assailed made for the river in all haste, but in the mean time the bottom of their barge had been bored through, the sails cut to pieces or carried away, and the mast hacked down. They undertook to make their escape in her, but were obliged to return to the shore and hide until the next day, when they found means to return ignominiously to Portsmouth; but a part of them having lost their clothes, were in a particularly woful plight.

The party who were engaged in this act of defiance of the surveyor-general's authority were from the outskirts of Exeter, then a very large township, but included men of respectability and standing. Thomas and Nathaniel Webster, Jonathan, Samuel, and Philip Conner, Trueworthy Dudley, and Ezekiel Gilman are said to have been among the assailants. They assembled at the public-house kept by Zebulon Giddings, now known as the Rowland House, and there painted their faces and altered their dress so as to defy recognition before setting off on their expedition.

Dunbar believed that a part of them were Natick Indians; so it is probable that they adopted a disguise calculated to give that idea.

We do not learn that any further attempt was made to enforce the mast-tree laws, nor that any punishment was inflicted upon the parties concerned in this breach of the peace; but Dunbar was so mortified and enraged that he caused the courts to be taken away from Exeter, and bore a bitter grudge against the inhabitants so long as he remained in the province.

The earlier half of the eighteenth century was a severe test of the pluck and endurance of the inhabitants of New Hampshire. We learn that the winters were often of unusual length and severity. The labors of the husbandmen met with but scanty returns, and the domestic animals were terribly reduced in numbers by the extreme cold and the want of food. Exeter must have suffered greatly in these years, though, as the business of her people was not exclusively agricultural, she probably escaped with less injury than some of the neighboring towns.

After the extension of the settlements of New Hampshire which followed the close of the French war, there was a time of greater prosperity. Exeter, during the administration of the last royal Governor, was a thriving and important town. Governor Wentworth, who was fond of parade, encouraged the formation of a battalion of cadets here, officered by the leading citizens, and armed and uniformed in the handsomest style, according to the Governor's taste. Some of his Excellency's warmest and most trusted friends were residents here.

But when the first mutterings of the storm that led to revolution and independence were heard, the men of Exeter ranged themselves at once on the side of the colonists; and throughout the times that tried men's souls this town was the headquarters of the State, in both civil and military matters.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

Resolutions of 1774—Lords North and Bute burned in Effigy—Exeter in the first armed resistance to British Authority—Bursting of the War Cloud—Exeter in Arms—The First Company.

Revolutionary.—The feeling inspired in the breasts of the people of Exeter by the oppressive acts of the British Parliament, which led to the American Revolution, found utterance in a series of patriotic resolutions, adopted "almost unanimously" at a town-meeting in January, 1774. After specifying in indignant terms the grievances of the colonists, the town concentrated their views into the resolve, "That we are ready on all necessary occasions to risk our lives and fortunes in defence of our rights and liberties." These were bold words, but they were supported by acts of equal boldness, as we shall see.

The two most obnoxious of the British ministers, Lords North and Bute, were burnt in effigy in front of the old jail, which stood where the house of N. K. Leavitt, Esq., now is. We can imagine the exultation of the Liberty Boys at a demonstration so expressive and decisive. In September, 1774, when the inhabitants of Boston were reduced to sore straits by the operation of the Boston Port Bill, our town imposed a tax, assessed in regular form upon the citizens, and to be enforced by distraint, to raise money to relieve them.

But in December of the same year the men of Exeter were called upon to put to the proof their principles of resistance to tyranny, and were found equal to the occasion. A plan was devised among the bolder leading patriots of the province to seize the arms and ammunition of Fort William and Mary, at the entrance of the harbor of Portsmouth, which was then slenderly garrisoned, but which was soon to be fully manned. It was arranged that the party which was to proceed down the river, under the leadership of John Sullivan, John Langdon, and others to make the seizure, should be supported by a stronger body of men from Exeter, who were to make their appearance in Portsmouth in season to secure the withdrawal of the warlike stores in spite of all opposition.

Accordingly, a detachment of about twenty-five armed horsemen, under Nathaniel Folsom, Nicholas Gilman, and Dr. Giddings, left Exeter in the night fixed for the undertaking, and rode into Portsmouth about daybreak in the morning. They ordered coffee at the inn of James Stoodley, who looked with no small astonishment on their martial array. But they made no allusion to the business which brought them there.

About eight o'clock in the morning, James Hackett, with fifty or sixty of the bold Exeter boys, on foot, marched into town and took their station at the hay-market in Portsmouth, where they waited for orders. This, of course, created great astonishment, but little information could be elicited by any inquiries. At nine o'clock Langdon made his appearance at Stoodley's, and acquainted the party there that the raid was completely successful, and that Sullivan was then passing up the river in the boats loaded with the munitions which had but lately been the dependence of one of His Majesty's forts, but were ere long to be used against his authority by the oppressed and indignant colonists. Thus, in his first overt armed resistance of America to the British authority, the men of Exeter took a leading part.

The principal citizens of the town were open and decided in their determination to oppose the parliamentary measures. John Phillips, the founder of the academy, a man of learning, wealth, and cultivation, though little fitted by habit or inclination for strife, was firm and outspoken for the liberties of America. Nathaniel Folsom, who had been distinguished as an officer in the French and Indian wars, and who was a member of the first Continental Congress, was ready to take up arms in his country's cause at a moment's notice, and did afterwards render valuable service as a provincial major-general until he was, by reason of the unworthy jealousies of others, allowed to be dropped.

Nicholas Gilman, the trusted friend of the royal Governor, was no less firmly devoted to the defense of popular rights, and with his active and efficient sons, then just come upon the stage, was a most important and indispensable aid to the cause. He was afterwards the successful manager of the finances of the infant State, and the stay and staff of President Ware; and his sons became in their turn favorite and important officers of New Hampshire.

Enoch Poor had been for some years engaged in ship-building in the town, and, accustomed in the management of men, was ready to tender his best services in aid of America's cause. His appointment in the army was peculiarly fortunate for the country. He became a general of light infantry; was greatly esteemed by Lafayette and by Washington, and his early death was deeply lamented.

James Hackett was also a ship-builder, and as such labored for his country faithfully and well. He was appointed a lieutenant-colonel of one of the regiments, but his services could not be spared from the coast defenses. He did, however, serve in Rhode Island on one occasion as an officer in John Langdon's company of light-horse. Such were a few of the leading spirits of the town as the alarm of war was about to be sounded.

The famous expedition of the British troops from Boston to Lexington and Concord took place on the 19th of April, 1775. Early in the evening of that day a flying report of the affair reached Exeter, which was soon after confirmed by news received from Haverhill that the enemy was at Lexington, that the country was in arms, and a severe action had commenced, which was raging when the messenger left to alarm the inland towns.

Our streets were filled with excited men until a late hour at night. About daybreak an express arrived in town with further and more authentic intelligence. The bells were immediately rung, and the drums beat to arms. It happened that three of the leading patriots of the town—N. Folsom, N. Gilman, and E. Poor—were absent at Dover, but there were enough others to determine what part Exeter should take in the emergency. The unanimous voice was for every man who could possibly be spared to march at once to the help of our suffering brethren. John T. Gilman, then twenty-one years of age, was peculiarly active in forwarding the preparations of the Exeter volunteers.

Bullets were cast and cartridges made with all speed, and every one lent a helping hand. The women encouraged their brothers and sons to offer their services, and contributed their aid to fit them out for their hurried campaign. About nine o'clock in the morning, no less than one hundred and eight of the brave boys of Exeter were paraded at the courthouse (nearly opposite the lower church), armed and equipped, and ready to march.

"What road shall we take?"

"By Haverhill."

"Who shall lead us?"

"Capt. Hackett."

"Are you all ready?" asked Hackett.

"Yes," was the unanimous response.

"March!" was the laconic order.

One who was of that extemporized band of soldiers has left an account of their march. He says that the men wore sad countenances while taking leave of their wives and friends at home, but there was no flinching. Once fairly upon the way, however, their spirits rose, and they soon resumed their cheerfulness. They had a drum and fife, but no flag, for the Stars and Stripes were yet in the future. But they were well armed, especially those who had the bright muskets which Governor Wentworth had taken pains to provide for his "cadets," little suspecting that they were so soon to be used in rebellion against his royal master.

The Exeter company marched through Haverhill to the ferry, but found that town in great distress. A destructive fire had raged there only forty-eight hours before, consuming the finest part of the village; this, in addition to the intelligence of the commencement of hostilities, was particularly depressing to the inhabitants. At nightfall they reached Bragg's tavern in Andover, and passed the night in that town. Resuming their march at an early hour the next morning, they reached Menotomy at noon, and halted upon the common at Cambridge about two o'clock. Here they were taken charge of by some officers; their alarm-post was assigned them, and two or three rooms in one of the college buildings were given them for quarters. There they passed the first night of their military service, without even knapsacks for pillows, and the college floors, as one of their number quaintly remarked, "as hard as any other floors!"

The next morning the company made choice of officers. James Hackett was elected captain; John W. Gilman and Nathaniel Gookin, lieutenants; and John T. Gilman, Gideon Lamson, and Noah Emery, sergeants. The company soon after went through their exercises on the common, and evidently attracted no little attention.

The next day a report came that the British were landing at Chelsea. Capt. Hackett had the honor of being the first to receive marching orders; the company from Londonderry followed. They marched as far as Medford, where they were met by the information that the British had re-embarked. At Medford they found N. Folsom and E. Poor, who were going to the headquarters of the army. Gen. Heath reviewed the New Hampshire troops, and on Sunday Dr. MacClintock, of Greenland, and Dr. Belknap, of Dover, preached to them.

The Exeter Company remained at Cambridge not far from a fortnight, and were highly complimented by Gen. Heath. Then, the emergency having passed, and arrangements being in progress for forming a permanent military establishment, they were permitted to return home.

Exeter had also its Committee of Correspondence, charged with looking after the interests of the patriotic cause. An example of the work which fell to their share may be found in a dingy letter, which is still preserved, dated at Portsmouth, April 21, 1775, and signed by H. Wentworth, chairman, by which the committee of Exeter are informed of "the attack upon the people of Ipswich," and of the expectation of the arrival of two ships of war in Portsmouth, and containing a request for "four or five barrels of powder." On the back of the letter is a receipt by the messenger for four barrels of powder, which were delivered by N. Gilman and Dr. Giddings, together with a memorandum of sixty-eight barrels more in the possession of the friends of liberty in Exeter and the neighboring towns. This powder was undoubtedly a part of that which was seized at Fort William and Mary in December, 1774.

CHAPTER XXXV.

EXETER IN 1776.

Topography of the Village—Industries—Shipping—General View of the Village—Exeter the Capital of the Province and State—Adoption there of the First Written Constitution of the Revolutionary Period—The Powder-House—The "Provincial" Jail—The Court-House—The Meeting-House—Prominent Residents—The Revolution—Early Merchants, etc.

It is extremely questionable if one who only knew Exeter as it was in 1776 would be able to recognize the Exeter of to-day as the same place. The conformation of the ground in the vicinity of the river and falls must have greatly changed. The slope from the higher lands down to the water was formerly much more abrupt than it now is. The ridges have since been cut down, and the low ground filled up. A century ago, in very high tides, the western part of Water Street used to be inundated, so that boats could be rowed through it for a considerable distance. The road to Newmarket, in the earlier times, did not run down by the water's edge, but back from it, over the high land. The fact that the bed of Water Street has been artificially raised was demonstrated by an excavation made not long since in front of Messrs. Porter & Thyn's store, which exposed a stratum of gravel several feet in thickness, evidently deposited there by successive generations of highway surveyors.

And if we can believe the accounts that have been handed down, there has been a still deeper fill in front of where Mr. John W. Getchell's store now is. The house of Col. John Phillips was built there, more than a century ago, and was destroyed by fire only a few years since. When the house was erected, the front is said to have been three stories in height; within the memory of those now on the stage only two stories have ever been visible, and the lower one of those was sunken at the last considerably below the level of the sidewalk. If the case was as represented, it is plain that Water Street at that point has been built up at least a dozen feet above its original level. But it is proper to say that the foundations of the house which were exposed when Mr. Getchell's building was erected do not appear to confirm the tradition. Still, there can be no doubt that the street has been a good deal raised there, if not so much as the height of a story of a house.

The change in the character of the public highways since 1776 is worthy of special notice. For many years before the Revolution the lumber trade was the chief business of the town. Vast quantities of the choicest spoils of the forest were brought each year from inland points to the Exeter landing, a part to be used for the construction of ships here, and the remainder to be rafted or otherwise transported down the river. The greater share of the money raised for the repair of the highways was expended on the roads towards Brentwood and Epping, over which the staple commodity in which our citizens were so deeply interested was hauled to tide-water and a market. The result of it was that the other ways were sadly neglected. Fortunately this was of less consequence from the fact that most of the travel at that period was upon horseback. The river, too, served admirably as a public highway in former times between the settlements upon its banks. So long as people could do their business by means of boats, they were not so particular about the condition of the roads.

The basin of the Salt River sixscore years ago presented a far busier scene than it does to-day. The channel was then capable of affording a passage to vessels of considerable size, and ships of from two hundred to five hundred tons burden were built here, six or eight of them each season, it is said. Several vessels were owned here, and made voyages along the coast, and to the West Indies and Europe. With ships unloading their cargoes at our wharves, with carpenters and calkers plying their busy trades in our ship-yards, and with long lines of teams dragging the mighty pines to the river-side, the spectacle must have been full of life and animation. Perhaps something of the same sort may again be realized when the obstructions to the navigation of the Squamscot shall be removed.

As the Revolution drew nigh the lumber trade declined, and the business activity of the place diminished. The breaking out of hostilities sent some of the most enterprising citizens into the army; commerce was suspended and ship-building was no longer lucrative. The mechanics became soldiers or sought employment elsewhere, and Exeter, its limited resources drawn upon to the utmost to sustain the war, looked forward with anxious hope to the issue that was to bring peace and restore prosperity.

Of course there were no sidewalks in 1776; those have come in mostly within the last half-century. A few shade-trees then flung their protecting arms over a part of the village, some of which are still standing, or have but recently disappeared. A giant elm here and there remains to tell the story of the past century, and some sturdy buttonwoods of equal, if not superior, age on both sides of the great bridge succumbed to disease, and were cut down within the recollection of many persons. But the great bulk of our present ornamental trees are of more recent date even than the sidewalks.

The size and extent of the village was of course much less a hundred years since than now. The entire population of the town at that period did not quite reach seventeen hundred and fifty souls, which is something less than one-half what it now is. And as a large proportion of the inhabitants lived in the less compact parts of the town, the village could not have greatly exceeded one-third its present dimensions. The character of the buildings, too, was generally inferior. To be sure the best of them were spacious, handsome, and constructed from the choicest materials, as a few surviving specimens still attest: but probably the major part of them must have been comparatively small and poor. Unpainted houses were the rule then; they are the exceptions now. On the southerly side of Front Street there used to be nothing but fields and woods; Bow, Court, Elm, Elliott, and Pine Streets, with all their branches, are the growth of little more than forty years last past.

In 1776 Exeter could boast but two churches, and those both Congregational; nor was there either academy or seminary then. But in the article of public-houses a hundred years have probably given us no increase. There were then two taverns on the east side of the river, and the whole number was no doubt greater than it is now. This is to be explained by the different habits of the earlier generation. Auction sales and many kinds of public business were formerly transacted at the inns, as they were usually called. They were places where the citizens of all classes used to meet, especially in the evenings, and the convivial habits of the past age contributed essentially to their being well patronized. Exeter during the period of the Revolution was a place of great resort, and as those were not days when men could whirl into town from their homes by the train in the morning, and whirl back again to their own firesides in the evening, nearly every visitor here had to pass a night or two under the roof of one or another of our hospitable landlords.

Exeter a century ago had but just assumed the position in the province to which its size and importance entitled it. Forty years before, the town had become an object of jealousy and dislike to some of the dignitaries under the crown at Portsmouth, and in consequence thereof had been tabooed and "left out in the cold," so far as it was in their power to accomplish it. The last royal Governor, John Wentworth, however, was too sensible and politic to allow his conduct to be influenced by an old grudge. He took particular pains to conciliate the inhabitants of Exeter, visited the town repeatedly in much state, formed and commissioned a company of cadets here, embracing many leading men, as a kind of body-guard to the occupant of the gubernatorial office, and established relations of intimacy with several of the prominent citizens.

He labored zealously and conscientiously for the good of the province, and at the same time to uphold the power of Britain over it. He hoped no doubt that his special friends in Exeter might adhere to the cause of the crown, as so many of his connections and dependents in Portsmouth did. But he reckoned without his host. When the tocsin of war was sounded Exeter might be said to be a unit on the side of liberty, and the men whom Governor Wentworth had delighted to honor were the first to declare in favor of their oppressed country.

Exeter then became, and remained for many years, the capital of the province and State. The Legislature held its sessions here, and during its adjournments the Committee of Safety took its place, and exercised its functions. The courts were again established here, and the town became practically the headquarters of all military undertakings in which New Hampshire was concerned. And here on the 5th day of January, 1776, was adopted and put in operation the first written Constitution for popular government of the Revolutionary period. The honor of taking the lead of her sister colonies in this momentous "new departure" belongs to New Hampshire, and Exeter may well be proud to have been the scene of an occurrence so interesting and so memorable.

The structure in our town which has perhaps retained its old-time appearance most perfectly for the past century is the powder-house, situated on the point near the river on the east side. It was built about 1760, and has apparently undergone little repair since that time. It probably first held military stores destined for the French and Indian war, which, however, terminated before they could have been much needed. A few years later it was opened, no doubt, to receive a part of the powder captured by the provincials in the raid, under Sullivan, upon Fort William and Mary in Portsmouth Harbor in December, 1774. But as powder without ball hardly met the requirements of the times, the selectmen of Exeter purchased lead for the "town stock" from John Emery, and sent for a further supply to Portsmouth by Theodore Carlton; employed Thomas Gilman to "run it into bullets," and finally stored the leaden missiles in a chest, which Peter Folsom made for the purpose, at the cost of three and sixpence. The ammunition was dealt out from time to time to other places which stood in greater need, very sparingly though; for notwithstanding Exeter had a powder-mill in 1776, the explosive dust was too precious to be wasted through a large part of the Revolutionary war.

The old powder-house is now somewhat weather-beaten and dilapidated, and perhaps past its usefulness; but we hope it may be spared, on account of the good service it has done in former days. May no vandal hand be laid upon it, but may it remain a landmark for many years to come!

Another prominent object on the east side, which survived until a recent date, was the jail, on the spot now occupied by the house of Mr. N. K. Leavitt. It is supposed to have been built about the year 1770, when the province was divided into counties. It was a wooden structure, of limited capacity, and at first was surrounded by no exterior fence or wall. It could not have been a very secure place of confinement for a person of ingenuity and resources; and indeed more than one prisoner made his escape from it. The notorious Henry Tufts, who published his memoirs thirty years afterwards, tells us that he was incarcerated there before the Revolution, and made his way out without much difficulty. After 1775 the jail became crowded; not only were the persons in this province suspected of disaffection to the American cause committed there, but Tories from other jurisdictions, counterfeiters of the colonial paper money, and deserters and skulkers from the Continental army. So much apprehension was then felt that the building was not strong enough to contain its inmates that armed guards were constantly stationed at the door.

The court-house, known also as the town-house and State-house, stood at what is now the easterly corner of Front and Court Streets, on the site of the dwelling of the late Mr. Joseph Boardman. The building had formerly been the meeting-house of the first parish. When it was moved across the street and devoted to judicial purposes, it was flanked by the stocks and the whipping-post. Possibly the former instrument of discipline may have disappeared before 1776, but the latter undoubtedly lasted till then. The horse-thief Tufts was flogged there shortly before that date, unfortunately without eradicating his inborn propensity to appropriate unlawfully the property of other people to his own use.

One of the town schools (for the excellence of which Exeter was early noted) was long kept in this town-house. A "grammar school" was likewise maintained at the expense of the town in 1775-76, under the charge of Clement Weeks, a room being hired of Samuel Davis for the purpose.

The town- and court-house was the place of assembly for the Legislature of New Hampshire, whence it received the additional name of State-house. Its halls in the "times that tried men's souls" continually echoed to the tread of the wisest and bravest of the dwellers among our granite hills. Sullivan and Folsom, Stark and Poor, Cilley and Scammell, Dearborn and Reid, in their military attire of blue and buff, often trailed their swords along its corridors; while Weare and Langdon, Gilman and Bartlett, Thornton and Whipple, and a host of other patriots in civil life assembled periodically within its walls to devise the ways and means for keeping an army in the field, until the power of Britain was at length broken, and peace crowned the independence of America.

The meeting-house of the first parish occupied nearly the same spot which its successor, the present church, does now. But the yard which surrounded it was then of greater extent, and was filled with substantial stone monuments, bearing inscriptions in memory of the dead who were interred beneath. A number of years ago those monuments were carefully leveled with the ground, placed above the bodies they were intended to commemorate, and thinly covered with earth. The rank grass soon sprang up and obliterated all traces of the burying-ground. Subsequently the street was widened in front, and it is understood that the present sidewalk passes over a portion of what was formerly the churchyard. The good taste and propriety of these alterations has been questioned by some of the present generation, we believe; but there is a consolation in the reflection that the memorial stones were neither destroyed nor removed from their proper locations, so that should occasion require, the information they contain can at any time hereafter be made available.

A portion of the main floor of the old meeting-house was left open to all worshipers indiscriminately, except that the men and women occupied different sides. Comparatively few persons had private seats. The privilege of erecting a pew was highly prized it would appear, for in 1775 the rights to build three of them in the meeting-house were sold at auction to the highest bidders, and realized handsome premiums.

The services in the religious meetings at that period were conducted in most respects as in our own day. We no longer have tithingmen, however, to look after the sleepers and the uneasy youngsters in sermon time. And we do have church-organists and an abundance of hymn-books, which our predecessors did not, by reason of which there has been an essential change in the style and manner of the sacred music. The "pitch pipe" alone was formerly employed to "set the tune," and in good old Deacon Brooks' day the hymn in the first church was "deaconed" out, a line at a time, before it was sung by the choir.

In 1776 the meeting-house was opened on two occasions of peculiar interest to the society. The first was on the 14th of March, when funeral services were performed over the remains of the Rev. Woodbridge Odlin, who had been the pastor of the church for many years. We learn from a contemporary record that a great congregation assembled to witness the solemn ceremony, for the deceased clergyman was highly esteemed.

The other occasion was on the 9th of October, when the Rev. Isaac Mansfield, of Marblehead, Mass., was ordained as the successor of Mr. Odlin. The Rev. Messrs. Thayer, of Hampton, Fogg, of Kensington, and Webster and Noyes, of Salisbury, were present and took part in the exercises. Ordinations were great events in the last century, and we read of one in a town in Massachusetts during the Revolution where the Council during their session disposed of no less than thirty-eight mugs of flip, twenty-four mugs of cider, eleven gills of rum bitters, and two mugs of sling! But we have no reason to suppose that the good clergymen and brethren who assisted on the occasion referred to in our town found it such thirsty work. On the contrary, it seems to have been accomplished with all due decorum.

It may be necessary to remind readers of the present day that houses of worship a hundred years ago contained neither fireplaces, stoves, nor other heating apparatus. The congregation, so far as temperature was concerned, were not much more comfortable in the winter season in-doors than out. But the generation of that day was brought up to bear hardships without complaint. The good mother, within the remembrance of people not aged, used to rely upon a few coals in a foot-stove to keep up the vital heat, and perhaps the youngest child was bundled up so as to be kept comfortable; but the big boys had to take the severity of the weather seated on the bare boards, with little protection in the way of extra clothing. It is a question how large the attendance in our churches would be if the old fashion of cold rooms were to be resumed. Luckily for the enjoyment as well as for the size of the congregations, in the matter of conveniences and comforts there is no retrogression. Improvements once introduced become necessities; and New England will never go back to cold churches.

The meeting-house of the first parish had long been provided with a bell, and the town books inform us that in 1776 it was daily rung by Pompey Peters at one and nine o'clock P.M., according to ancient custom, which has also been continued down to our own day.

The present church was not built till more than twenty years after that date. It has been much admired for its architectural proportions, and is undoubtedly a fine specimen of the ecclesiastical edifices of the last century. Having fortunately escaped destruction by fire, which recently threatened to consume it, it is to be hoped it may now safely survive its centennial in perfect strength and condition.

The other meeting-house in the Exeter of 1776 was that of the second parish, and stood on the lot now occupied by Mrs. Cobb's house. It was a building of ample size, and had resounded to the voice of the eloquent Whitefield in former years. It has now been gone for more than a generation, and the church in the academy yard is its lineal successor.

No other place of religious worship existed in the town a century ago, unless the few Quakers who lived here and in the vicinity may still have occasionally held meetings. Twenty years before, they are said to have used a building which stood upon Front Street, where now the residences of Mr. J. M. Lovering and Mrs. Kennard are, as the place for their dumb devotions. No doubt they here received occasional visits from itinerant brethren of their sect, who in "good old colony times" perambulated the whole country, and kept up communication and interest between the families and communities of Friends in every section. In the Revolutionary times, however, the peaceful principles of the Quakers became unpopular, and their numbers here had probably dwindled, so that it may be doubtful if the small remainder did any acts to attract public attention.

The residence of the Rev. Woodbridge Odlin was in Front Street, on or near the spot where the house of Mr. B. L. Merrill now stands. Mr. Odlin's father, the Rev. John Odlin, lived there before him, and the Rev. John Clark occupied the same premises at a still earlier date, and as the Rev. Dr. Isaac Hurd subsequently passed some forty years of his life in the same place, it would be difficult, probably, to find another lot of land in New England which has been the home of successive clergymen for so long a period. The Rev. Woodbridge Odlin is described as partly in person, and a perfect gentleman in his conduct and deportment. He was outspoken in his patriotic sentiments.

The Rev. Mr. Mansfield, his successor, lived not far from the locality where Mr. Charles Conner's house now is.

The Rev. Daniel Rogers, the pastor of the second parish, was a very estimable man, and possessed much learning. During the long term of his residence here he kept a daily journal of occurrences, which our local antiquaries, a generation ago, greatly relied on as containing materials for the history of the town that somebody has been always going to write. What has now become of that journal we know not. It is to be hoped that it has been somewhere safely preserved, for the loss of it would be irreparable. Too many interesting facts respecting the olden times have already passed into oblivion.

Mr. Rogers lived in a house that formerly stood about where the entrance to Franklin Street now is. It faced towards Water Street, and was long ago removed to another situation.

The "great bridge," perhaps the grandfather of the present one, spanned the river in 1776, as at present. Of course it did not receive its designation from its abstract magnitude, but by way of distinction from its neighbor, the "string bridge," which, much less than a century ago, consisted of merely a single string-piece of timber flanked by a hand-rail, over which only pedestrians could pass.

The next house to the Rev. Mr. Rogers', probably on the west, was that of "Brigadier" Peter Gilman, as he was universally called. It is still standing, and is now the residence of Mr. Manly Darling. It was built by Councillor John Gilman, if we may credit tradition, near two centuries ago, and is undoubtedly the oldest structure in the town. The main body, which was the original edifice, has its walls composed of squared logs, making it what was called a garrison house, for protection against the attacks of the Indians. It was formerly much more quaint in its external appearance than now; but the interior is still worthy of inspection, as an example of the primitive domestic architecture of the country. The front wing, which has been for several years occupied as a store, is an addition of later date, made by the brigadier.

Peter Gilman's career extended back to an early period in the history of Exeter, he having been born in 1703, and as he lived to the good old age of eighty-five, he witnessed many changes, and in the end very great improvements, in his native town. He was for a long period a leading citizen. He had the command of a regiment in the French war and served with much credit, receiving subsequently the honor of a brigadier-general's commission. For twelve successive years he was Speaker of the Assembly of the province, and in 1772 and 1773 he was a member of the Governor's Council. He was undoubtedly inclined to question the expediency of resisting the royal authority, and in 1775 was required by the Provincial Congress to confine himself to the town of Exeter, and not depart thence without the consent of the proper authorities. But he was evidently not looked upon as a dangerous foe to liberty, and his scruples appear to have been respected by those who took the opposite side. His fellow-citizens chose him moderator in 1775, which could hardly have been done if he had been a Tory in the worst sense of the term.

Brigadier Gilman was a great admirer of Whitefield, and an amusing story is told of the power of the great preacher's eloquence upon him and others, causing them to roll upon the floor in an agony of penitence. Another tradition represents him as sending off a press gang, which had come from Portsmouth to Exeter to seize men for the king's service, by admonishing them that every individual they took would be rescued from their hands before they reached Stratham. The brigadier appears to have stood up manfully for his townsmen, and hence they naturally stood by him.

He was about the only Exeter man of note whose fidelity to the American cause came early under suspicion. At a later period, however, another person who had previously held himself out as a zealous Whig was found guilty of the blackest defection. This was Robert Luist Fowle, the printer, whose office in 1776, as he advertised, was "on the grand country road, near the State House,"—probably on Water Street not far from the present Court Square. Fowle had been employed to print the paper money of New Hampshire, and was afterwards suspected, on very good grounds, of using his press for issuing counterfeits of the same to be put in circulation by disaffected persons; it being considered a legitimate way of opposing the popular government to discredit its circulating medium. Fowle was arrested and held in durance for a time, and apparently undertook to secure his own safety by betraying his accomplices. Perhaps he was thought to be playing false in this; for we are informed that he owed his escape at last to the unfaithfulness of his jailor, whose carriage was believed one stormy night to have conveyed him away, and he sought refuge within the British lines.

As has already been stated, the inhabitants of Exeter were almost to a man in favor of resistance to the oppressive measures of the British Parliament. Conspicuous among the patriots was Col. Nicholas Gilman, the father of Governor Gilman. At the commencement of the Revolution he was forty-four years of age, in the very prime of his powers, a man of resolution, firmness, and sound judgment. He was largely engaged in business, and was commanding officer of a regiment of militia. He was a great favorite with Governor Wentworth, who undoubtedly used all his influence to keep him on the side of his royal master, and it is said never ceased to retain his attachment for him. But Col. Gilman occupied no doubtful ground. Early declaring himself on the side of his country, his counsel and services were eagerly sought for in her behalf and cheerfully rendered. Money, the sinews of war, was the thing most needful, and he was placed at the head of the fiscal department of the State, where he accomplished almost as much for New Hampshire as Robert Morris did for the country. But his efforts were not limited to any narrow sphere. No plan for the public security or advantage was adopted until it received the sanction of his approval. President Weare held the chief executive office, and Nicholas Gilman was his premier.

The two sons of Col. Gilman who were old enough for the military service took up arms at the beginning of the Revolutionary struggle. John Taylor, the elder, served in the company of volunteers who marched to Cambridge on the morning after the first effusion of blood at Lexington and Concord. Afterwards he became an assistant to his father at home, and rendered invaluable aid to the patriot cause throughout the war in various capacities. The second son, Nicholas, entered the army early, and served in it six years and three months. He was assistant adjutant-general during the latter part of his service, and as such returned an account of the prisoners captured on the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Nathaniel, the third son of Col. Nicholas Gilman, was but sixteen when the war began, and did not take part in the fighting, though very desirous to do so; but he was useful to his father in his manifold employments, and succeeded him at an early age in his official positions.

Detachments from Col. Gilman's regiment were from time to time called into the field for active duty, and there is no doubt that they received his supervision there. But it is not known that he served in person during any campaign, though it is likely that he was from time to time at the front. It is related that he visited Gates' headquarters in 1777 for the purpose of doing his devoir in aiding to arrest the invading march of Burgoyne, but that the decisive battle had been fought before his arrival. He probably enjoyed there the opportunity of witnessing the surrender of an entire British army to the power of united America, which must have yielded him heartfelt satisfaction. Col. Gilman resided, in 1776, in the house afterwards long occupied by Col. Peter Chadwick, and now by his son and daughter.

Gen. Nathaniel Folsom acted an important part in the Revolutionary drama. A native of Exeter, and descended from one of its most ancient families, he had been a soldier long before that time. In 1755, at the age of twenty, he was entrusted with the command of a company in a New Hampshire regiment, raised to serve under Sir William Johnson against Crown Point, and distinguished himself greatly by his gallantry and good conduct. He afterwards received promotion in the militia, and in 1774 was in the commission of the peace, which was then no small honor. He had also been for several years a member of the Assembly of the province, and was regarded as one of the leaders of the popular cause. In 1774 he was chosen one of the members to represent New Hampshire in the General Congress at Philadelphia. Apparently Governor Wentworth hoped to the last that Folsom might be brought to repent and renew his fealty to the king, for it was not till the 22d of February, 1776, that he cast him off. On that day Folsom had the honor of receiving a letter of the following tenor:

"Sir,—I am commanded by his Excellency to acquaint you that he has, with advice of his Majesty's Council, ordered your name to be erased from the commission of the peace for the County of Rockingham,—that it is done accordingly, and that you act no more as a justice of the peace for said county.

"By his Excellency's command,

"I. RIMBLE,

Clerk of the Court of General Sessions of the Peace for the County of Rockingham."

The ex-justice did not make himself unhappy over the loss of his commission, but was undoubtedly glad to be freed from the very semblance of holding office under the king, or rather, as the phrase then was, under the king's ministers, for the Americans commonly believed that his gracious majesty was at heart very friendly to them, and that his advisers were solely responsible for every tyrannical act visited upon the colonies. At a later period the publication of the letters of George III. to Lord North showed that this idea was totally erroneous, and that the American Revolution was due to the obstinacy, folly, and despotic notions of the king himself.

Col. Folsom (for that was his title in the beginning of 1775) was evidently held in the highest estimation as a military commander, for on the 24th day of May, in that year, a month after Lexington, and a month before Bunker Hill, he received the appointment of major-general of "all the forces raised (by New Hampshire) for this and the other American colonies." The province had then three regiments in the field,—Stark's, Poor's, and Reed's. Gen. Folsom at once repaired to Cambridge to take the command of the brigade. Stark complained (without reason) at Folsom being put over him, and was inclined to despise the authority of this colony, till his native good sense taught him to act more wisely. The misunderstanding and rivalry between Folsom and Stark, however, prevented the nomination of either as a general officer on the Continental establishment, and Sullivan was selected as brigadier from New Hampshire. Gen. Folsom remained in command of the New Hampshire troops at Cambridge until the adoption of the army, and the appointment of its commanders by Congress. He then returned home, but though not again called actively to the field, he was allowed no respite from military or civil employment. He was retained in command of the militia, who were continually kept in readiness for active service in emergencies, and frequently called forth. In the course of the war he was four years a member of the Committee of Safety; was repeatedly chosen to the Legislature, and in 1777, and again in 1779, elected a delegate to the Continental Congress; and in addition to all the rest, was made a judge of the Court of Common Pleas.

There was evidently an incompatibility, or at least an impropriety, in a single person exercising such diverse functions at the same time, and some exception was taken to it in the Legislature; but a majority were of the opinion that the occasion justified a departure from ordinary rules, and the perfect confidence reposed in Gen. Folsom's honesty and patriotism silenced all criticism. Gen. Folsom lived in a house which formerly stood where Mr. George Sullivan's residence (now the Squamscot House) was afterwards built. The Folsom house was removed farther up Front Street, and placed on the lot next westerly of the residence of Mr. Luke Julian, where it still remains.

Enoch Poor was one of the most active business men of Exeter when the war began. He had come here some ten years before from Andover, Mass., his native town, and had engaged in trade and ship-building. He showed himself to be decided, bold, and fitted for command, and as he was an ardent friend of liberty, he was regarded at an early period as a leader in organizing resistance to the British authority. He was absent from home when the first shot was fired at Lexington, but in a very short time was found at Cambridge marshaling the sons of New Hampshire, who at the first note of alarm had quitted the plow to take up arms in behalf of their imperiled brethren of Massachusetts Bay. He was at once made colonel of the Second Regiment of New Hampshire troops, and thenceforward until his death shared the fortunes of the American army. He was in command of his regiment on the Canada expedition, and was appointed a brigadier-general in 1777, in which capacity he did excellent service in Gates' army in the battles which resulted in the capture of Burgoyne. In Valley Forge he bore his part in the privations and sufferings of the troops, and at Monmouth he won distinction by his efforts in retrieving the fortunes of the day, at first imperiled by Lee's "ill-timed retreat." He accompanied Sullivan in 1779 in his expedition against the Indians; and in 1780 was put in command of a brigade of light infantry under the orders of Lafayette, who had a high opinion of him.<sup>1</sup> He died at Paranus, N. J., on the 8th of September in that year, of fever, after a short illness. It has been believed by some persons that he was killed in a duel with a French officer, and that the manner of his death was kept a secret, lest it might excite ill feeling between our own countrymen and the French who were then our useful allies. But it is now the opinion of those who have the best means of knowledge that the story of the duel was unfounded.

Gen. Poor was much esteemed by his brother-officers. Washington wrote of him in terms of high commendation; and when Lafayette visited this country, half a century ago, he paid a graceful tribute to his merit, as well as to that of another distinguished New Hampshire officer, by giving as a sentiment on a public occasion, "The memory of Light-infantry Poor and Yorktown Seammell."

The residence of Gen. Poor was in the house formerly at the easterly corner of Centre and Water Streets, where his widow continued to live during the fifty years that she survived him. We have, unfortunately, no portraits of many of the principal citizens of Exeter one hundred years ago. But a likeness of Gen. Poor is still extant. The tradition is that it was drawn by the accomplished Polish engineer in the American service, Thaddeus Kosciuszko, upon the fly-leaf of a hymn-book in church. It represents the general in the Continental uniform, with a cocked-hat and epaulets. The features are bold and prominent, and we can easily believe that the original must have been a man of mark.

Another of the foremost men of that time was Col. John Phillips, the location of whose dwelling has already been described. Though he wore a military title, he was noted not so much for his warlike as for his civic achievements. He was, however, the commanding officer of the Exeter Cadets, and a very well drilled and disciplined corps it was said to be. He was also a decided friend of his country, it is understood, notwithstanding he took no active part in public affairs in the Revolution. He was bred to the ministry, though he was engaged in business as a merchant for the greater part of his working life. He employed his large accumulations wisely and generously in promoting the cause of education in this and other States.

<sup>1</sup> There is some reason to believe that he died from a wound received in a duel with an American officer.

In the house now occupied by Mr. John W. Getchell lived Col. James Hackett in 1776. He had been for some time engaged in ship-building here, and was a man of enterprise and determination. He was no laggard in evincing his willingness to enlist in his country's cause, for he was one of the first to march to the scene of hostilities on the morning after the Concord fight. The unanimous voice of his fellow-volunteers made him the commander of the extemporized company, and he acquitted himself well of the trust. Repeatedly afterwards during the war he was chosen to important military commands, but his contriving head and skillful hands were so constantly needed in constructing ships-of-war and flotilla for offensive and defensive purposes on our coast that he is not known to have served as a soldier in any campaign, except in Rhode Island, under Gen. Sullivan, in 1778, where he held the post of Lieutenant of a company of light horse, of which no less a person than John Langdon was captain.

Col. Hackett appears to have passed much of his time, at a later period, in Portsmouth, where he pursued the business of ship-building, and on the occasion of Washington's visit to New Hampshire in 1789 commanded a battalion of artillery, which received his excellency on his arrival in Portsmouth with a grand salute.

The same house was years afterwards tenanted by another person, who filled during the Revolution a still more conspicuous public position. This was Gen. Nathaniel Peabody, who was in 1774 a physician in Plaistow, practicing his profession with great success. He was popular and aspiring. He denounced the usurpations of Britain at the outset, and is said to have been the first man in the province to resign the king's commission from political motives. He was repeatedly chosen to the Legislature, and upon the Committee of Safety, and was in 1779 and 1780 a delegate to Congress. Besides these, he held numerous other offices, civil and military, of dignity and importance. As adjutant-general of the State his only active service, by a singular coincidence, was in the same Rhode Island campaign in which his predecessor in the habitation, Col. Hackett, first heard the sounds of actual conflict. After the war, Gen. Peabody's popularity was undiminished, and he received frequent testimony of the confidence of his fellow-citizens in the shape of elections to office. He afterwards removed his residence to Exeter, where he passed the remainder of his life. Towards the close of his career he was annoyed by pecuniary troubles, and is said to have become petulant and rough in his manners. Many stories are yet current of his sharp speeches and harsh conduct. They furnish an exemplification of the truth of the oft-quoted words of Shakspeare :

"The evil that men do lives after them,
The good is oft interred with their bones."

Gen. Peabody was undoubtedly possessed of abilities far above the average, and rendered valuable service as a legislator to his State and country, and in his professional capacity to the sick and suffering. We can make allowance for faults of temper, and even for more serious defects in one who so staunchly defended the rights of his country in the hour of her sorest trial, and bore so important a part in laying the foundations of the nation's prosperity and greatness.

Where the town-house now is, Joseph Gilman lived in 1776, in the gambrel-roofed house which, having been reduced one story in height, now occupies a place on the north side of Franklin Street. Mr. Gilman was bred to mercantile pursuits, and for several years before the Revolution was a member of the firm of Folsom, Gilman & Gilman, which did a large business in Exeter, in trade, in ship-building, and in ventures at sea. A printed shop-bill of the concern has been preserved, which shows that almost as great a variety of merchandise found a sale among the good people of the place three or four generations ago as now.

"Crimson, scarlet, and various other color'd Broad Cloths; scarlet and green Ratteens; scarlet, blue, and green Flashes; crimson, cloth color'd and black figur'd cotton waistcoat Shapes; Velvet of most colors for capes; crimson, scarlet, black, blue, green, and cloth color'd Shalooms," are all articles which indicate the prevailing taste of that day for bright colored clothing; a taste which must have rendered an assemblage of ladies and gentlemen a spectacle much more imposing and pleasing to the eye than a company attired in the sombre hues, or the white and black, which are prescribed by more recent fashions.

Folsom, Gilman & Gilman dealt in hardware also, and in their enumeration of merchandise of this description, we find almost identically the tools and iron utensils which are advertised by their successors in the same line of business in 1876. Of course there are more or less Yankee inventions of modern date, however, which have superseded the older contrivances. The almost universal use of cooking-stoves, for example, has rendered much of the apparatus of the old-fashioned fireplaces obsolete; gun-flints are little in demand since percussion locks were invented; hour-glasses are now mere matters of curiosity, and "H and HL hinges," thumb-latches, warming-pans, and shoe- and knee-buckles are certainly no longer articles of common use. Some of the goods are described by names that sound strangely to our modern ears. Tammys and Durants, Dungereens, Tandems, Romalls, and Snail Trimmings would be inquired for in vain, we fear, at our dry-goods stores; and it is doubtful whether Firmers, Jobents, Splinter Locks, or Cuttoes would be recognized under those designations among our dealers in ironmongery.

In connection with this subject it may be mentioned that another printed Exeter shop-bill of the ante-Revolutionary period is still extant. It contains a brief list of the articles to be sold by William Elliot, "at his shop formerly occupied by Mr. Peter Coffin, and opposite Peter Gilman, Esq's." It indicates that Mr. Elliott's stock in trade was also quite miscellaneous, comprising dry-goods, hardware, and groceries.

Indeed, there was one article under the last head that was then kept by every trader,—spirituous liquor. Its use was all but universal. We have already related an incident to show that good men, engaged in a religious duty, sometimes partook of the enticing cup with freedom. In fact, there was no occasion of unusual interest, from a christening to a funeral, but must be observed by a plentiful oblation. The select-men when they met to transact the town business repaired to a tavern, where it was convenient to obtain the means to moisten their clay; and the landlord duly scored the mugs and bowls of fragrant beverages which they consumed to the amount of the town, and his bill was promptly met at the close of the year. The judges on their circuit were unable to hold the courts without spirituous refreshment. We have seen a bill of the "Courts' Expenses," of somewhat earlier date than the era we have been referring to, in which the dinners each day were supplemented by a liberal number of "Bottels of wine" and "Boules of punch."

Mr. William Elliott left his business when the country called for armed defenders and joined the army. He was adjutant in the regiment of Col. Nathan Hale in 1777, and at the disastrous fight at Hubbardston was taken prisoner. He was probably exchanged subsequently.

But we have wandered from the subject on which we commenced. The house of Mr. Joseph Gilman was the place where most of the meetings of the Committee of Safety were held during the war. The Legislature was in session more than one-third part of the year 1776, and the committee nearly the entire residue of the year. It would seem to be a hazardous thing to delegate to a dozen men the power to arrest, imprison, and release at their pleasure any of their fellow-citizens of the province. If they had been vindictive, here was ample opportunity to wreak their vengeance; if they had been rapacious, here were plenty of chances to fill their pockets. Many who were apprehended by their authority made bitter complaints, of course; but the action of the Committee of Safety is believed, on the whole, to have been characterized by much prudence and moderation.

They had a great variety of characters to deal with. Not a few of the men of wealth and position were opposed to resistance to the British authority. They feared the result of an organized insurrection against the power and warlike resources of England, and they preferred to submit to what they considered the small evil of taxation without representation rather than to incur the hazards of rapine and confiscation which might come in the train of a rebellion suppressed by force of arms. These timid souls were treated tenderly, and after a taste of jail-life were allowed to go at large upon giving security for their good behavior. It may have been one of these who wrote to the committee the following letter:

"May it Please your Honors,

"Gratitude being a Duty incumbent on those who have Receiv'd Favors, begs Leave to Return your Honors most sincere thanks for the Very Great Favor you have Done me in admitting me to Bail for the Liberty of this house and the Yard thereto adjoining, & am with the utmost Respect, Sincerity & Esteem

"PRISON IN EXETER, 24th Apl. 1776.

"Yr Honors most obedient Servant,
"JOHN PATTEN.

"THE HONORABLE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY."

As the "liberty of the yard" is alluded to in this letter, a word on the subject of that ancient legal fiction, as it may be termed, will perhaps not be void of interest to the people of this age, to whom imprisonment for debt is happily unknown. In former times, when a man who could not pay what he owed was liable to compensate for his inability by the loss of his personal liberty, debtors in many cases could enjoy the privilege of living outside the jail walls, provided they did not exceed certain limits, which were fixed at a convenient distance—for a long time two hundred rods—from the building in every direction. In order to secure this advantage, which was obviously a great relief from actual incarceration, the debtor was obliged to give a bond, with good sureties, that he would keep within the prison "yard," as the limits were called. And if he overstepped the line, even for a single inch, his bond was forfeited, and his sureties were liable to pay the debt.

Approxim of this, a story is told of a debtor in Exeter in the olden time who, being under bond to confine himself to the jail yard, saw a child who had fallen into the river struggling for its life at a point just beyond the line which he was bound not to transcend. His humanity outweighed all other considerations, and he broke bounds without hesitation and saved the child. It is pleasant to record that though the creditor might have extorted his debt from the bondsmen, for this act of mercy on the part of their principal, he never made the attempt. If he had forgiven his debtor in full it would have been better still.

But some of the Tories who came under the cognizance of the Committee of Safety were not to be handled with too much tenderness. They were sullen and vindictive, and ready to do anything to obstruct the progress of popular government. One of the men concerned with Fowle, the printer, in emitting counterfeit paper money was of this description. He had occupied a position of some distinction in the province. It was a bitter humiliation for him to lie in the jail with common malefactors, but he was too proud and obstinate to recant the opinions he had often expressed; and so he chafed in confinement, until by the aid of friends without he was enabled to make his escape. This was the well-known Col. Stephen Holland, of Londonderry. His influence on those about him must have been rated high, since it was deemed necessary to imprison his negro man Cato as well as his master. After the colonel's flight, the committee appear to have issued hand-bills for his apprehension, and employed Benjamin Boardman to go express to Boston, "to carry advertisements after the Col. Holland." They turned out to be "after" him indeed, for he was so far in advance of them that he reached the enemy's lines in safety. He was banished by a formal act of the General Court, and his property confiscated.

Mr. Joseph Gilman was himself chairman of the Committee of Safety at one period, and held various public trusts during and after the war. His wife was a woman of thorough education and many accomplishments. His house appears to have been repeatedly visited by strangers of distinction during the Revolution. Some of the high-bred French officers who drew their swords in behalf of America are said to have expressed their admiration for the culture and esprit of Mrs. Gilman, as beyond anything they had witnessed elsewhere in the country. Samuel Adams passed a night at Mr. Gilman's house in the latter part of 1776, just before the victories at Princeton and Trenton had relieved the feeling of despondency caused by the prior disasters to our arms; and all Mrs. Gilman's powers of pleasing were said to have been exerted to cheer the drooping spirits of the patriot without effect. A military success was then the only cure for the gloom of the stern king-hater.

The dwelling-place of Maj. Jonathan Cass, one of the veterans of the Revolution, was where the house of Mrs. J. L. Robinson now is. At the outbreak of the war he was twenty-two years of age, and according to description was an erect, handsome man, with keen black eyes. He enlisted in the army as a private soldier, and served until peace was established, having taken part in most of the principal battles. As early as 1777 his merits procured him promotion to an ensigncy, and at the close of the war he was a captain. He then resumed his residence in Exeter for a few years, and his distinguished son, Lewis Cass, was born here in 1782. About 1790 the father re-entered the army in command of a company raised for the defense of the western frontier, and subsequently received the commission of major. He was so much pleased with the appearance of the western country that he established his home in Ohio, where he died in 1830.

Lewis Cass remained in Exeter till he finished his studies at the academy, and received a diploma, signed by the principal and president of the board of trustees, certifying his proficiency and good conduct, a copy of which, in his own youthful handwriting, is still preserved. His career after he quitted the home of his youth is a matter of familiar history.

Col. Samuel Folsom, a brother of Gen. Nathaniel Folsom, was a well-known and respected citizen in 1776. His house was at the easterly corner of Court Square and Water Street, and is now occupied by Mr. George W. Dearborn. It is believed to have been built a year or two before the date mentioned, probably to replace a former edifice removed or destroyed. Col. Folsom kept a public-house, as his widow continued to do many years after his death. He was lieutenant-colonel of the Exeter Corps of Independent Cadets, commanded by Col. John Phillips. He was intrusted with much important business during the Revolution, requiring sound and tried capacity and devotion to his country's interests.

After John Langdon, in the midst of the apprehensions excited by the triumphant incursion of Burgoyne, inspired the people of New Hampshire, by the offer of his private property to organize an expedition under Gen. Stark, with the purpose of turning back the invader, Col. Folsom was delegated by President Weare, chairman of the Committee of Safety, to visit Gen. Stark, to convey him money for contingent expenses, to learn how his expedition was progressing, what articles it stood in need of, and to "advise with all persons in the service of this State on such things as he thought needful to forward the business they are engaged in." His confidential and discretionary mission appears to have been executed to the satisfaction of all parties; and we know how thoroughly Stark was enabled to perform the part required of him when he met the enemy at Bennington.

A couple of years afterwards Col. Folsom was selected by the General Court to discharge the agreeable duty of presenting in behalf of the State to Col. Joseph Cilley a pair of pistols which had been the property of Col. Stephen Holland, the Tory absentee; and the receipt of Col. Cilley remains to testify that the commission was duly accomplished.

It was at the house of Col. Folsom that President George Washington stopped and partook of a collation when he visited Exeter in his tour through the Eastern States, in the autumn of 1789. There is probably no person now living who saw the father of his country here, although one or two who well remember the occasion have but recently deceased.

If time would permit, information could be obtained, no doubt, which would enable us to fix the residences, and give some account of the services, of many others of our former townsmen who responded to the call of the country in the struggle for independence. But the brief space allowed for the completion of these sketches forbids extended inquiry and research, and we must be content with recording such fragments of personal history of that character as are to be collected at short notice.

Peter Coffin, the predecessor of William Elliot in his store, near the western extremity of the great bridge, was a major in Col. David Gilman's regiment. His family name was once familiar here, and his ancestors are said to have lived in what is now the yard of the academy. An orchard which belonged to them then bore its fruit on the ground now covered by the academy.

The old Exeter family of Robinson was well represented in the Continental service, two of its members holding commissions therein; the one, Caleb Robinson, as captain, and the other, Noah, as ensign.

Noah Emery, a name handed down for generations here, was a paymaster in Col. Isaac Wyman's regiment and commissary. In the latter capacity he had the charge of a large amount of stores, which tradition says were housed in a building in Spring Street, familiarly termed "the State's barn." It is of Paymaster Emery that a story is told that, being ordered to carry some dispatches by night on horseback in a strange part of the country, he crossed a bridge on his way, which he did not discover until the next day had been previously stripped of its planking. His horse had cautiously felt his way over it upon the timbers, while the rider was all unconscious of the fearful risk he was running. The statement would hardly be credited if there were not authentic accounts of other similar occurrences. The duties performed by Mr. Emery under the direction of the State authorities must have kept him very busy. He was employed frequently in the purchase, forwarding, and distribution among the troops of the various needed supplies, and was relied on to transact much incidental business. Indeed, towards the close of the war he and John Taylor Gilman, afterwards Governor of the State, appear to have attended to most of the wants of the New Hampshire troops. Perhaps Col. Eliphalet Giddons, the collector of the "beef tax," should be included with them.

Dr. Samuel Tenney was a surgeon in one of the Rhode Island regiments. He had previously settled in this town, and returned and married a wife here at the expiration of his service. He was a person of uncommon literary and scientific attainments, and contributed articles to the publications of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a topographical account of Exeter to the Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society. He felt a warm interest in political matters also, and was for seven years a representative in Congress. He was also judge of probate, and was highly respected.

Another citizen of Exeter who served in the medical department of the army was Dr. William Parker, Jr. He was a grandson of Judge William Parker, of Portsmouth, whose father married, it is said, a daughter of the English patrician house of Derby. Dr. Parker died in Exeter of yellow fever, which he contracted from a patient.

James McClure was the adjutant of a New Hampshire regiment in the Continental service. He is believed to have lived in the house on the south side of Water Street now belonging to Mr. Franklin Lane.

Benjamin Boardman performed a tour of duty in the Revolution as the commanding officer of a company. He was a noted man in the town, and many years afterwards kept a public-house on the east side of the river.

Ebenezer Light was a lieutenant for two years or more in the New Hampshire line. His name was once a common one in Exeter, and Light's tavern, on Tower Hill, was a well-known place of entertainment. But no branch of the family now remains here, so far as we can ascertain.

Samuel Brooks, of Exeter, appears to have been quartermaster in Col. David Gilman's regiment. Whether this was the excellent deacon, who lived in a house removed to make way for the present Methodist Church, we are not certain. But if he undertook the duties, it is safe to say that he made a good quartermaster, for he was a faithful and thorough man. There is no doubt that he was employed by the Committee of Safety to pay the New Hampshire troops who were in Arnold's ill-fated expedition against Quebec. It may interest the reader to learn that the amount paid them, including expenses, was three hundred and forty-eight pounds seven shillings.

Ebenezer Clifford, who was quartermaster-sergeant in Col. Poor's regiment in 1775, was probably the person who removed hither from Kensington about 1790, and lived in the Brigadier Gilman house until his death. He was an ingenious mechanic, and constructed a diving-bell, with the aid of which he is said to have recovered a quantity of silver money from the wreck of a Spanish or other foreign vessel at the Isles of Shoals. The coin had suffered during its long submersion a wondrous sea change, and was found to be covered with some kind of marine incrustation. A portion of it was placed for safe-keeping in the old Exeter Bank, and when the vault of that institution was entered and robbed of its valuable contents, about the year 1828, some of Mr. Clifford's silver pieces were among the spoils. The story goes that the peculiar appearance of the money afforded the clue by which the guilty persons were detected.

It would not be just, in any recital of the services of our townsmen in the Revolution, to omit to mention the independent company that volunteered under the command of Capt. John Langdon in 1777, and marched to Saratoga to aid in the capture of Burgoyne. The lieutenant of the company was Col. Nicholas Gilman, and the private soldiers were composed of the solid men of Exeter, Portsmouth, and Newmarket. Most of them were of mature age, and many had held military commissions. No roster of the company is now accessible, but it is known that among the Exeter quota were such men as Capt. Samuel Gilman, Col. Eliphalet Giddings, Col. Nathaniel Giddings, and Ephraim Robinson, Esq. That citizens of such age and standing were ready to leave their families and business to shoulder the musket in defense of their country is proof positive of the pressing nature of the emergency, and of the absolute necessity then felt that the progress of the hostile army should be checked, and a substantial triumph gained to the cause of America. And the momentous consequences which ensued from the capitulation of Burgoyne proved that this feeling was founded in reason and a just appreciation of the situation.

There were of course not a few other persons in Exeter whose services were called into requisition in some way by the State authorities.

John Rice, Esq. (we append the title, because it was not common, though much valued, in those days), whose house was where the parsonage of the first parish now is, furnished board and a place of meeting for the Committee of Safety in the earlier part of the war.

John Ward Gilman, who lived in the old house on the north side of Water Street near string bridge, now owned by Mr. Alva Wood, manufactured for the newly-formed State a seal, the impression of which, no doubt, is found upon the commissions of the period. The device was certainly more appropriate than the ship on the stocks, which for some unknown reason was subsequently adopted, and is retained on the present seal. It consisted of the fasces, the emblem of authority, on one side of which was a pine-tree and on the other a fish, in allusion to two of the chief sources of the early prosperity of the colony. An appropriate inscription surrounded the whole.

Thomas Odiorne was a representative in the Legislature during a portion of 1776, and was afterwards a member of the Committee of Safety. He furnished a considerable amount of clothing for the soldiers, and was intrusted with the purchase of equipments for the field, among other things "colors for Col. Cilley's regiment."

Theodore Carlton, who appears to have opened a tavern during the war, had some of Col. Poor's soldiers quartered there for a time. Men enlisted for the army in a time of actual hostilities are proverbially not the quietest of lodgers, and it is not strange that Mr. Carlton found that his premises sustained some damage. A committee reported thereon that there were "42 squares of glass broke, 2 stairs broke, 6 doors gone, several others broke, and plaistering broke down in several rooms."

Capt. Eliphalet Ladd, the father of William Ladd, the "apostle of peace," had occasional business with the committee and the Legislature. He was a man of untiring energy, and did not suffer the war to check his enterprise. He was engaged in trade on a considerable scale, and built ships and planned voyages in spite of the enemy's cruisers. He met with heavy losses, but on the whole was thought to have increased his property during the Revolution.

Constable Joseph Lamson's official aid was occasionally called into requisition by the Committee of Safety when sitting in a judicial capacity. He summoned the witnesses, and perhaps waited on the prisoners to and from the jail. For the town he acted as a general disbursing agent and factotum. Among his multifarious charges in 1776 was one "for warning four families out of town." This was not, as might be imagined, an act of inhospitality or a reflection on the morals of the families alluded to. It simply implied that they had little visible means of support, and were considered liable to become paupers. A town was then responsible for the support of all its inhabitants falling into pauperism, who had resided therein for a certain period without being formally notified to depart. It was the practice, therefore, of the prudent town authorities to serve the "warning" process upon every family that seemed in danger of coming to want. The proceeding was probably thought to be rather a harsh reminder of impending poverty, and another generation wiped it from the statute-book.

Many as were the embarrassing questions with which the Committee of Safety were called on to wrestle, it is doubtful if they were ever more non-plussed than when a party of Indians were consigned to their hospitality. To what tribe these sons of the forest belonged we have no record. The few facts known indicate that, being friendly to the American cause, they visited the headquarters of the army out of curiosity and for the purpose of expressing their good wishes. The commanding general, probably at a loss to know what to do with them, relieved himself of the dilemma by forwarding them to the New Hampshire capital. They arrived in Exeter in the early part of 1776, but did not make a long stay. The Committee of Safety no doubt regarded them as an elephantine prize. Our streets were for a few days enlivened by the spectacle, familiar enough a century before, of the red men in their barbaric costume; then the distinguished visitors, sickened by overmuch good cheer perhaps, came into the doctor's hands, and at length were forwarded at the public charge to Suncook, ignominiously, in a storm. About a dozen pounds paid the expenses of the visitation.

We cannot better close these too meagre and desultory notices of our town and its people at the heroic period when our independence was achieved than by an outline of the most impressive occurrence that Exeter witnessed during the eventful year of 1776.

When the dispute with Britain was begun, it was with no general expectation that it would result in a severance between the colonies and the mother-country. The provincials professed perfect loyalty, and assumed self-government only during "the present unhappy and unnatural contest with Great Britain." But as the struggle went on the popular ideas became modified, and the public came at length to comprehend that it was idle to expect to reunite ties which the sword had sundered.

A few sagacious minds had foreseen this from the outset. It is due to the able leaders of the popular movement in New Hampshire that it should be generally known that they contemplated the assumption of independence, and suggested it in an eloquent official letter from their Convention of Delegates to the Continental Congress as early as the 23d of May, 1775. This is the first allusion to the subject in any known communication from an organized body in the country.

As the sentiment of the whole people became gradually ripe for the final step of separation from Britain, movements were made in the Colonial Legislatures looking to that result. In New Hampshire a committee of both Houses reported on the 15th of June, 1776, instructions to "our Delegates in the Continental Congress to join with the other colonies in declaring the Thirteen United Colonies a FREE AND INDEPENDENT STATE, solemnly pledging our faith and honor that we will, on our parts, support the measure with our Lives and Fortunes."

From this time forward there was impatience in the breast of every true friend of liberty to blot out the very memory of subjection, to make way for the new and glorious career that was opening for the infant nation. The action of Congress was waited for anxiously, longingly, eagerly.

At length the wished-for moment arrived. An express dashed into the village of Exeter bearing a letter addressed to the Convention of New Hampshire, and authenticated by the manly signature of John Hancock. The Legislature had adjourned, but the president was here, perhaps waiting for the important missive. It was determined that the contents of the letter, containing the glad tidings of the Declaration of Independence, should be forthwith publicly read.

The honor of pronouncing for the first time in New Hampshire the impressive period of that unequalled production was appropriately devolved upon John Taylor Gilman. No firing of cannon or ringing of bells was needed to give velut to the occasion; the general joy was too sincere and heartfelt to find expression in noisy demonstrations. Meshach Weare, president of the State, Matthew Thornton, who was himself soon to set his hand to the instrument, Gen. Folsom, and Col. Pierce Long and Ebenezer Thompson, all members of the Committee of Safety, and tried and true patriots, were present. The news had spread with the speed of lightning through the town. The farmer dropped his scythe in the swath, the mechanic left his saw in the kerf, and even the good wife forsook her spinning-wheel, while all gathered to hear the words which they felt were to give them freedom and a country. But perhaps there was no one of the audience whose heart was thrilled more deeply by the immortal Declaration than Col. Nicholas Gilman, the father of him who read it. He had put his whole life and energy into the cause of his country; he foresaw that nothing but formal separation from the parent State would prevent his dearest hopes from going down in darkness; he welcomed the words which rent the brightest jewel from Britain's crown with joy and thankfulness unutterable. The reader, from filial as well as patriotic sensibility, shared his emotion, and there were pauses when the rush of feeling o'ermastered speech.

Exeter has witnessed many returns of the anniversary of our national birthday, and has listened to the utterances of lips touched with the living coal of eloquence; but the first reading of the Declaration of Independence, on the 18th of July, 1776, enchaind the attention with a significance and power which have never since been paralleled.

ANTINOMIAN INCIDENTS.

The Outbreak of 1786—Arrival of the Mob—Firmness of Sullivan—Enrollment of Company to Suppress the Insurgents—Nicholas Gilman, Captain—Raid on the Insurgents—Their Flight, Pursuit, and Capture—Release of the Indian Murderers, Bowen and Merrill—Arrival of George Whitefield—His last sermon preached here, Sept. 29, 1770—His death the following day—First Reading of the Declaration of Independence in Exeter, by John Taylor Gilman—Washington's Visit—The Box of 1798—Annexation to Massachusetts.

FOR some years after the close of the Revolutionary war the people were hardly reconciled to the situation. The times were hard, money was scarce, and the acquisition of independence had not freed them, as many fancied it would do, from the restraints of law. Complaints were rife among the people because the Legislature of the State would not authorize the issue of paper money, which many believed was the panacea for their fiscal troubles. At length the discontent became so intensified that it took an organized form among the people of several interior towns in Rockingham County, and on the morning of Sept. 20, 1786, the rumor reached Exeter that a body of men were about to enter the town to obtain in one way or another "a redress of grievances." During the forenoon a great number of persons, attracted by the report, came into town from the neighboring places, not for the purpose of joining in any illegal demonstration, but to witness what was about to take place. The Legislature was in session in the meeting-house, which stood nearly on the site of the present lower church, while the Supreme Court was sitting in the court-house, which was on the opposite side of the street, occupying about the centre of what is now the entrance to Court Street.

Between two and three o'clock in the afternoon the expected assemblage made its appearance, coming down Front Street. It had been formed into the semblance of a military array at Kingston, and consisted of about two hundred persons or a little more, about one-half of them on foot and provided with firearms or swords, and the residue following in the rear on horseback and carrying clubs and whips.

They halted near the residence of the late Nathaniel Gilman, on Front Street, and asked civilly for water. They then marched down the street, and passing over the great bridge turned and came back as far as the court-house, which they surrounded, under the mistaken belief that the Legislature was in session there.

Judge Samuel Livermore, who was upon the bench, sternly ordered that the business should proceed without pause, and forbade any one to look from the windows.

The mob in a few minutes became aware of their mistake, and attempted to surround the meeting-house. The spectators who were packed somewhat densely in and about the yard of the church yielded only inch by inch, and it was an hour or more before the riotous assemblage reached the building. They then placed guards at the doors and windows, and announced in substance that they meant to keep the members of the General Court in durance until they passed a law for the emission of paper money, which should be a legal tender for debts and taxes. One member only is reported to have escaped from the building, and he got out of a window.

John Sullivan, the president of the State, was present in the meeting-house,—a man of resolution and a soldier. He made his appearance before the excited crowd, and said to them that they "need not expect to frighten him, for he had smelt powder before." In allusion to the demand which some of them had made for justice he said, "You ask for justice, and justice you shall have."

It was noticeable that he did not advise the crowd to disperse, however; he undoubtedly felt that it was better to crush the insurrection in the bud. It presently grew towards evening, and the good citizens of Exeter began to think it was time that a little pressure should be applied to the insurgents. Agreeably to a suggestion of Col. Nathaniel Gilman, a drum was beaten a little way off as if a body of soldiers were approaching, while he himself with his stentorian voice cried out something about "Hackett's artillery." The mob waited for nothing further, but incontinently took to their heels, and did not pause till they had reached the outskirts of the village. They passed the night near where the passenger depot of the railroad formerly stood.

No sooner was the village relieved from their presence than effectual steps were taken to suppress the rising. The Legislature having given the proper authority, the president at once sent orders into the neighboring towns to assemble the militia. A volunteer company of the principal citizens of Exeter was immediately enrolled under the command of Nicholas Gilman, who had served in the Revolutionary army, and was afterwards a senator of the United States. By the next morning the village of Exeter was a scene of no small excitement and military display. A large body of troops, horse and foot, were assembled, and, under the direction of the president and the immediate command of Gen. Joseph Cilley, they marched with military music to meet the force of the insurgents, the armed portion of whom were drawn up on the ridge beyond little river, on the Kingston road.

The government column, with the Exeter volunteer company holding the post of honor in the front, moved to within the distance of some forty rods from the opposing party, when Gen. Cilley, at the head of a small number of horsemen, dashed forward and across the stream, and by a coup de main seized and made prisoners of the leaders of the insurgents. The remainder broke and fled, but were pursued, and quite a number of them captured.

Joseph French, of Hampstead, James Cochran, of Pembroke, and John McKean, of Londonderry, were the principal persons engaged in the riotous demonstration. Some of the prisoners were indicted, others were brought to a court-martial, and still others were dealt with by ecclesiastical authority, but while all were pretty thoroughly frightened and very penitent, none of them were severely punished.

The spirit of organized resistance to law and order received on this occasion a timely and effectual check, and the State authorities and people of Exeter are entitled to no little credit for their judicious and spirited conduct.

In the afternoon of March 20, 1754, a troop of about thirty men, on horseback and carrying axes, made their appearance in Exeter. They came from Canterbury, Contoocook, and the vicinity, and their purpose was probably pretty well understood in Exeter and throughout the province.

Two trading Indians of the St. Francis tribe in Canada, Sabastis and Plausawa by name, had rendered themselves very obnoxious to the people of Canterbury and Contoocook the preceding summer. Sabastis had been formerly concerned in spiriting away two blacks owned by inhabitants of Canterbury, and both Indians not only proclaimed the opinion that there was no harm in stealing negroes, but threatened and even offered violence to the wife of a white settler. They indulged in boasts of former deeds of bloodshed and robbery, and in threats of committing others, until the people were so alarmed and incensed that they sternly warned them to depart. The Indians would have done well to heed the admonition, but in complete infatuation they still lingered in the neighborhood, and abated not a jot of their blustering. Peter Bowen and one Morrill, with whom they were staying, at length undoubtedly concerted a plan to take their lives. Bowen, who was a rough and violent man, procured a gallon of rum from Rumford and treated the Indians to it freely, until they became intoxicated. Meantime his confederates took the opportunity to draw the charges from the Indians' guns, and then enticed them into the woods, where Bowen slew them almost without resistance.

Yet so great was the dread and hatred of the Indians which prevailed throughout the province, and so favorably was the story related for the murderers, that when Bowen and Morrill were indicted for murder and imprisoned in Portsmouth jail to await their trial, the public sentiment was aroused most strongly in their behalf. Their trial was fixed for March 21, 1754, and the cavalcade which appeared in Exeter on the preceding day, as already mentioned, was composed of persons who were determined to rescue the accused persons from imprisonment.

A few of the people of Exeter are said to have joined the lawless band, but their names have not survived to our time. The party, thus reinforced, rode through mud and snow that night to Portsmouth, beat down the doors of the jail, knocked off the irons from Morrill and Bowen, and set them free. Rewards were offered by the Governor for the nearest of the prisoners, but they were never retaken, though they were at their homes again as usual soon after. Their course was justified by the popular voice, and it was not thought expedient to molest them or their rescuers. In no very long time the incidents would have been generally forgotten but for a song which some village poetaster composed on the occasion, and which preserved the memory of the transaction, being afterwards commonly sung at the huskings in Exeter.

Sixteen years afterwards an occurrence of a very different character aroused the attention of the town. News was brought that George Whitefield, a preacher of world-wide celebrity, was to address the people of Exeter. It may easily be supposed that none would willingly lose the opportunity of hearing his eloquent voice. So, although the time appointed was the forenoon of Saturday (Sept. 29, 1770), almost the entire population thronged to the church where he was to officiate, which stood nearly on the spot where Mrs. Cobbs' house now is.

The building was not capable of containing the crowd, and Mr. Whitefield determined to address them in the open air, a course he was often compelled to adopt. It is said that he at first essayed to speak from the meeting-house steps, but the sun shining in his face, he crossed to the other side of the street, where some boards laid across two barrels or hog-heads furnished him a stand, from which he preached to his out-door congregation a discourse nearly two hours in length, from 2 Corinthians xiii. 5.

This was the last sermon which that eloquent and devoted minister delivered. He went in the afternoon to Newburyport, Mass., where, the very next morning, he breathed his last. So that Exeter witnessed the closing effort in the career of one of the most distinguished divines of the world, whose name will be held in honor and reverence so long as zeal, piety, and self-denial shall be known and appreciated.

It was nearly six years after the death of the earnest and eloquent Whitefield. In that period an immense change had taken place in the opinions, feelings, and situation of the American colonists. From remonstrances and petitions against the exactions of the mother-country they had proceeded to open and armed resistance, and at length to the decisive step of declaring themselves independent of the British crown. In June, 1776, the Legislature of New Hampshire instructed her delegates in Congress to join with those of the other colonies in such a measure, and on Thursday, the 18th day of July following, the Declaration of the thirteen United Colonies of North America, authenticated by the bold signature of John Hancock, reached Exeter by express, having been fourteen days on the road from Philadelphia.

The Committee of Safety, sometimes called the Little Congress, was in session at the time, and we can readily believe that the startling but joyful intelligence that the Rubicon was passed flew rapidly from lip to lip through the village. It was determined that the immortal words should be read in public, and the impatient citizens thronged in a dense mass about the front yard of the lower church—or "colony house," as it was termed when used for civic purposes—to witness the formality. The venerable president of the Council, Meshech Weare, with the members of the committee and other principal citizens of the town and county, made their appearance before the assembled people, with John Taylor Gilman, who was selected for the honor of first pronouncing on New Hampshire soil the words of the charter of American liberty. As he read the impressive, solemn, and eloquent periods of the Declaration the great concourse before him listened in silence but with deep emotion, and he himself was so overcome with the tumult of his feelings on the joyful and momentous occasion that he was for a time incapable of proceeding. The emotions of the hearers were too deep for applause, but the words found a response in their inmost hearts, and thenceforward there was no hesitation nor flinching. Nothing short of absolute independence was admissible, as the result of the contest, from that time forth.

Thirteen years later Exeter saw another sight not soon to be forgotten by its citizens. The war was happily concluded, independence won, and, the insufficiency of the old confederation becoming apparent, a new form of government had been established. Washington, the savior of his country, had been elected its first Chief Magistrate, and after the new administration was fairly launched had set forth on a tour through the Northern States. It was known that he was to leave Portsmouth on the 4th day of November, 1789, for Exeter, and the good people made their preparations to meet him with a cavalcade of citizens to escort him into town. But they mistook the hour of his departure from Portsmouth, or forgot his rigid habits of punctuality, for before the volunteers were in the saddle Washington made his appearance. He arrived here before ten o'clock in the forenoon, accompanied by his secretaries, Col. Lear and Maj. Jackson, and a single servant. Washington rode in an open carriage, and is said to have worn a drab surtout and military hat. The street was lined with spectators as he drove up to the door of the residence of Col. Samuel Folsom, who, as was not unusual among the leading men of that day, kept a public-house. It was the same dwelling now occupied by

RESIDENCE OF NATHANIEL GORDON, EXETER, N.H.

George W. Dearborn, at the easterly corner of Court Square and Water Street.

It is unnecessary to say that the whole population gathered eagerly to catch a glimpse of the distinguished visitor. Col. Nicholas Gilman, who had been an officer of the staff under the commander-in-chief at Yorktown, and other officers of the Revolution and principal citizens, paid their respects to Washington, and did the honors of the town. They invited him to remain and partake of a public dinner, which his arrangements compelled him reluctantly, as his diary informs us, to decline. He, however, accepted a breakfast or collation at the public-house, on which occasion a young lady related to Col. Folsom waited on him at table. His quick eye discovered that she was not a servant, and tradition informs us that he called her to him, addressed her a few pleasant words, and kissed her.

The hour or two of his stay in Exeter were soon over, and he again resumed his journey by Kingston towards Haverhill, Mass. He was accompanied a part of the distance by some of the gentlemen of the town. When he reached the top of Great Hill he called on his driver to stop, and casting his eyes back over the wide and charming landscape he remarked in admiring tones upon its beauty, and with this pleasant word at parting he bade our town adieu.

Nine years later a ludicrous occurrence took place in Exeter, in connection with an expected visit from Washington's successor in the office of President. In the summer of 1798, while the court was in session and the public-houses filled to overflowing, two young men from Boston drove into town at a late hour, and attempted to obtain lodgings for the night. There was no room at any public-house, and the private houses were all closed and dark. The young men cast about for an expedient to rouse the people. It took but a moment to concoct a story. They informed the sitters-up at the public-houses that President Adams was coming on from Haverhill to Exeter that night, and would shortly arrive. They had ridden on in advance to give the information. The news spread like wildfire. Lights were soon visible in every house, and there was mounting in hot haste to form a cavalcade for the President's reception. Meantime the two young men who had caused all this commotion found a private house whose occupants being aroused were willing to give them lodgings, and were soon snug in bed; while the victims of their practical joke, after having waited and ridden for hours in vain, were fain at last to betake themselves to rest, with the consciousness of having been egregiously hoaxed. It is doubtful whether it was any satisfaction for them to feel that though they were too late to escort Washington, they could not be said to be behind time with regard to Adams.

Annexation of Massachusetts.—The following inhabitants of Exeter petitioned in 1739 to be annexed to Massachusetts:

CHAPTER XXXVII.

ECCLÉSIASTICAL HISTORY.

First Congregational Church—The Second Congregational Church—The Baptist Church—The Methodist Episcopal Church—Episcopal Church—Roman Catholic—Unitarian—Atheist.

First Congregational Church.—The little colony which accompanied or followed John Wheelwright to the falls of Squamscott in 1638, was essentially a religious one. It was composed in great part of those who had been members of his flock in England, and of those who had suffered for adhering to his theological opinions in Massachusetts. It is not strange, therefore, that a church was gathered within a few months after their arrival here. From the records of the church at Boston we learn that on the 30th of December, 1638, "dismissal was granted to our brethren, Mr. John Wheelwright, Richard Morris, Richard Bulgar, Philemon Pormont, Christopher Marshall, Isaac Grosse, George Wayte, Thomas Wardhall, and William Wardhall into the church at the falls of Pascataqua, if they be rightly gathered and ordered." It is probable that they all became members of the first church of Exeter, and that an equal or larger number of Wheelwright's former English parishioners were also connected with it. Of the thirty-four persons who signed the "combination" with Wheelwright in 1639, we know from the preamble of the instrument itself that a part were brethren of the church, and the others inhabitants simply. It has been stated, upon what authority we know not, that the church was formed of eight members, comprising Wheelwright and those who, as his adherents, had been dismissed from the church in Boston; but this is apparently erroneous. As no records are in existence to afford the information, the number of those who composed the original church can probably never be ascertained, but there is reason to believe that among them were at least one-half of the signers of the combination. It is evident from the terms of the mode of government adopted by the settlers, and from their laws and ordinances, that the religious element was the controlling one in their little community.

Mr. Wheelwright remained in Exeter, as is supposed, until 1643, when all the settlements in New Hampshire having passed under the authority of Massachusetts, from which colony he had been banished, he removed with a few connections and intimate friends to Wells in Maine. It is probable that he did this from an apprehension that he might be subjected to further annoyance if he continued within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, without having made his peace with the authorities of that colony. There is some reason to believe that Mr. Wheelwright's removal was not expected to be permanent. There are votes upon the town records which indicate that the inhabitants understood that he might return to Exeter. And before he had been very long at Wells, too, he took the first steps towards a reconciliation with the authorities of Massachusetts, which resulted in the reversal of the sentence of banishment against him.

When it became evident that Mr. Wheelwright was not to return, the people of Exeter made an attempt to call the aged Stephen Bachiler, who had been dismissed from Hampton for irregular conduct, to become their minister. But as there was a division on the subject among the people, and as Mr. Bachiler was not thought to be a peace-maker, the General Court of Massachusetts interfered, and prohibited any action in the premises "until this court or the court of Ipswich, upon further satisfaction of their (the people's) reconciliation or fitness, shall give allowance thereunto." Divers petitions from Hampton and Exeter followed, and the court ordered two or three magistrates to go to Hampton with full power to hear and determine all differences there. The result was that the intention of settling Mr. Bachiler was abandoned.

In 1646 another attempt was made to procure a minister in Exeter, and some of the inhabitants went so far as to bind themselves to pay what Mr. Wheelwright should ask for his house and land, for the use of Mr. Nathaniel Norcross, who was a young minister and a "university scholar," in Massachusetts. It is not known that Mr. Norcross received a call; if he did, it was not accepted. There were still divisions and dissensions among the people in regard to their spiritual affairs, and at least one petition was forwarded on that account to the General Court of Massachusetts, the great resort for the remedy of all grievances, and on the 27th of October, 1647, that body passed an order that Mr. Ezekiel Rogers, Mr. Nathaniel Rogers, and Mr. Norton be requested and authorized "to examine the grounds of the complaint, and if it may be, to compose things among them (the people of Exeter), which if they cannot do, then to certify to this court what they find, and also think best to be done, which may conduce to peace and the continuance of the ordinances amongst them."

Possibly the labors of these gentlemen may have had a pacifying effect upon the discordant elements, for on the 16th of November, 1648, it was voted by the inhabitants of Exeter that Mr. Thompson, of Braintree, be invited to become their minister, "and in case he can be attained to come, that he shall be allowed by the town thirty pounds a year and the profits that shall come to the town by the saw-mill, and the use of the house and land which was purchased of Mr. Wheelwright so long as he continues with us as a minister; and Christopher Lawson, Edward Gilman, and John Legat are appointed to act in the invitation to him if he may be attained, or if not, then to have power to act in the invitation of some other, with the counsel and advice of the elders of Boston, Charlestown, and Roxbury."

It would appear that Mr. Thompson declined the invitation.

At a town-meeting held the 22d of April, 1649, it was voted to invite Mr. Emerson, of Rowley, to come to Exeter as the minister; but he did not see fit to accept the call.

But the wishes of the people were at length gratified; for at a town-meeting on the 30th of May, 1650, it was unanimously agreed between Rev. Samuel Dudley and the town of Exeter "that Mr. Dudley is forthwith, as soon as comfortable subsistence can be made by the town for him and his family in the house which was purchased of Mr. Wheelwright, that then the said Mr. Dudley is to come and inhabit Exeter, and to be a minister of God's word unto us until such time as God shall be pleased to make way for the gathering of a church, and then to be ordained our pastor or teacher according to the ordinance of God." The town agreed to fit up the Wheelwright house, and to fence in a yard and garden, and to allow forty pounds a year towards the maintenance of Mr. Dudley and his family, with the use and sole improvement of the house and lands and meadow bought of Mr. Wheelwright, during the time he, Mr. Dudley, should continue to be their minister. The town also agreed that "what cost Mr. Dudley should bestow about the said house and lands in the time of his improvement, the town is to allow unto him or his so much as the said house and lands are bettered by it at the time of the said Mr. Dudley's leaving it, either by death or some more than ordinary call of God other ways." And it was further stipulated "that the old cow-house which was Mr. Wheelwright's shall by the town be fitted up fit for the setting of cattle in, and that the aforesaid pay of forty pounds a year is to be made in good pay every half year in corn and English commodities at a price current as they go generally in the country at the time or times of payment."

The agreement with Mr. Dudley took effect immediately, and he undoubtedly entered upon the discharge of his ministerial functions at once. Indeed, there is reason to believe that he had been serving the town in the same capacity before that time. We learn, moreover, from the agreement that the church that had been gathered and maintained during Mr. Wheelwright's stay in Exeter had failed to preserve its organization for the seven years when it was without a pastor.

At a town-meeting on the 26th of June, 1650, it was voted to pay Francis Swaine twenty shillings "for his pains and time in going into the bay to collect Mr. Dudley his pay." This refers, no doubt, to the "English commodities" which the town were to furnish Mr. Dudley in part payment of his salary. There was little money in the frontier settlement, and some merchant in the bay (Massachusetts) was contracted with to supply the imported goods for Mr. Dudley, and to receive in exchange from his Exeter parishioners lumber and such other articles as they could furnish.

At the same town-meeting it was resolved "that a meeting-house shall be built, of twenty foot square, as soon as workmen can conveniently be procured to do it, and the place appointed for it is at the corner of William Taylor's lot next the street, and William Taylor is to have of the town twenty shillings for five rods square of his land in that place."

The people of Exeter having engaged the services of Mr. Dudley, took prompt and efficient measures to procure the payment of his stipulated salary. The town records inform us that at a meeting on the 5th of December, 1650, it was "agreed upon that the townsmen (who performed substantially the duties of selectmen) shall have power to make a rate upon all such of the inhabitants of the town as do not voluntarily bring in according to their abilities, for the satisfying of the town's engagement unto Mr. Dudley for his maintenance." It had previously been determined that every inhabitant of the town should pay, "for every thousand of pipe-staves they made, two shillings, which should be for the maintenance of the ministry; and for every thousand of hoghead-staves, one and sixpence; and for every thousand of bolts that is sold before they be made into staves, four shillings; and also what is due from the saw-mills shall be for the maintenance of the ministry." And in order to establish the priority of this claim above all others, it was provided that "any man that shall deliver any staves or bolts before they have satisfied the town order shall pay ten shillings for every thousand staves, and twenty shillings for every thousand bolts."

It was also voted at said meeting on the 5th of December, 1650, that if Francis Swaine and Henry Roby, or either of them, shall make a bargain with any able merchant of the bay to pay or cause to be paid unto Mr. Dudley the sum of forty pounds in good English commodities in May next, for his whole year's maintenance, and to accept of hoghead-staves or pipe-staves for the said forty pounds worth of goods, then the town do agree to stand to their bargain which they shall make, and to bring in their proportional parts of hoghead-staves or pipe-staves unto the said Henry Roby or Francis Swaine to satisfy their agreement."

While the inhabitants were thus solicitous to secure their minister from want, they were no less ready to protect him from defamation. They authorized the three townsmen—Henry Roby, Thomas King, and John Legat—"to vindicate the credit and reputation of Mr. Dudley against the reproachful speeches and calumniations of John Garland, by proceeding against him in law, according to the demerits of his offence." It is not known that any suit was ever brought against the slanderer; he probably found means by apology, or otherwise, to avoid such a result.

Apparently nothing was done under the vote to build a meeting-house, passed June 26, 1650, for a couple of years after. To be sure, at a town-meeting held Sept. 1, 1652, it was ordered that the house should "begin to be built upon the next second day (Monday), and a rate to be made how much work every man shall do towards it, and so to be called forth to work upon it by Thomas King and John Legat as need shall require; that the work be not neglected till it be finished, and that every man that neglects to come to work upon a day's warning, he shall pay five shillings a day, to be forthwith levied by the constable." Yet at a subsequent meeting, July 8, 1652, "it was ordered that a meeting-house shall forthwith be built, and that every man, both servants as well as others, shall come forth to work upon it as they are called out by the surveyor of the work, upon the penalty of five shillings for every day's neglect; and teams are to be brought forth to the work by the owners as they are called for by the said surveyors upon the penalty of ten shillings a day for their neglect, and the surveyors or overseers appointed for the said work are Mr. Edward Gilman, Thomas King, and Edward Hilton, Jr., and they are to see the work finished and not to have it neglected."

Undoubtedly the people were moved to commence and carry through the enterprise soon after; for a vote of the town in November, 1652, alludes to the "finishing" of the building, and the return of a board of commissioners to lay out the west part of Hampton, in August, 1653, mentions the "Exeter meeting-house," which would imply that it was then completed.

Where Mr. Dudley's congregation worshiped in the mean time, whether in the primitive structure that is understood to have been erected in Mr. Wheelwright's ministry or elsewhere, we have no means of knowledge, nor is it certainly known where this church was located; but there is reason to believe that it was not far from the site which tradition assigns to the earlier building. It continued to be used as the place for public worship for more than forty years.

In 1664 a lean-to with a chimney was added to the meeting-house, to serve as a watch-house. Some time after this, probably, Edward Smith, Biley Dudley, Edward Gilman, and perhaps others built a gallery in the house, which was confirmed to them by a vote of the town in 1678; and at the same time said Smith, Gilman, Jonathan Thing, Peter Folsom, Nathaniel Lad, and Moses Levit were allowed to build a gallery for their wives at the end of the men's gallery, leaving room for still another, if desired, which Mrs. Sarah Wadley, Sarah Young, Alice Gilman, Abigail Wadley, Ephraim Marden's wife, Grace Gilman, and Mary Lawrence had leave to erect and set up at the north end of the house.

It would appear that within a few years after Mr. Dudley's settlement the town had lost some inhabitants, perhaps persons of means, so that they were unable to continue his salary; and as he "was not willing to urge that from them which they could not comfortably discharge," it was agreed between them, on the 13th of June, 1655, that "the contract made at the time of his settlement should be annulled, that he should lay down his minister-character, and that his future exercises on the Sabbath-day should be done as a private person, he intending and promising to be helpful, what so may with convenience, either in his own house or some other which shall be appointed for the Sabbath exercises."

The next year the town of Portsmouth, understanding, probably, that Mr. Dudley was relieved of his Exeter charge, passed a vote to invite him to remove thither and become their minister, and the selectmen of that town were authorized to communicate the vote and make a contract with him. He received the proposition favorably, and agreed to visit Portsmouth the next spring.

The danger of losing their minister seems to have aroused the inhabitants of Exeter to new efforts, for at "a full town-meeting" on the 8th of June, 1657, "it was ordained and agreed that so long as Mr. Samuel Dudley shall continue to be a minister in the town of Exeter, which shall be till there be some just cause for him to remove, whereof he is not to be judge himself, but other indifferent, understanding men,—the fewness of the people, or greater maintenance to be a cause are expected,—the town of Exeter is to pay the said Samuel the sum of fifty pounds yearly in merchantable pine boards and merchantable pipe-staves, both to be delivered at the water-side, at the town of Exeter, at the current price as they shall go at when they are delivered." The residue, in case full compensation was not thus made, was to be taken in corn, and the payments were to be in equal installments on the 29th of September and the 24th of June in each year. The wheelwright property was also fully confirmed to Mr. Dudley, and it was provided that the selectmen of the town should yearly "gather up" the said sum of fifty pounds, and in case they should fail to do so, they should be answerable to the town for their default, and make up out of their own pockets whatever they failed to collect! It is somewhat doubtful if the selectmen of our day would be willing to accept such a liability; and perhaps it was only the fear of being deprived of their minister—which reconciled them to the condition two centuries ago.

This action on the part of the town had the desired effect of inducing Mr. Dudley to abandon all thoughts of removing to Portsmouth, and to retain him to pursue his useful labors in Exeter.

Mr. Dudley being an excellent man of business, and holding the pen of a ready writer, was frequently employed by his parishioners in secular affairs. At a meeting of the town on the 4th of March, 1658, a grant of certain land was made to him in consideration of his drawing off from the town book all the former grants and necessary orders in relation thereto, which it it was stipulated were to be "fairly written." It was also provided, singularly enough, that if he should find recorded any grant or order to hinder this grant of land to himself, the latter should be void, which is evidence of the entire confidence reposed by the people in his integrity.

In 1660 something was needed to be done to the house of worship, either by way of addition or repairs, as the selectmen were authorized, in case they should be "forced to lay out of their own estates towards the fitting up of the meeting-house," to make a rate to reimburse themselves. This was a great advance on the earlier rule, which apparently required the selectmen to make good any deficiency in the minister's salary; and subsequent votes of the town, as will be seen, still further relieved them from responsibility in parochial affairs.

At a town-meeting on the 15th of March, 1668, it was ordered that Lieut. Hall be empowered to "arrest and sue any that belong to the town that refuse to pay to the rate of the ministry." And in 1671 it was agreed that the selectmen should be exonerated from the duty of collecting the minister-rate, and that thenceforth Mr. Dudley was to "gather up his rate himself," in consideration whereof he was to receive sixty pounds, instead of fifty pounds, yearly. The selectmen were to assess the tax, and in case any inhabitant should refuse to pay, they were to empower Mr. Dudley to "get it by the constable."

Either this method of obtaining his salary was impracticable or unsatisfactory to Mr. Dudley, or the infirmities of age soon compelled him to withdraw from his charge; for it was but five years later that the place of worship in Exeter appears to have been strangely neglected, if we may give full credit to the allegations of the record of a court held at Hampton in May, 1676, which was as follows: "The town of Exeter being presented for letting their meeting-house lie open and common for cattle to go into, this Court doth order that the selectmen of Exeter do take effectual care that the said house be cleaned, and be made clean enough for christians to meet in, and the doors hung and kept shut; and this to be done and signified to Mr. Dalton, under the hand of the constable, by the next Sabbath day, come se'ennight, or else to forfeit five pounds; that for the time to come they should keep the said house commodiously tight and suitable for such a place, upon the like penalty."

Mr. Dudley died in 1683, at the age of seventy-seven years, the last thirty-five of which he passed in Exeter; and was buried, it is believed, in the old graveyard near the present gas-works. He was connected by blood and marriage with some of the principal men of Massachusetts, and the people of Exeter were fortunate, in every respect, in having him to settle among them. He was able to allay all jealous feelings on the part of Massachusetts towards Exeter by his acquaintance with the dignitaries of that colony, and he was unquestionably a diligent and faithful spiritual teacher and guide.

For some years after Mr. Dudley's decease there was no settled or regular minister in Exeter, but it is probable that religious worship was conducted by such clergymen as might be temporarily engaged. In 1683, Rev. John Cotton, before and afterwards of Hampton, is mentioned in a contemporary account as of Exeter, so it is probable that he ministered here for a time. Elder William Wentworth certainly officiated here before October, 1690, as the town then voted to treat with him "for his continuance with them in the ministry." Mr. Wentworth remained in the office of minister in Exeter until some time in 1693, when the growing infirmities of years must have disqualified him for the work.

The course adopted by the town in selecting his successor strikingly illustrates the simple fashions of the time, and the general concern felt throughout the community in relation to the spiritual concerns of even a remote and feeble settlement. On the 23d of June, 1693, Capt. John Gilman and Biley Dudley were chosen "in behalf of the town to go to the neighboring ministers and take their advice for a meet person to supply the office of the ministry in the town of Exeter." The search seems to have been successful, for only three months afterward a committee was raised to treat with Rev. John Clark, and on the 10th of October, in the same year, Capt. John Gilman, Capt. Peter Coffin, and Capt. Robert Wadleigh were empowered to agree with Mr. Clark to become the minister of Exeter, and to fix his salary for the first half-year, the town engaging to pay the same.

But Mr. Clark was not to be secured at once. It is not known why he did not remove sooner to Exeter, but it may be conjectured that he required, not unreasonably, that the inhabitants should first prove their disposition and ability to sustain a religious society by erecting a suitable house of worship. However that might have been, in January, 1695, at two meetings of the town, the subject of building a new meeting-house was discussed, and at length determined; and "the major part of the town saw cause to erect and set the house on the hill between the great fort and Nat Folsom's barn." But the location of a public building is never an easy matter for a town to agree upon, and a controversy afterwards arose in regard to it, which was only settled at last by a committee chosen for the purpose. Capt. Coffin was employed to keep the account of the work done by the inhabitants upon the house, and the rate allowed was three shillings a day for men, and for lads what the committee should order.

The location decided upon was just in front of the site of the present lower (First Congregational) church, and there the meeting-house, evidently of no mean proportions, was placed, being completed about the beginning of the year 1697. It had doors at the east and west ends, the pulpit on the north side, and stairs leading to a women's gallery on the south side. Pews were built round the sides, and the middle space was probably occupied with benches.

At a town-meeting on the 3d of February, 1697, it was voted "that the new meeting-house should be seated by the committee now chosen, viz., Capt. Moore, Mr. Smart, Biley Dudley, Capt. Hall, Lieut. Leavitt, and Mr. Moses Leavitt; and the committee have full power to seat the people in their places and power to grant places for pews to whom they see meet; and those men that have places for pews shall sit in them with their families, and not be seated nowhere else." On the same day the committee assigned places for pews, as follows: to Kinsley Hall, his wife and five children, at the west door; to Moses Leavitt and family, at the left hand of hall; to Edward Hilton, for wife and son Winthrop, his wife and two daughters, Mary and Sobriety, on the north side of the meeting-house, joining to the pulpit and Moses Leavitt's pew; to Richard Hilton, for himself, wife, children, mother, and sister Rebecca, on the north side of the meeting-house, joining to the parsonage pew; to Mr. Wilson, his wife and son Thomas, and two daughters, Martha and Mary, and Elizabeth Gilman, joining unto Richard Hilton's, on the east side of the meeting-house; to Nicholas Gilman and wife, and John and Else and Catherine, at the east door; to Robert Wadleigh and wife and son Jonathan a place at the south side, adjoining to the women's stairs; and to Elizabeth Coffin, widow of Robert Coffin, and children, Simon Wiggin and family, next to Jeremiah Gilman's.

It is probable that Mr. Clark preached for a time in Exeter before his ordination, which was fixed to be on the 21st of September, 1698. The 7th of September was ordered to be observed as a day of humiliation. On the Sunday preceding the ordination a confession of faith and covenant, which had been previously agreed upon, were signed by the following-named persons, who were the first members of the first church in Exeter, the organization of which has ever since been maintained: John Clark (pastor), John Gilman, Peter Coffin, William Moore, Thomas Wiggin, Kinsley Hall, Theophilus Dudley, Samuel Leavitt, Biley Dudley, Moses Leavitt, John Folsom, Henry Wadleigh, Jonathan Robinson, Thomas Dudley, John Scrivener, Nicholas Gilman, Richard Glidden, Elizabeth Gilman, Elizabeth Clark, Judith Wilson, Margaret Beal, Sarah Dudley, Deborah Sinkler, Deborah Coffin, Sarah Lowell, Mehitabel Smith.

The church having been organized on the day appointed, the ordination exercises were performed by Rev. Mr. Hale, who preached the sermon, Rev. Mr. Pike, who made the prayer before imposition of hands, Rev. Mr. Woodbridge, who gave the charge, and Rev. Mr. Cotton, who gave the right hand of fellowship.

Mr. Clark received at first sixty pounds a year for his salary, with the use of the parsonage lot and a certain meadow, to which ten pounds more were afterwards added to cover the expense of firewood and fencing of the lands. It was also agreed that the town should furnish him a parsonage house, but he subsequently consented to dispense with that stipulation on condition that the town should pay him one hundred pounds instead thereof.

Mr. Clark remained in charge of the church in Exeter until his death in 1705, at the age of thirty-five years. He was highly esteemed by his people; they paid to his widow the full amount of his salary, and erected a tomb over his remains at the expense of the town, and twenty years later made repairs upon the same. The grave of Mr. Clark is in the yard of the lower church, and upon his tombstone were inscribed these lines:

"A prophet lies under the stone,
His words shall live tho' he be gone
When preachers die, what rules the pulpit gave
Of living are still preached from their grave.
The faith and life which your dead pastor taught
Now in one grave with him, sirs, bury not."

A few days after the decease of Mr. Clark the town voted to observe the last Wednesday of August as a day of humiliation, and appointed a committee "to take care of the ministers" who should preach in Exeter before that day and take advice of them or any other person they might think proper respecting a suitable minister to be settled here. Early in September a committee, consisting of Lieut. Nicholas Gilman and Jonathan Thing, was appointed to give some minister a call and engage him for the term of three months, and were instructed to invite Mr. Adams, Mr. White, or Mr. Curin (?) for that duty.

It is probable that a temporary engagement was not found satisfactory, for two months afterwards a vote was passed to call a minister in order to a full settlement should the town and said minister agree. In the April following (1706) the town voted to give Rev. John Odlin a call to carry on the work of the ministry, and appointed a committee of ten persons, a major part of whom were empowered to make a full agreement in behalf of the town with him "for his salary and other things needful." Under this authority they contracted to pay him seventy pounds a year, together with the strangers' contribution money, and allow him the use of the parsonage and two hundred acres of land, and to give him an outfit of one hundred pounds in money towards his settlement.

Mr. Odlin was ordained on the 12th of November, 1706. He was a young man, having graduated at Harvard College only four years before. He married Mrs. Clark, the widow of his predecessor, and his pastorate only ended with his life.

Ere many years had passed the want of a new place of worship began to be felt. The town had increased in population, and the Indian wars had for the time ceased to alarm and keep down the frontier settlements. When men ventured to go to church without arms in their hands, the tide of immigration began to assume its natural flow. On the 16th of December, 1728, it was determined that a new meeting-house should be built, and placed on some part of the land purchased of Capt. Peter Coffin, on which the meeting-house then stood.

But so important an undertaking required time, and it was not until the spring of 1731 that the new building was finished. It was placed close by the old meeting-house, which was not removed until after its completion. In March and April, 1731, the pews were sold as follows:

This, which was the fourth house of worship erected in Exeter, was a large structure, with two galleries, and a broad aisle running up to the pulpit, on each side of which were benches for those who did not own pews, and who, agreeably to the fashion of the time, had seats assigned them according to age. A high steeple was added to the edifice soon afterwards, at the charge of some public-spirited citizens, who presented it to the town, and a bell was purchased and hung to make all complete. The steeple stood till 1775, when it was blown down in a heavy gale, and rebuilt at the expense of the town; the building lasted till 1798, when it was replaced by the present edifice, which is still standing on the same spot.

In November, 1731, the town voted to take down the old meeting-house at once, and with the materials to build a court-house, which was located on the opposite side of the street, just below where the Squamscott House now is.

Mr. Odlin ministered to the people of his charge to their acceptance for more than thirty years, and until the time of the "great awakening" under the influence of Whitefield. Mr. Odlin set his face conscientiously against the "new lights," and though a majority of his parishioners agreed with him, a considerable minority were of a different opinion and zealously supported the views of Whitefield. In 1743 the major part of the people joined in a request to Rev. Woodbridge Odlin, son of Rev. John Odlin, to settle over them as the colleague of his father. As it was known that the sentiments of both were in harmony, the partisans of the Whitefield doctrine voted against the younger Mr. Odlin, and being outnumbered, withdrew to the number of forty-one persons, and on the 7th of June, 1744, were organized into the Second Church.

Mr. W. Odlin was ordained on the 28th of September, 1743, his father preaching the sermon on the occasion. He is represented as having been a man of genuine piety, and of modest and unaffected simple manners. He succeeded in keeping his church and people well united, though in time of the troubles between the colonies and Great Britain he took an early and decided stand in favor of the former. He died in 1776, and his parish voted a gift of twenty-five pounds to his widow.

In July, 1776, a call was given to Rev. Isaac Mansfield, who was then serving as a chaplain in the Continental army, to settle over the first church and society. The reply was favorable, and Mr. Mansfield was ordained Oct. 9, 1776, Rev. Mr. Thayer, of Kingston, preaching the sermon on the occasion, Rev. Mr. Fogg, of Kensington, delivering the charge, and Rev. Mr. Webster, of Salisbury, giving the right hand of fellowship. Mr. Mansfield was a native of Marblehead, Mass., a graduate of Harvard College, and a man of good capacity, and we have his own authority for saying that during the greater part of his pastorate here of nearly eleven years his situation was pleasant and his people well united. But some imprudences on his part at last weakened the ties between them, and he was dismissed at his own request, made according to an agreement with the parish, Sept. 18, 1787.

Nearly three years elapsed after Mr. Mansfield's dismissal before a successor was obtained. Rev. Mr. Tappan (who was afterwards Professor of Divinity at Cambridge) received a call, but, because it was not unanimous, declined it.

In January, 1790, an invitation was given to Rev. William F. Rowland to become the pastor, and an annual salary of "four hundred Spanish milled dollars" was voted him. Mr. Rowland accepted the call, and was ordained June 2, 1790. Rev. Messrs. McCintock, of Greenland, Thacher, of Boston, Langdon, of Hampton Falls, and Morse, of Charlestown, performed the various services of ordination. Mr. Rowland was a native of Plainfield, Conn., and a graduate of Dartmouth College. He ministered to this congregation for thirty-eight years, and was dismissed at his own request, Dec. 5, 1828. He was a worthy man, of good abilities and fervent piety. The remainder of his life he passed in Exeter, and died in 1843 at the age of eighty-two years.

The next permanent occupant of the pulpit was Rev. John Smith, a native of Wetherfield, Conn., and a graduate of Yale College. He was installed March 12, 1829; Rev. Mr. Bouton, of Concord, Rev. Mr. Miltimore, of Newbury, and Rev. Mr. Hurd, of the Second Church in Exeter, assisting in the ceremony. His ministry was a harmonious and successful one, and he was dismissed at his own request, Feb. 14, 1838.

He was followed by Rev. William Williams, who was installed May 31st in the same year. Mr. Williams' stay was short, as, on account of difficulties which arose, he resigned his office Oct. 1, 1842. He subsequently entered the medical profession.

Rev. Joy H. Fairchild, a native of Guilford, Conn., was the next minister, his installation occurring Sept. 20, 1843. His connection was a very brief one, as he tendered his resignation June 18, 1844. The protracted controversies which arose respecting a charge of incontinence at the place of his prior settlement, which was preferred against him, may well be permitted at this day to pass into oblivion.

Rev. Roswell D. Hitchcock next succeeded to the desk of this church, and was ordained Nov. 19, 1845. He remained until July 7, 1852, when he was dismissed at his own request. He is now a distinguished professor in the Union Theological Seminary, in New York City.

His successor was Rev. William D. Hitchcock, who was installed Oct. 5, 1853. His ministry commenced with most auspicious prospects, which were terminated in a single year by his death, Nov. 23, 1854.

It was not until June 19, 1856, that Rev. Nathaniel Lasell, the next succeeding minister, was installed. After a service of three years he asked for his dismissal, which was granted June 12, 1859. He was subsequently employed in the profession of teaching.

Rev. Elias Nason, a native of Newburyport, and a graduate of Brown University, was installed Nov. 22, 1860, and was dismissed at his own desire, May 30, 1865. He has since lived in Billerica, Mass., and is well known for his antiquarian tastes and writings.

Rev. John O. Barrows, who was installed Dec. 5, 1866, received his dismissal Oct. 6, 1869, which he had requested that he might enter upon foreign mission service in Asia.

Rev. Swift Byington, the present minister of this society, was installed June 2, 1871. He is the sixteenth in order of those who have been settled as spiritual guides over the First Church in Exeter.

The Second Congregational Church.—The members of the original parish who seceded from it in 1743 and united to form a new society proceeded in the same or the following year to build a house of worship. It was situated on the lot where Mrs. W. V. Cobb's house now stands, and was a building of two stories and respectable capacity. It stood parallel with the street, and on the western end was a goody steeple, surmounted with a vane. The pulpit was on the side opposite the front door, and a gallery ran round the other three sides. It was this meeting-house in which Whitefield essayed to preach on the day before his death, when it was found all too small to contain his thronging auditors, and he was compelled to address them in the open air, on the opposite side of the way.

The seceders naturally wished to be exonerated from paying taxes for the support of the old parish when they ceased to worship there, but the law of that day was against them, and though the town was repeatedly urged to relieve them from the burden the majority would never consent to do so. A petition to the General Assembly of the province for setting off a new parish was opposed by the town and failed. But the society struggled on, and in 1746 made an unsuccessful attempt to procure Rev. Samuel Buel to become their minister, and in 1747, invited Mr. John Phillips, one of their own number, and afterwards the founder of the Phillips Academy, to act as their pastor, but he declined on the ground of his inability to perform all the duties of the clerical office. Thereupon they extended a call to Rev. Daniel Rogers, who accepted it, and was settled over them Aug. 31, 1747. He was a son of Rev. John Rogers, of Ipswich, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard College, where he had also passed some years as a tutor. It has been supposed that his family was directly descended from John Rogers, the Smithfield martyr, but later researches show that this is problematical at least.

A second application, made to the General Assembly in 1755, for the incorporation of a new parish was successful, and the following-named persons were the same year assessed as members thereof: Jonathan Ambrose, Joseph Akers, Josiah Barker, John Bowden, Edward Colcord, Wadly Cram, Thomas Dean, John Dean, Samuel Dollof, Abner Dollof, Joseph Dollof, Nathaniel Folsom, Jeremiah Folsom, Peter Gilman, Samuel Gilman, Daniel Gilman, John Gilman, Jr., Mary Gilman, Nehemiah Gilman, Josiah Gilman, Samuel Gilman, Jr., Trueworthy Gilman, Summersbe Gilman, Daniel Gilman (3), Nicholas Gilman, John Hains, William Harris, Dudley James, Jonathan Judkins, John Lord, John Looge, Jr., Nathaniel Ladd, Josiah Ladd, Elias Ladd, Thomas Lord, Robert Light, John Leavitt, Jonathan Lord, Edmund Looge, Joseph Mudgett, Thomas Nealey, John Phillips, Thomas Piper, Stephen Palmer, John Robinson, Peter Robinson, Benjamin Rogers, Theophilus Smith, Richard Smith, Nicholas Smith, Richard Smith, Jr., Joseph Swazey, Samuel Smith, Joseph Stacy, Joseph Smith, Benjamin Thing, David Thing, Stephen Thing, James Thurstin, Abner Thurstin, Jonathan Young.

The same year a mutual council was agreed upon by both churches for the purpose of attempting a reconciliation of the differences which existed between them, but without avail.

Rev. Mr. Rogers remained the minister of the new parish until his death, Dec. 19, 1785. For thirty-seven years he labored with piety and zeal for the good of his people, and in his decease it was said "they sustained the loss of a faithful minister, and his children that of a kind and tender father." His parishioners, in token of their respect for his memory, voted to bear the expense of his funeral.

After the death of Mr. Rogers, the new parish was without a settled minister for nearly seven years. In 1787 and the two subsequent years this parish united with the other in defraying the expenses of supporting the ministry. It may interest some readers to know who bore the charges of religious worship in Exeter almost a hundred years ago, and we therefore transcribe from an official paper the following list of those "who contributed for the support of a minister for the year 1788," nineteen of the persons therein mentioned belonging to the new, and the remainder to the old parish: John Phillips, Nathaniel Folsom, Samuel Folsom, Gideon Lamson, Nathaniel Gilman, Joseph Tilton, Eliphalet Hale, Ephraim Robinson, Trueworthy Gilman, Benjamin Boardman, Oliver Peabody, Samuel Hobart, Dudley Odlin, Benjamin Smith, Josiah Robinson, James Leavitt, William Hale, Abraham Sanborn, Josiah Barker, Joseph Cram, James Hackett, Samuel Gilman, Thomas Dean, John Dean, Ward C. Dean, Isaac Williams, Nathaniel Gordon, James Gilman, James Thurston, Jeremiah Leavitt, Joseph Swazey, James Burley, Benjamin Conner, Isaac Currier, Jacob Pearson, Simeon Ladd, Samuel Chamberlain, John Thompson, Moses Jewett, Edmund Pearson, Eliphalet Gilman, Samuel Dutch, Josiah Folsom, Nathaniel Giddings, Daniel Jones, Josiah Gilman, Jr., David Boardman, George Odiorne, Francis Mason, Joseph Lamson, James Folsom, Nathaniel Parker, Daniel Tilton, Benjamin C. Gilman, J. Gilman, Jr., Woodbridge Odlin, Samuel Brooks.

It was greatly hoped at that time, when both societies were without ministers, that a permanent reunion could be effected between them; but though a more cordial understanding was established than had before existed, they still retained their distinct organizations.

In 1790 the second parish voted to invite Rev. Samuel Austin, of New Haven, who had repeatedly officiated in their pulpit, to settle with them, but he did not accept. Not long after, however, they were so fortunate as to secure for their minister Rev. Joseph Brown, who was installed over them Nov. 20, 1792. He was a native of Chester, in England, and educated at Lady Huntingdon's Seminary. He remained in Exeter but five years, being dismissed at his own request in 1797, but his ministrations appear to have been quite successful. The parish voted him a present of fifty dollars at his departure.

The new society, being now without a pastor, gradually declined in numbers and interest, and several of the more influential members of the church sought the communion of their brethren of the other parish. The society organization, however, was kept up, and religious services were held with more or less frequency. At length, about 1813, several of the former members having returned, a new impulse appeared to be given to the society, and stated worship was resumed with regularity. Rev. Hosea Hildreth, a resident of the town and a teacher in the academy, was employed to supply the pulpit, which he did till Rev. Isaac Hurl began his ministrations.

Mr. Hurl was installed as the pastor, Sept. 11, 1817. He was born in Charlestown, Mass., received his theological education in Edinburgh, and first preached in London. Upon his return to this country he was settled for a time in Lynn, Mass. When he came to Exeter he found but a small and feeble church, but under his faithful and judicious care it speedily increased in strength and numbers. In 1823 the society had become of sufficient size and ability to build a new meeting-house, which is still standing in the southeastern end of the academy inclosure, and substantially unchanged, except that its length was increased by the addition of about fifteen feet in the year 1863.

After a harmonious and successful ministry of nearly thirty years, Mr. Hurl proposed to the society to settle a colleague with him, generously relinquishing all claim for pecuniary compensation thereafter. The society, gratefully acknowledging his faithful and efficient labors and assuring him of their unwavering affection, assented to the proposal, and in pursuance thereof Rev. Samuel D. Dexter was ordained as colleague pastor Dec. 2, 1847. He was a native of Boston, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard College, and his personal and religious character were such as to give him a strong hold upon the people, but his labors were cut short by his death, April 20, 1850, at the early age of twenty-four years. And six years later, Oct. 4, 1856, Rev. Isaac Hurd, D.D., at a good old age, beloved, respected, and honored for his amiable character, his Christian virtues, and his faithful labors, passed from earth.

Rev. Asa D. Mann was installed as colleague in the place of Mr. Dexter, Nov. 19, 1851. Mr. Mann was born in Randolph, Mass., was a graduate of Amherst College, and had been settled in Hardwick, Mass., before he came to Exeter. After a little less than six years' service here he was dismissed from his charge, July 8, 1857.

He was succeeded by Rev. Orpheus T. Lamphear, who was installed Feb. 2, 1858, and dismissed in February, 1864. Rev. John W. Chickering, Jr., was his successor, his installation taking place Sept. 5, 1865, and his dismissal July 18, 1870. Rev. Messrs. Mann and Lamphear are still engaged in the work of the ministry, and Rev. Mr. Chickering is a professor in the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Washington.

The eighth and present pastor of the new society is Rev. George E. Street, who was installed March 30, 1871.

The Baptist Church.—A Baptist Church was organized in Exeter, Oct. 17, 1809, consisting of ten members, and a society was formed the next spring by voluntary subscription. Meetings for religious worship were thenceforward held regularly on the Lord's day, though the limited number and means of the society enabled them at first to have preaching but a part of the time. Rev. Messrs. William Hooper, John Peak, Samuel Shepard, and other well-known ministers of their denomination lent them occasional aid at this early period. They first used to meet at the house of Harvey Colcord, afterwards at the Centre school-house. In 1805 they built and dedicated their first meeting-house, which was situated on Spring Street.

In 1806, Mr. Barnabas Bates preached for them during several months, and in the spring of 1809, Rev. Ebenezer L. Boyd became their preacher and labored with them for two years with encouraging results. In 1814 and the two succeeding years, Rev. Charles O. Kimball and Rev. James McGregore supplied their pulpit a part of the time.

In the year 1817 a Sabbath school was first commenced in connection with the society, which has ever since been continued. The first teacher was the now venerable Deacon John F. Moses, who for half a century, with little interruption, held the position of superintendent.

Their first settled minister was Rev. Ferdinand Ellis, who took the position in June, 1818, and occupied it until September, 1828. In the autumn of the latter year Rev. John Newton Brown was settled over the church, and so continued until February, 1833. Rev. John Cannan succeeded him, being ordained May 29, 1833, and remained until Feb. 16, 1834. Rev. J. N. Brown was again invited to the pastorate in 1834, which he filled until he was dismissed in April, 1838. More than two years then elapsed before another minister was settled, during about one-half of which period the pulpit was regularly supplied by Rev. J. G. Naylor.

In November, 1840, the church gave an invitation to Rev. Noah Hooper, Jr., to become their minister, which he accepted, and continued with them from Dec. 1st of that year until July 20, 1845. It was nearly three years after this before a successor was settled, Mr. T. H. Archibald, licentiate, preaching about one year of the time. In the spring of 1848, Rev. Elijah J. Harris was settled as the pastor, and was dismissed from his charge April 7, 1850. Rev. James French accepted the call of the church in January, 1851, and was settled over them until Jan. 1, 1853. After his dismissal, Rev. Mr. Russell supplied the desk for a time. Rev. Franklin Merriam was the next settled minister, who was installed in September, 1854, and dismissed in November, 1856. He was succeeded by Rev. James J. Peck, whose pastorate commenced in February, 1857, and continued until April, 1861.

On the 1st of July, 1861, Rev. Noah Hooper was solicited to assume the pastoral charge for the second time, and accepted the call. He continued his ministrations until the autumn of 1871, when he was dismissed at his repeated request. Rev. Joseph N. Chase was next invited to become the pastor, and was received into that connection Jan. 16, 1872, and still continues in it. The meeting-house on Water Street, in which the society now worship, was built in the years 1832 and 1834.

In December, 1854, some twenty-two members withdrew from the Water Street church and formed themselves into a new society. They first held their meetings in a hall on Water Street, until they built a meeting-house, on Elm Street, which was dedicated Oct. 1, 1856. Up to about this time Rev. J. B. Lane supplied them with preaching. Shortly after they removed to the new house, Rev. T. H. Archibald was settled over them as their minister. His pastorate continued not far from two years. For some time after his dismissal, the pulpit was supplied by students from the Newton Theological Institution, and afterwards by Rev. Mr. Mayhew. About 1862, Rev. Charles Newhall was installed as the pastor, and continued in the office some eight years. In 1871 the two societies resolved to re-unite, the Elm Street organization was given up, and its members merged again into the Water Street society.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—There was a Methodist meeting sustained here as early as 1832. In 1834 a church was built, and the society prospered until the church numbered about one hundred and eighty members. In 1841–42 the question of slavery and other discordant elements caused a division in the church, which finally resulted in disorganization. In 1867, at the request of a few earnest Methodists, Rev. C. W. Millen, a student in the Theological Institute at Concord, N. H., came to Exeter and organized the Methodist Episcopal Church. There were twenty-five members at first, and they worshiped in Mission Hall. After a few weeks—Rev. Mr. Millen's duties called him elsewhere. He was followed by Rev. J. D. Folsom. The congregation steadily increased under each pastor, until in 1869 the society purchased the Unitarian Church, at a cost of four thousand dollars.

To date nine pastors have preached to the people the word of life, namely: C. W. Millen, J. D. Folsom, J. Pike, H. B. Copp, S. E. Quimby, S. C. Farnham, J. H. Haines, M. Howard, and J. W. Walker.

The Conference minutes of 1881 show a church membership of one hundred and thirty-five members. In the Sunday-school there are twenty-two officers and one hundred and sixty members.

Episcopal Church.<sup>1</sup>—The first service of the Episcopal Church in Exeter was held in the town hall by the Rev. F. D. Huntington, D.D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, in July, 1865. The first parish meeting took place the September of the same year, and the first confirmation in November.

The Rev. Dr. Cushman took charge in October, 1865, and his connection ceased April 24, 1866.

The Rev. James Haughton entered on the rectorship Trinity Sunday 1866.

The sum of four hundred and forty-five dollars was raised by the Rev. Henry A. Neely, D.D., assistant minister of Trinity Church, and officiating at Trinity Chapel, New York. By the efforts of Miss Caroline E. Harris and other ladies, the handsome sum of four thousand dollars was added to the above. By the exertions of the rector, the Rev. James Haughton, eight thousand dollars was munificently added to this by contributions from various places to defray the expenses of a tasteful and convenient church of wood on Elliott Street. A memorial window was placed in the west end by Miss C. E. Harris. The church was finished at Christmas, 1867. A bell was given, the joint gift of the Rev. Professor Huntington, of Hartford, Conn., the Rev. Henry A. Coit, D.D., of St. Paul's School, and the rector, Rev. James Haughton. The consecration office was performed by the Right Rev. Bishop Henry A. Neely, of Maine.

In September, 1868, the Rev. James Haughton resigned the rectorship. From October to April the parish had no settled clergyman, and was supplied by various ministers from Boston through the energy and skillful management of Miss Caroline E. Harris. In April, 1869, the Rev. L. P. Parker, D.D., entered on the duties of the rectorship. After two years of loving service he resigned, and from that time until July, 1872, the parish had no settled minister.

In 1872 the Rev. Henry Ferguson entered on the duties of his rectorship, remaining until March, 1878, when he was succeeded by the Rev. G. B. Morgan, the present rector.

Roman Catholic Church.<sup>2</sup>—The first mass was said in Exeter at the house of Daniel Fenton in the fall of 1849, by Rev. J. O'Donnell, of Lawrence, Mass. Father O'Donnell was succeeded by Rev. John McDonald, of Haverhill, who commenced to make regular monthly visits to Exeter and Newmarket. At this time mass was said in a loft over a blacksmithshop on Spring Street. The Rev. Father Canovan, of Portsmouth, succeeded Father McDonald, mass being said in the Methodist Church building, which then stood on Centre Street.

The first resident pastor was the Rev. Father Paré, and in succession the parish had been governed by the Rev. Fathers O'Hara, Walsh, O'Brien, Egan, and Lucey. Present pastor, Rev. J. R. Power.

The present brick church was built during the pastorate of Rev. Michael Lucey, at a cost of about ten thousand dollars. The Catholic population is about five hundred. South Newmarket and Epping are at present attended from Exeter, and form but one parish.

At South Newmarket there is a new church just finished at a cost of about seven thousand dollars. At Epping it is contemplated to commence the erection of a church.

The First Unitarian Society<sup>3</sup> was organized June, 1854, by the union of the members of the extinct Universalist Society and a number of Unitarians from the Second Congregational Society. The old Universalist Church was reopened, and Rev. Jonathan Cole became the first settled pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. J. C. Learned, September, 1862. A new church building was erected in 1867-68. It is of wood, in the pointed Gothic style, but modified to meet the requirements of the material.

Mr. Learned was succeeded by Mr. Edward Crowninshield in September, 1870, whose ministry was terminated the following year on account of ill health. He was succeeded by Rev. Benjamin F. McDaniel, the present pastor, May 1, 1872. In 1875 a parsonage was built on the church lot. The society has made other improvements in its property, has no debt, and enjoys a fair degree of prosperity.

Advent Church.—Advent meetings have been held in this town for the last thirty years or more, and five years ago the church was organized and the following officers chosen: Charles Haley, clerk; George T. Stacy, treasurer; G. T. Stacy and Joseph Haley, deacons; G. T. Stacy and I. E. Safford, committee on preaching. Twenty-one united with the church at its organization, and about the same number attend the meetings whose names are not recorded but who are in full fellowship with the church, the whole number making about fifty. The church has no regular pastor. It worships in a very neat and convenient chapel, which will seat about one hundred and fifty persons, owned by the society and free from debt. As a people they are looking for the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The first printing-office in Exeter was opened by Robert Luist Fowle, a nephew and former partner of Daniel Fowle, who introduced the "art of arts" into New Hampshire, at Portsmouth, in 1756. In the differences of opinion which arose respecting the rights of the colonies immediately prior to the Revolution, the uncle and nephew, it is said, were found upon opposite sides, and the result was a dissolution of business connections in 1774. Robert, who favored the ministerial party, procured the printing materials which had belonged to Parbur, of Portsmouth, and removed with them to Exeter, where he established himself in business the same year.

Thus Exeter was the second town in New Hampshire to establish that powerful instrument of civilization, the printing-press, and now for nearly a century has maintained it.

Robert Fowle carried on the business of a printer here until about 1778, when his Tory proclivities became so obnoxious that he was obliged to decamp. It was said that he was employed to print some of the paper money then issued by New Hampshire, and soon afterwards there was found to be in circulation a great quantity of bills of the same typography, but with forged signatures. Suspicion at once fastened upon Fowle that he had supplied his loyalist friends with the printed sheets; and instead of awaiting an investigation he hastened to place himself within the British lines at New York.

His brother, Zechariah Fowle, succeeded him in the printing business in Exeter, and continued it until his death, which took place towards the close of the war. He was a tolerable workman, and his office must have been quite well furnished for the times, as he was able in 1780 to issue an edition of the laws of the State in a volume of one hundred and eighty folio pages. In the few specimens of his printing which are now extant his name does not usually appear in the imprint, but only the place and year.

After peace was declared Robert Fowle, who was a pensioner of the British government, on the ground of his loyalty, returned to New Hampshire, and in 1789 married Sarah, the widow of his deceased brother, and continued to live in Exeter for about six years. He then removed to Brentwood, as it is supposed, and died there in 1802.

Henry Ranlet was the next on the list of printers in Exeter. He was in business in 1787, and probably earlier. He was an excellent workman for that day, and issued a large number of books and pamphlets. He printed many works for publishers residing in Boston and Worcester, Mass., and Portsmouth. He added to his office the types for printing music, and published at least ten or twelve volumes of collections of vocal and instrumental music. Mr. Ranlet continued in business until his death in 1807.

A considerable part of this time there was another printing-office in the town. John Lamson, who was a partner of Mr. Ranlet in 1787, was associated with Thomas Odiorne in the printing business in 1793, and conducted it alone in the following year.

Mr. Odiorne issued several works in very neat style about the same date.

In 1794, William Stearns and Samuel Winslow brought out a few publications here. Mr. Stearns, in 1795 or 1796, was engaged in printing, and also in binding, the first edition of the New Testament ever issued in this State. The honor of first printing the Scriptures in New Hampshire has heretofore been claimed by New Ipswich in 1815, and by Dover in 1803, but Exeter was years in advance of them, as the above date indicates.

Charles Norris was a partner of Mr. Ranlet in 1806-7, and continued in the occupation of a printer until 1832. From 1810 to 1817 he was connected with others, his first partner being John Sawyer. Among the apprentices to whom Mr. Norris taught the typographic art was William Robinson, who afterwards became the founder of our magnificent female seminary.

Mr. Norris was a good printer, and did a great deal of book-work for himself and others. In connection with Ephraim C. Beals, he printed for E. Little & Co., of Newburyport, a translation of Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered" in 1810, which was really beautiful in its typography, and has never been excelled by any work from the Exeter press before or since.

The imprint of Samuel T. Moses is found upon a number of publications between the years 1820 and 1824; and from 1824 to 1830 the name of Abel Brown appears on several small works as publisher, though the latter was not a practical printer.

In 1818, John J. Williams first began printing on his own account. He afterwards took his brother, Benjamin J. Williams, who was a book-binder, into partnership, and they carried on for many years, under the firm of J. & B. Williams, a large and profitable printing, stereotyping, and publishing business. Their operations terminated about the year 1840, and during that period they issued a vast number of works of every description. The series of popular novels from their press, in 24 mo, including works of Scott, Maryatt, and Bulwer, neatly bound in morocco, are still often met with and easily recognized.

John C. Gerrish's name first appeared upon a title-page about 1824. He was then, and continued for three or four years, in partnership with Laban A. Tyler, who was not, however, a practical printer. Capt. Gerrish had an office in Exeter, and was engaged in printing of various kinds until about 1840, when he retired from the business. He died in 1870, highly respected by all who knew him.

Lewis F. Shepard, who had served his time in the office of Messrs. Williams, had an office here for a year or two, about 1832-33, when, by reason of impaired health, he quitted the occupation and removed into Maine. He was an excellent workman, and in every relation of life was highly esteemed.

Francis Grant had a printing-office here as early as 1840. He was a bookseller and binder, and was the publisher of a little work, formerly much used in our common schools, entitled "A Book for New Hampshire Children, in Familiar Letters from a Father." This little volume was prepared by Mr. Hosea Hildreth, and was very popular, running through five editions, the first of which was printed by S. T. Moses, in 1823, the third by Mr. Norris, in 1829, the fourth by Capt. Gerrish, in 1833, and the last by Nathaniel S. Adams, in 1829. Mr. Adams is remembered as a man of convivial habits and of much humor.

James Derby was the publisher of one or two works about 1831. He was an ingenious mechanic, and did something in the manufacture of stereotype plates, though he was not himself a printer. He was engaged in the publication of "Scott's Family Bible" here, which was to have filled some six or more large volumes; but after the completion of the New Testament in two volumes, the remainder of the undertaking was abandoned.

There were several other printers, who were apprentices of Mr. Norris or Messrs. Williams, who issued one or more small works each, bearing the Exeter imprint, but of whose history nothing further is known.

Samuel Bartlett Clarke, who had been engaged in the News-Letter office as one of the proprietors from 1840, died in July, 1857, having sustained a high character as a man of excellent business capacity and integrity.

Oliver Smith, now deceased, was also one of the proprietors of the paper for nearly the same period, and was afterwards employed for several years in the News-Letter office as a journeyman. He was a person of decided character and of sturdy honesty.

The Press.—The first newspaper published in Exeter, and the third in New Hampshire, appeared in the latter part of the year 1775. It was conducted by Robert L. Fowle, and issued at irregular intervals until some time in the year 1777. It was printed with large type and on small paper, often on only a half-sheet. The number of titles which it bore in its brief existence was remarkable, as the following list of a part of them will show, viz.: A New Hampshire Gazette, The New Hampshire Gazette, The New Hampshire Gazette or Exeter Morning Chronicle, The New Hampshire (State) Gazette or Exeter Circulating Morning Chronicle, The Journal or the New Hampshire Gazette and Tuesday's Liberty Advertiser. The days of publication were changed nearly as often as the title. The proprietor's name did not appear; and a single person was undoubtedly printer, publisher, and editor, as the contents of the paper were made up chiefly of advertisements and extracts from other journals, with only occasional original communications.

The second paper was entitled The Exeter Chronicle, and was still shorter-lived than the first, having been commenced in June, 1784, and discontinued in December of the same year. John Melcher and George J. Osborne were the publishers.

Newspapers were published in Exeter during the twelve succeeding years under various titles and different proprietors, but probably constituting a single series, and numbered continuously as such. From the impossibility of consulting files of these at the present day, it is not easy to fix the succession of the papers with accuracy, but it is believed that the following statement is substantially correct.

About July, 1785, Henry Raulet commenced the publication of a paper called The American Herald of Liberty, which in 1791 was entitled The New Hampshire Gazette; in 1792-93, The New Hampshire Gazetteer; in 1795, The Weekly Visitor or Exeter Gazette, and published by John Lamson, and afterwards by Lamson & Odiorne; in 1796, The Herald of Liberty or Exeter Gazette, and published by Samuel Winslow and Stearns & Winslow until it ceased, in 1797.

The Freeman's Oracle or New Hampshire Advertiser appears to have been commenced about Aug. 1, 1786, was under the charge of John Lamson in 1789, and probably did not survive that year.

The Political Banquet and Evening's Feast was established by Henry Raulet in 1797, and continued about one year, when it probably merged in The Exeter Federal Miscellany, which was but of short duration, it is presumed.

It is not known that any other journal was set up in Exeter until May 21, 1810, when The Constitutionalist was begun by Ephraim C. Beals. It was given up June 4, 1811, but recommenced June 23, 1812, and finally discontinued June 14, 1814. The Constitutionalist was conducted with more ability than any paper which preceded it, but probably had no recognized editorial head. It extended over nearly the whole period of the war of 1812, when the popular feelings were sharply divided and personalities were much indulged in.

In the department of local news, however, this journal was little in advance of the earlier ones. One or two paragraphs per week afforded all the information it contained respecting New Hampshire affairs, and unless a fire or some other unusual event occurred in Exeter, no allusion was made to home matters except in the column of deaths and marriages.

During the latter part of its existence The Constitutionalist was published by Joseph G. Folsom, but in the change of proprietors there was no noticeable change of character.

The Watchman was the next journal established in Exeter. It was begun Oct. 2, 1816, by Henry A. Rantlet; in December of the same year its title was changed to The Exeter Watchman, and Nathaniel Boardman became the publisher; Nov. 9, 1819, it passed into the hands of George Lamson, and the name was altered to Exeter Watchman and Agricultural Repository; and Feb. 6, 1821, Samuel T. Moses became the publisher, and gave it the final designation of Northern Republican. Aug. 6, 1821, the last number of the paper was issued.

George Lamson, who might properly have been mentioned in the notices of Exeter printers, was a man of much intelligence and enterprise, and is well remembered for many excellent traits of character. He printed quite a number of law-books, and took pains to furnish employment to deserving, needy persons.

Sept. 21, 1824, Francis Grant commenced the publication of The Rockingham Gazette, which was under the editorial charge of Oliver W. B. Peabody. It was continued until October, 1827, when its subscriptions were transferred to The Portsmouth Journal. This was the earliest paper here which professed to have an editor. Mr. Peabody was a gentleman of learning and taste, and the selections and original articles—though the latter were not very numerous—which appeared in the Gazette were of a higher literary order than any of the former papers afforded. In the matter of news, of course, journalism of that time was but the mere germ of what it now is.

Joseph Y. James was the proprietor of a small paper called The Hive, begun in September, 1829, and carried on till some time in the year 1830.

On the "2d mo. 12th, 1830," Michael H. Barton issued the first number of a publication of eight duodecimo pages, entitled Something New, to be devoted, as the prefatory address announced, to the introduction of a perfect alphabet and reformed orthography of the language, probably something like the phonographic system of a later date. Mankind were undoubtedly content to live in ignorance of Mr. Barton's improved method, as we do not learn that the publication reached a second number.

Exeter News-Letter.—The first number of this journal was published in Exeter on Tuesday, May 10, 1831, with John Sherburne Sleeper as editor and publisher. Mr. Sleeper was a native of Tyngsborough, Mass., and had been a shipmaster several years previous to his settlement in Exeter. The paper bore the imprint of Charles Norris as printer, and its typography was excellent for the times. During the two years of Mr. Sleeper's editorship the paper sustained a high character and gained a wide circulation; but not having a practical acquaintance with printing, Mr. Sleeper did not find it a pecuniary success, and he sold the paper to Capt. John C. Gerrish, of Exeter, a book and job printer. Mr. Gerrish was a man of excellent business qualifications, and at once started it upon a career of financial prosperity. He was fortunate in obtaining the editorial assistance of John Kelly, Esq., a gentleman of literary taste, with a fund of quaint humor and much antiquarian knowledge. He occupied the editorial chair for nearly twenty years. In July, 1840, Capt. Gerrish disposed of the News-Letter to Oliver Smith, Samuel Hall, and Samuel Bartlett Clarke, who, under the firm-name of Smith, Hall & Clarke, with Mr. Clarke as business manager, continued the paper in much the same way as planned by Mr. Gerrish, and with substantial success. After some years Mr. Smith retired from the firm, and the publication was continued under the name of Hall & Clarke until the death of Mr. Clarke, in July, 1857, when Mr. Hall became the sole proprietor. Under their ownership the paper was edited by John Kelly, Rev. Levi W. Leonard, Dr. Franklin Lane, Hon. Charles H. Bell, and Rev. George Osgood. In September, 1866, Mr. Hall sold the News-Letter establishment to Charles Marseilles, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., who came to Exeter to attend Phillips' Exeter Academy. Mr. Marseilles, although a young man, had become interested in literary pursuits, and took this method to gratify his inclination and tastes. For a short time he was assisted in the editorial and business management by Andrew J. Hoyt. Under the management of Mr. Marseilles the News-Letter took a high rank among the news journals of the State. Home news until this time was not thought of sufficient importance to appear in print, but the News-Letter became a pioneer in the feature of presenting a well-written weekly record of local happenings, not pertaining to Exeter alone, but column after column of letters furnished by special correspondents, giving brief accounts of any events of interest from every town in Rockingham County. Mr. Marseilles repeatedly improved the appearance of the News-Letter by enlarging it, substituting new type and headings, and working off his paper on new and improved presses, and always took pride in presenting the readers of the News-Letter a handsome, well-printed sheet. The editorial chair from 1871 to 1875 was filled by the Hon. Charles H. Bell, who was succeeded by E. L. Clark, Esq., a well-known and talented journalist of New York State. In June, 1879, Mr. Marseilles, having previously purchased two newspapers in Kingston, N. Y., and removed there, formed a copartnership with William B. Morrill, of Exeter, for the publication of the News-Letter, and under the firm-name of Marseilles & Morrill the paper is still published. It is an ably edited sheet, and ranks among the leading journals of the State.

The Christian Journal was commenced April 2, 1835, and was issued every other week by the executive committee of the Eastern Christian Publishing Association, Elijah Shaw being the editor, and J. C. Gerish the printer. The first year the "editorial council" consisted of Moses How, Mark Fernald, and Samuel E. Brown; the next year, of M. Fernald, M. How, Noah Piper, and William H. Gage; the third year of Messrs. Fernald, Piper, Gage, and Josiah Prescott; the fourth year of Messrs. Fernald, Piper, How, and Prescott. At the commencement of the fifth year the name was altered to Christian Herald and Journal. P. R. Russell was announced as assistant editor, and the editorial council were M. Fernald, Julius C. Bloodgett, M. How, and B. F. Carter; and on beginning the sixth year the title was abbreviated to Christian Herald, Elijah Shaw, David Millard, and Philemon R. Russell were announced as editors, and A. R. Brown as printer, and the paper was issued weekly. The Herald was subsequently removed to Newburyport, Mass., where it still survives.

In January, 1840, appeared the first number of The Granite State Democrat, of which James Shrigley was publisher, and J. L. Beckett printer, who soon, however, became publisher. The paper, in 1842, was conducted by Ferdinand Ellis, Jr., and afterwards by William Young, and was dated "Exeter and Newmarket," but was printed at Exeter. In January, 1843, Samuel C. Baldwin became the editor and publisher, but in consequence of ill health relinquished the undertaking, and no number was issued after March 9, 1843. An attempt was subsequently made to revive the paper, but without success.

The year 1841 must have been peculiarly promising to newspaper schemes. A prospectus was issued in February for the publication of a semi-monthly paper to be called The Rose and Thorn, but it is supposed that nothing further came of it. In June The Granite Pillar and New Hampshire Temperance Advocate was brought out, to be continued monthly, by Abraham R. Brown, under the editorship of Joseph Fullerton, but it was not long-lived.

The next literary venture of 1841 was The Factory Girl and Ladies' Garland, commenced November 1st, and issued semi-monthly, by J. L. Beckett. This paper, or a continuation of it, under the designation of The Factory Girl, was afterwards carried on by C. C. Dearborn, and in the latter part of 1843 was conducted by A. R. Brown, under the name of The Factory Girls' Garland. Apparently the same paper, much enlarged, with the title of Weekly Messenger, Literary Weath, and Factory Girls' Garland, was published in 1845, and some time in 1846, by Mr. Brown, but it was afterwards removed to Lawrence, Mass., by J. L. Beckett.

The Spinnacott Fountain was begun in March, 1843, a weekly, devoted to the cause of temperance, and undertaken by Samuel Webster and J. P. Clough. It was afterwards called The Spinnacott Fountain and Weekly Advertiser, and Mr. Webster became the sole proprietor, but it did not last long.

A paper called The Factory Girls' Album and Operatives' Advocate was begun Feb. 14, 1846, of which Charles C. Dearborn was the publisher and proprietor, and William P. Moulton the printer. The paper was issued a part of the time weekly, and afterwards semi-monthly, and was enlarged after a few numbers. It was continued somewhat over a year.

The initial number of a projected weekly of a religious and literary character, to be styled The Olive-Leaf, and to be edited by R. O. Williams, was issued Jan. 1, 1853, by Currier & Co., proprietors, but we do not learn that sufficient encouragement was offered to induce them to go on with it.

About 1857 The American Ballot and Rockingham County Intelligence, a weekly journal, which had been established in Portsmouth in the interest of the American party some three years before, was removed to Exeter. Thomas J. Whitten was editor and proprietor, and the paper, though bearing date Exeter and Portsmouth, continued to be printed at Exeter until Sept. 7, 1865, when it was discontinued.

The Exeter Gazette was established in September, 1876, by James D. P. Wingate and Aubrey W. Dunton, it being then a seven-column folio sheet, but in 1878 it was enlarged to a six-column quarto, nearly double its former size. In July, 1879, the interest of Mr. Dunton in said establishment was purchased by John H. Shaw, and since then it has been owned and published by Messrs. Wingate and Shaw. The publishers' aim has been to make the Gazette a thorough local newspaper for Rockingham County, and they have also devoted much space to historical articles relating to Exeter and other towns. In circulation it stands foremost among the county papers.

The Protest was first published June 9, 1880, as a Greenback newspaper, for local and State circulation. The object of publication is the dissemination of correct views on finance and government reform. The editor believes the United States bonds should be paid as soon as due; the general government alone should issue legal-tender money, be the same gold, silver, paper, or other metal or material. There has been no change in sentiments, and none in proprietorship or editorship. The Protest was enlarged from a folio, twenty by twenty-six, in April, 1881, to a quarto, twenty-two by thirty-two. Circulation about one thousand copies, and steadily increasing. A. J. Hoyt, editor and publisher. It is an excellent local sheet, and justly deserves its present popularity.

Phillips' Exeter Academy—Robinson Female Seminary—The Union Five Cent Savings-Bank—The Squamscott Savings-Bank—Exeter Manufacturing Company—Exeter Machine-Works—Military Record—Representatives, etc.

Phillips' Exeter Academy.—This celebrated educational institution was founded by Dr. John Phillips, by charter dated April 3, 1781, and is the oldest institution of learning established by State authority in New Hampshire. Dartmouth College having been chartered by royal grant in 1769. Dr. Phillips was born in Andover, Mass., Dec. 27, 1719. His father, who was a clergyman of that town, fitted him to enter Harvard College, where he was graduated in good standing at the early age of fifteen years. After leaving college he taught school for a few years, and was engaged at the same time in studying theology. But though he was a man of strong religious feelings, and deeply interested in the work of the Christian ministry, he was too distrustful of his own powers, especially after he had heard the preaching of Whitefield, to undertake the pastoral office. He declined an invitation to become the minister of the First Church in Exeter, N. H., but established himself in trade in that town, where he slowly acquired what was deemed in those days a large fortune. He was happily married, but had no children, and as his tastes and habits were simple and inexpensive, and he was not covetous of money either for its own sake or for the distinctions which it could purchase, it seemed to him the most natural and easy thing in the world to give away during his lifetime a large portion of his wealth for charitable and religious purposes, and to bequeath the remainder of it to further the same objects after his death. It was finely said of him that, "without natural issue, he made posterity his heir." Munificence in the endowment of public institutions, in relieving the wants of the poor, and in promoting the cause of education and religion has now become so frequent and fixed a trait of character here in New England with those who have amassed riches by their own exertions that we are in some danger of forgetting the man who first set the example of such noble prodigality. In the obscurity of a country village, a locality where narrow views with penurious and selfish habits are too apt to strike deep root, the founder of Phillips' Exeter Academy became the George Peabody of the last century.

Nearly all the members of the family to which he belonged, besides earning distinction in many offices of public trust, were noted in their day for their wealth and generosity. He was the most liberal of them all, though the least conspicuous before the public, owing to the modesty of his disposition and his retiring habits; but the others seem to have caught his magnificent spirit, and to have emulously followed his example. His two nephews, Judge Samuel Phillips, of Andover, and William Phillips, of Boston, each of whom served in his turn as Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, aided him with their counsel and their means in several of his noble undertakings. In conjunction with the former he founded Phillips' Academy at Andover in 1778, during the darkest period of the Revolutionary war, a charter being granted to it by the Legislature of Massachusetts two years afterwards; the nephew contributed for this purpose six thousand dollars, the uncle gave thirty-one thousand dollars, about one-third of this sum being bestowed at the outset, and the other two-thirds in 1790. Lieutenant-Governor William Phillips gave six thousand dollars to the same institution in his lifetime, and left it a legacy of fifteen thousand dollars more in his will. Dr. John Phillips, of Exeter, was one of the trustees of this academy at Andover from its first organization till his death, and during the last five years of his life he was president of the board. He also endowed a professorship of theology in Dartmouth College, served for twenty years as one of the trustees of that institution, and made liberal gifts to Princeton College, N. J.

The foundation and endowment of Phillips' Exeter Academy were regarded by Dr. Phillips as his own peculiar task, in which he required no coadjutor and sought no pecuniary aid. The charter of the academy was a liberal one, as all the property given to it, whether real or personal, is forever exempted from any tax. The entire management of the institution and its funds is vested in a board of trustees, not more than seven nor less than four in number, with power to fill their own vacancies in continuous succession forever. A majority of them must be laymen, respectable freeholders, and non-residents of Exeter; and to guard still further against undue local influence, they are empowered to remove the institution, if circumstances should render such a change desirable, "and to establish it in such other place within this State as they shall judge to be best calculated for carrying into effectual execution the intention of the founder." It is declared that the academy is established "for the purpose of promoting piety and virtue, and for the education of youth in the English, Latin, and Greek languages, in writing, arithmetic, music, the art of speaking, practical geometry, logic, and geography, and such other of the liberal arts and sciences or languages as opportunity may hereafter permit, or as the trustees shall direct."

The academy was not established merely to give instruction in the various branches of secular learning; it was also solemnly dedicated to the promotion of good manners, sound morality, and pure religion. This purpose of its founder is strongly marked in the constitution and laws, which were drafted by his own hand. "Above all," he says, "it is expected that the attention of instructors to the disposition of the minds and morals of the youth under their charge will exceed every other care; well considering that, though goodness without knowledge is weak and feeble, yet knowledge without goodness is dangerous, and that both united form the noblest character, and lay the surest foundation of usefulness to mankind." And "it is again declared that the first and principal design of this institution is the promoting of virtue and true piety, useful knowledge being subservient thereto." In conformity with this design, in October, 1791, the trustees appointed Rev. Joseph Buckminster, of Portsmouth, to be "a Professor of Divinity in the Phillips' Exeter Academy, and joint instructor with the Preceptor thereof," with a salary of one hundred and thirty-three and one-third pounds lawful money. He does not appear to have accepted this appointment; but the office was revived in 1817, and continued till 1838, Rev. Isaac Hurd, A.M., of Exeter, being the incumbent. It is probable that the founder looked forward to a time when the academy should cease to be a mere preparatory school for a thorough education to be completed elsewhere, and should itself be developed into a college or a theological school or both combined.

At the same time the views of Dr. Phillips in respect to religious instruction were eminently liberal and catholic. He did not require the profession of any creed; and two of the trustees originally appointed by himself, besides three others of those who were chosen in his lifetime, and the first principal of the academy, Dr. Benjamin Abbot, held theological opinions that did not harmonize with his own. The school evidently was not intended to be, and has never been allowed to become, a mere sectarian institution. One restriction is made, however, by a clause in the constitution established by Dr. Phillips, which declares that "Protestants only shall ever be concerned in the Trust or instruction of this seminary." In the solemn charge delivered by the Rev. Benjamin Thurston, in presence of the founder, to the first preceptor of the academy this sentence occurs: "You will therefore, sir, make no discrimination in favor of any particular State, town, or family, on account of parentage, age, wealth, sentiments of religion, etc.; the institution is founded on principles of the most extensive liberality."

This charge formed a part of the inaugural ceremonies when the academy was formally opened, its first building set apart for its uses, and its first preceptor, William Woodbridge, A.B., a graduate of Yale College, inducted into office, on Thursday, May 1, 1783. In the afternoon of that day, says the contemporary record, "the Hon. Founder and Trustees, with many other gentlemen and a respectable auditory, attended in one of the meeting-houses in this town. The exercises began with singing, a prayer succeeded, by the Rev. Mr. Rogers, and an oration, on the Advantages of Learning and its happy Tendency to promote Virtue and Piety, was delivered by Rev. David McClure, A.M., with an address to the founder, trustees, and preceptor. The inaugurating ceremonies were performed by Mr. Thurston, a gentleman of the trust, with a particular address and a charge to the preceptor. Mr. Woodbridge, the preceptor, then publicly manifested his acceptance of the important charge, and pronounced an affectionate address to the trustees and auditory. A prayer was made by the Rev. Mr. Mansfield, and the whole was concluded by singing. Each part was performed with propriety and the solemnity suitable to the occasion; the whole to universal acceptance."

Mr. McClure's oration was published at the time, together with a copy of the academy charter granted by the Legislature of New Hampshire. Mr. Thurston's charge, and the response by Woodbridge, also exist in manuscript, in the library of Harvard College, having been preserved by Mr. Mansfield. The original building, which was of small size and was afterwards converted into a dwelling-house, stood at some distance from the grounds on which the present academy edifice stands.

It is difficult to ascertain the precise amount of the funds with which the academy was originally endowed by its founder. At three different periods before his death Dr. Phillips made over to the trustees considerable property in real estate, mortgages, and notes of hand, large portions of which needed to be held for several years before they could be profitably sold or converted into money. The original grant, dated Jan. 9, 1782, conveys real estate only, consisting of several parcels of land in Exeter, and farms or lots of land in a dozen other towns in the State. A second donation, made in March, 1787, was in promissory notes and mortgages, amounting to four thousand one hundred and sixty-four pounds lawful money; and a third gift, which followed in 1789, was of a similar nature, but uncertain amount. Dr. Phillips died April 21, 1795, aged a little over seventy-five years; and his will, after reserving a slender life annuity to his widow, and a few trifling bequests, as tokens of affection, to his nephews and nieces, conveys two-thirds of his whole remaining estate to Phillips' Exeter Academy, and one-third to Andover Academy. Five years after his death, it appears from the treasurer's report that the trustees at Exeter then held as the property of the institution fifty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars in active funds, besides the Phillips mansion-house, then occupied by Dr. Abbot, and the academy building and grounds. As it is stated in the same report that "all these sums have arisen from the benevolent gifts" of the founder, it is evident that his whole endowment of the institution amounted to at least sixty-five thousand dollars, or a little more than twice as much as he gave to the sister academy at Andover. Considering the time and the place, this may well be called princely munificence; nothing like it can be found in the history of this country up to the beginning of the present century. And if we look further to the many eminent men who have been educated at this seminary, a large number of whom could not have pursued their studies without the peculiar aids and facilities which it afforded, and to its influence in keeping up a high standard of scholarship and morals, while serving as a nursery for the principal colleges of New England, especially for Harvard, it may well be said that never was munificence applied to a nobler or more judiciously selected end.

But few particulars can be added to this meagre account of the life and character of Dr. Phillips. Tradition represents him as reserved and almost shy in his manners, punctilious in courtesy to others and in exacting the respect due to himself, strict in his notions of integrity and honor, and expansive only in his secret sympathies and his projects of far-reaching benevolence. We catch an interesting glimpse of him, as he appeared to those within his family circle, from a letter to Dr. Soule, the present principal of the academy, written by the late venerable Josiah Quincy in 1855, when the writer was already eighty-three years old. Alluding to the Phillips family, Mr. Quincy says, in his own warm-hearted way, "Would to heaven that I could express fully all that I feel, and all that I owe, and all that the country owes to that name and family! John Phillips, your founder, I knew well, that is, as a boy of fourteen could be expected to know, and realize the worth of, a man of perhaps sixty. About the year 1785, I visited him at Exeter in his family, with my mother, who was his niece. I spent three or four days there, and partook of his simple meals. I heard him at his family devotions. I shall never forget the patriarchal sweetness of his countenance, or the somewhat stern, yet not unattractive, manner in which he greeted and responded. He had an austere faith, softened by natural temperament and inherent kindness of spirit. I rejoice that the spirit of his benevolence yet lives and breathes on the spot he selected for its abode, and that it bears the Phillips name upwards from its foundation to its height."

Mr. Woodbridge, the first preceptor of the academy, was compelled by ill health to resign his office in the summer of 1788, and in the following October, Benjamin Abbot, a graduate of Harvard of that year, who had held a distinguished rank in his class as a scholar, was appointed his successor. It was a fortunate choice; the reputation of the academy for scholarship and good morals, for harmony and affection of the students for each other and for their principal, began with the opening of his administration, and continued till its close. It remains unabated to this day. The present head of the institution has always followed the spirit and principles of his administration, even while introducing such changes and improvements as the progress of the age in the modes of teaching and in the range of scholarship rendered necessary.

Dr. Abbot's firmness and dignity of character, united with great natural sweetness of disposition and suavity of manners, served admirably to reduce to practice and enforce the laws. He never met the youngest academy scholar in the street without lifting his hat entirely from his head, as in courteous recognition of an equal; and an abashed and awkward attempt to return the compliment was the urchin's first lesson in good manners and respect for his teacher. He had strong feelings, but a reserve amounting almost to timidity kept down the expression of them, except when he deemed the interests of morality or religion were at stake, and even then the tones of his voice were low and his speech deliberate, though his frame quivered with earnestness. His government was always successful because it was not in his nature to be stern or passionate; and as he always allowed the offender time to deliberate and become sorry for his fault before sentence was pronounced, the punishment never seemed unjust even to the culprit.

To those who never studied under Dr. Abbot this picture may seem overcharged; but it was not mere accident which procured for him uninterrupted success and surpassing influence as head of the academy for fifty years, or which gave him such pupils as Lewis Cass, Joseph Stevens Buckminster, Daniel Webster, Leverett Saltonstall, Nathaniel A. Haven, Joseph G. Cogswell, Theodore Lyman, Edward Everett, the twin Peabodys, John A. Dix, John G. Palfrey, Jared Sparks, George Bancroft, Jonathan Chapman, Ephraim Peabody, and a host of others whom the country delights to honor. It was partly good fortune and partly the exercise of a sound discretion which procured for him, at different times during the half-century, such assistant instructors as Dr. Daniel Dana, Nicholas Emery, Joseph S. Buckminster, Nathan Hale, Alexander H. Everett, Nathaniel A. Haven, President Nathan Lord, Dr. Henry Ware, Jr., President James Walker, and Dr. Gideon L. Soule.

In August, 1838, Dr. Abbot, who had then completed the fiftieth year of his services as principal and had begun to feel the infirmities of age, resigned his office. A large number of his former pupils, many of whom had attained the highest honors in professional and public life, assembled once more within the walls of the academy, to pay a fitting tribute of gratitude and respect to their venerated teacher at this golden period of his life. The Abbot Festival, as it was called, was a remarkable meeting, unprecedented in character, and as honorable to those who engaged in it with great interest and zeal as to him whose protracted labors in the moral and intellectual culture of the young were there brought to a close. Mr. Webster presided at the dinner which was given on the occasion, and led the way in the hearty and eloquent expression of the sentiments entertained by the whole assemblage towards his and their old "master." Members of all the professions, judges and distinguished scholars, ambassadors, and members of Congress followed, each with a tribute of admiration and respect for his former teacher or with some pleasant reminiscences of his school-boy days. Among those who thus spoke were Edward Everett, Judge Emery, Dr. Palfrey, Alexander H. Everett, Leveett Saltonstall, Jonathan Chapman, and John P. Hale. Songs were sung which had been written for the occasion by Dr. H. Ware, Jr., and Mr. A. F. Hildreth. In behalf of the old pupils, whether present or absent, Mr. Webster presented to their venerable teacher an elegant silver vase, as a token of their love and abiding reverence. His portrait, by Harding, had been secured for the occasion, and is now the property of the academy, and hangs in the chapel with Stuart's portrait of its founder and those of Webster, Cass, Bancroft, Hildreth, Sibley, etc. One white-headed man rose and claimed a distinction which, he said, "could belong to no other man living. You were his scholars, I was his teacher. It was little that I had to impart, but that little was most cheerfully given. I will remember the promise he then gave, and Providence has been kind in placing him in just that position where his life could be most usefully and honorably spent."

This former instructor of one who had taught others for half a century was the Hon. Jeremiah Smith, a member of Congress from 1791 to 1797, afterwards chief justice, and subsequently Governor of New Hampshire. He resided in Exeter, and was for many years president and treasurer of the trustees of the academy, its prosperity being largely promoted by his wise counsels and discreet management. In early life he had been an assistant instructor in Phillips' Academy, Andover, and among his pupils he could mention two presidents of Harvard College, Dr. Kirkland and Mr. Quincy, besides Dr. Abbot. Judge Smith died in September, 1842, at the ripe age of eighty-two, and was buried in the old cemetery at Exeter, not far from the marble monument that covers the remains of Dr. Phillips. Dr. Abbot survived, in a serene and prosperous old age, till October, 1849, when he too, at the age of eighty-seven, rested from his labors. A few years after the festival, his former pupils subscribed two thousand dollars for the establishment at Harvard College of the "Abbot Scholarship," the annual income from which is now devoted to paying the college expenses of some meritorious student from Exeter Academy.

For one great advantage which the academy has possessed from the outset over other classical schools in New England it is indebted to the wisdom and benevolence of its founder, who determined that meritorious students, whose circumstances required such aid, should not only have free tuition, but should be in great part maintained at the expense of the institution. Before 1800 the number of students "on the foundation," as it was called, appears to have been ten, which was perhaps one-sixth or one-eighth part of the whole average number. These foundation scholars were not distinguished in any manner from the other pupils, except by poverty and merit; what they received, therefore, was not regarded as alms, but as rewards for scholarship and good character, and as necessary aid in prosecuting their studies. They had all the privileges of the academy without charge, and their board and room-rent in private families were defrayed out of the funds. Of course, the hope of obtaining one of these "scholarships"—for such they really were—attracted many poor but able and ambitious students from a distance, and formed a bond for their good behavior and diligent effort while at Exeter. Their example diffused a spirit of industry and good conduct among their classmates; they were freed from anxiety about their support, and were fairly started on their course by being enabled to enter college while yet unencumbered with debt. Among them were some of those whose names have just been mentioned, and many other eminent graduates of Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, and Bowdoin could never have obtained a liberal education but for this encouragement and help received at the beginning.

One of their number, John Langdon Sibley, gave a signal proof of his gratitude for the essential aid which one of these scholarships rendered him many years ago by making over to the academy an accumulating fund, now amounting to many thousand dollars, the whole to be ultimately applied to aiding students "of poverty and merit" in prosecuting their studies. As soon as this fund becomes available, the allowance to each foundation scholar can be increased, and the whole number of such scholars considerably enlarged. The scholarships at present are twenty in number, supplied by the original fund, and the gift of the late Jeremiah Kingman, of Barrington.

But the trustees have not waited for further endowments before attempting to increase the usefulness of the academy in this direction. Early in the present century the number of these scholarships was raised to twelve, and within a few years it has been increased to twenty. About fifteen years ago they erected on the academy grounds, at a cost of over twenty thousand dollars, a large brick building, called Abbot Hall, in commemoration of the services of Dr. Abbot, in which are furnished rooms for fifty students. A foundation scholar now has free tuition, the use of a modestly furnished room without charge for rent, and an average sum of one dollar and sixty-three cents a week towards the expense of his food. There is also a small fund to aid the needy in purchasing the necessary text-books.

About twenty years ago Mr. John Langdon Sibley, the librarian of Harvard College, contributed three hundred dollars for this purpose, partly as a bequest from his father and partly as his own gift, the income of which is to be applied to buying text-books, provided that "no one can have any part of it if he uses opium, ardent spirits, or tobacco in any form, except when prescribed by a physician." The only other additions to the original endowment by Dr. Phillips are a bequest by Nicholas Gilman, made many years ago, of one thousand dollars, the income of which is to be expended for instruction in vocal music, and one hundred dollars by the late Hon. Leverett Saltonstall, to purchase books for the academy library.

While the funds of the institution have thus been liberally used in promoting the cause of classical education and in assisting poor students, they have also been husbanded with great care and extraordinary success. The instruction afforded by the academy has always been practically free to all, as only a very moderate charge is made for it to those who are able to pay, and this charge is uniformly remitted to those whose circumstances are such that the payment of it would be inconvenient. The productive funds of the academy in notes and stocks now amount to two hundred thousand dollars, and its real estate, consisting of five or six acres of land in the village, the academy building, Abbot Hall, and the house of the principal, may fairly be valued at thirty-five thousand dollars more. The original endowment by the founder has thus been almost exactly doubled merely by savings from income and profitable investments, while all the beneficent purposes of Dr. Phillips have been carried into full effect, and no opportunity to extend the usefulness of the institution, even beyond his original design, has been omitted for want of aid from the funds. Probably a better or more successfully managed charity could not be found in the country.

The academy building, a wooden structure erected in 1794, to which wings were added about twenty-five years afterwards, was burned Dec. 17, 1870, and the present neat and commodious brick structure was erected in 1871, at a cost, including furniture, of about fifty thousand dollars. Its expense was defrayed by its alumni and other friends.

The academy was for many years exclusively a classical school, but now embraces an English course, and practice in sacred music is also given to those members of the academy who desire it and have acquired a sufficient knowledge of the rudiments to enable them to sustain a part in easy church music.

In 1808 what was called an English department was created in the academy, under a separate instructor, for the benefit of those who wished to be taught only mathematics and the physical and moral sciences. The instruction in this department, under the general supervision of the principal, was given by a "Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy," who was supplied on a moderate scale with the apparatus needed for chemical and physical experiments. Rev. Hosea Hildreth, an accomplished teacher and thinker, held this post for fourteen years; and among his successors, those who held office for the longest time were Mr. Joseph H. Abbot and Mr. J. G. Hoyt, afterwards chancellor of Washington University at St. Louis. This branch of the academy was continued with good success for about forty years, when it was discontinued. The present English course was subsequently established by a gift to the academy from the late Woodbridge Odlin, Esq., of Exeter. An English course of study has been established for the benefit of students who do not desire to pursue classical studies. The course extends through three years. At the discretion of the faculty it may include Latin.

It is provided that ten students from Exeter may be received to this course free, if that number of competent students belonging to the town apply who lack the means to pay the usual tuition fees.

There is now an average number of one hundred and eighty students in the academy at any one time, and of these about forty or fifty leave at the close of each academic year in order to enter college. Up to the present time about five thousand two hundred students have entered the academy.

As the institution is supported almost entirely by its own funds, it has never sought to attract students by offering to fit them for college in the shortest possible time, by excessive leniency to the undeserving, or by adopting showy but superficial modes of instruction. Mild but firm discipline and a high standard of scholarship are easily maintained by a process of elimination instead of punishment; the feeble, indolent, or insubordinate pupil after a short trial is privately told that he must seek some other school in which his errors may be corrected. A system of rigid classification is maintained, and no student is admitted except to a class for which he is fully qualified. The regular course of instruction covers only four years, three of which are occupied with studies preparatory for admission to college, while the fourth corresponds to the freshman year at Harvard. The period thus allotted is so short that only young men of good talents and persevering industry are able to accomplish the required work. The trustees have never been ambitious to increase the number of students in the academy, but only to maintain and advance its reputation for good morals, high scholarship, and hearty co-operation and good feeling between the teachers and the taught.

SCHOLARSHIPS.—The Bancroft Scholarship was founded by Hon. George Bancroft, and has an income of one hundred and forty dollars.

The Hale Scholarship, founded by Miss Martha Hale, in memory of her father, the late Hon. Samuel Hale, has an income of one hundred and forty dollars. The Gordon Scholarship, founded by Hon. Nathaniel Gordon, has an income of one hundred and twenty dollars.

The Burroughs Scholarship, founded by the late Rev. Charles Burroughs, D.D., has an income of seventy dollars.

The foundation scholarships are supported by funds given by the founder of the academy and by the late Jeremiah Kingman, Esq., of Barrington. These at present yield sixty dollars each annually. They are given to about twenty students who, from their good character, indigence, talents, and scholarships, deserve special help.

SIBLEY BOOK FUND.—The income of this fund is appropriated for the purchase of text-books for indigent students.

The following is a list of trustees, treasurers, principals, and instructors from the establishment of the academy to the present time:

The list of principals comprises only the three names of Dr. Benjamin Abbot, Dr. Gideon L. Soule, and Dr. Albert C. Perkins. Dr. Abbot was principal of the academy for just half a century, from 1788 to 1838. Dr. Soule was elected principal in 1838, and remained until 1873, when he was succeeded by Albert C. Perkins, Ph.D., the present incumbent.

TRUSTEES.—Hon. John Phillips, LL.D., 1781-95; Hon. Samuel Phillips, LL.D., 1781-1802; Thomas Odiorne, 1781-94; Hon. John Pickering, LL.D., 1781-1802; Rev. David McClure, 1781-87; Rev. Benjamin Thurston, 1781-1801; Daniel Tilton, 1781-83; William Woodbridge, A.M., ex-officio, 1783-88; Hon. Paine Wingate, 1787-1809; Benjamin Abbot, A.M., ex-officio, 1791-1838; Hon. Oliver Peabody, 1794-1828; Hon. John Taylor Gilman, LL.D., 1795-1827; Rev. Joseph Buckminster, D.D., 1801-12; Rev. Jesse Appleton, D.D., 1802-3; Hon. John Phillips, 1802-20; Rev. Daniel Dana, D.D., 1809-43; Hon. Nathaniel A. Haven, 1809-30; Rev. Jacob Abbot, 1812-34; Rev. Nathan Parker, D.D., 1821-33; Hon. Jeremiah Smith, LL.D., 1828-42; Samuel Hale, A.M., 1831-69; Samuel D. Robinson Female Seminary.—This institution was established by the liberal bequest of the late William Robinson, a native of Exeter, N. H. It was partially opened April 15, 1867, and reorganized and fully opened Sept. 21, 1869. The seminary building is an elegant and substantial brick structure, beautifully located, with fine grounds.

The present board of trustees is as follows: Gen. Gilman Marston (pre-ident), Albert C. Perkins, Ph. D., William G. Perry, M.D., Nicholas E. Soule, M.D. (secretary), George W. Fernald, Esq., Benjamin L. Merrill, Esq., George A. Wentworth, A.M., John E. Gardner, Esq. (treasurer).

The present instructors are, in the Academic Department, Annie M. Killiam, principal; Annie A. Emerson, Ellen M. Smith; Lucy Bell, drawing, painting, and art study; Katharine F. Wood, vocal music; Oscar Faulhaber, Ph.D., French and German. In the Grammar Department, Elizabeth C. Bridge, principal; Laura A. Colbath, Josephine A. Dustin; Lucy Bell, drawing and painting; Katharine F. Wood, vocal music; Oscar Faulhaber, Ph.D., French. Thomas Colcord, engineer.

The Granite State Bank was organized in 1830, with the following board of directors: John Harvey, Joseph Blake, Moses Sanborn, Joseph Smith, Jotham Lawrence, Nathaniel Gilman, George Gardner.

The presidents and cashiers of the State Bank were as follows: Presidents, John Harvey, Moses Sanborn, and Joseph T. Gilman; Cashiers, James Burley, Samuel N. Stevens. It was reorganized as a State bank in 1865, with the following board of directors: Abner Merrill, Charles Conner, William W. Stickney, Jeremiah L. Merrill, Stephen W. Dearborn, Edmund Elliott, and George G. Smith.

Presidents.—Abner Merrill, Jeremiah L. Merrill, and Benjamin L. Merrill.

Cashiers.—N. A. Shute and Warren F. Putnam.

The bank has a capital of $100,000, and a surplus of $23,000.

The Union Five Cents Savings-Bank was incorporated in July, 1868, with the following incorporators: Joshua Getchell, Luke Julian, Henry C. Moses, Benjamin L. Merrill, George A. Wentworth, Amos Tuck, John E. Gardner, William Connor, Daniel W. Ranlet, Charles Burley, Alva Wood, and Sebastian A. Brown.

First Officers.—President, Joshua Getchell; Secretary and Treasurer, Joseph S. Parsons; Trustees, Joshua Getchell, Daniel W. Ranlet, Hervey Kent, William B. Morrill, Joseph S. Parsons, Sebastian A. Brown, Thomas Connor, John J. Bell, Charles G. Connor, John G. Gilman, and Josiah J. Folsom.

In 1872, William B. Morrill succeeded Mr. Getchell as president, and George E. Lane succeeded Mr. Parsons as secretary and treasurer, and both continued to hold those positions until Dec. 1, 1881, when Mr. Morrill resigned, and was succeeded by George E. Lane, and Frank P. Cram was elected secretary and treasurer as Mr. Lane's successor.

The first deposit was made by Joshua Getchell, Jan. 1, 1870; amount, $100.

Number of depositors, Feb. 16, 1882, 2049; amount of deposits, $495,243.49; guarantee fund, $4670.81.

Present Officers (Feb. 1882).—President, George E. Lane; Vice-Presidents, Charles Burley and John A. Blake; Secretary and Treasurer, Frank P. Cram; Trustees, William B. Morrill, Thomas Connor, Charles G. Connor, Charles Burley, Winthrop N. Dow, George E. Lane, John G. Gilman, John A. Blake, Frank P. Cram, J. Warren Sanborn, and John N. Thompson.

The Squamscott Savings-Bank was organized in 1873, with the following incorporators: Francis Hilliard, Joseph Janvrin, John S. Cram, Robert Rowe, W. N. Shaw, O. Duston and others. Joseph Janvrin was chosen first president, James E. Odell, vice-president, and Francis Hilliard, treasurer. George B. Webster succeeded Mr. Janvrin as president, and Thomas Duston succeeded Mr. Odell as vice-president, and are the present incumbents. Mr. Hilliard has been treasurer from the incorporation of the bank. The first deposit was made Sept. 29, 1873, by Sarah P. Marston, of Brentwood; amount, $357.57. Present (Feb. 1, 1882) amount of deposits, $10,751.

The Exeter Manufacturing Company was incorporated June 26, 1827. Nathaniel Gilman, John Taylor Gilman, Bradbury Gilley, Stephen Hanson, John Rogers, Nathaniel Gilman (3d), and Paine Wingate were named in the act of incorporation.

The first meeting was called Jan. 27, 1828, when John Houston was chosen president; Bradbury Gilley, Mark W. Pierce, John Rogers, and Nathaniel Gilman (3d) were chosen directors; John Rogers, treasurer; and John T. Burnham, clerk. The first purchase of the company was made Feb. 12, 1828, of the corporation then known as the "Exeter Mill and Water-Power Company" (not now in existence, merged in the present manufacturing company, charter given up). The company commenced building April, 1828. Stephen Hanson was building agent.

The first cloth was manufactured in 1830, under John Lowe, Jr., who was agent twenty-nine years, and part of the time treasurer. The mill was originally only five thousand spindles, and cost forty dollars per spindle, or two hundred thousand dollars. The mill has been increased from time to time until the building of the new mill, when it was increased to twenty thousand spindles,—four hundred and twenty-eight looms. Nathaniel B. March, of Portsmouth, was a prominent director, also Mr. James Johnson, of Boston, of the firm of Johnson & Senall, merchants of Boston, who sold the goods for many years, and had the general direction of the corporation. After the death of Mr. Johnson the firm was changed to Dale Brothers & Co. Mr. Thomas J. Dale was treasurer; Mr. Ebenezer Dale, president, until their deaths in 1871. Mr. Samuel Batchelder, under the Dales' management, was the principal director, and Mr. James Norris was appointed agent at the suggestion of Mr. Batchelder. He was agent about three years. The present agent, Hervey Kent, was appointed in 1862. Mr. Kent has been treasurer since 1876.

The shares of the company were originally $1000. Subsequently the need of funds induced them to give one new for every old share on payment of $300. The capital then was made $162,500,—250 shares, each $650. The building of the new part caused a debt that obliged the company to ask for an amendment to their charter, which was done July 11, 1876, giving the company the right to issue as much preferred stock—drawing eight per cent.—as of the old, making the present capital $325,000, and changing the par value of the shares from $650 to $50. The monthly payments at the mill are some $6000; the annual consumption of cotton 2500 bales; the product something over 4,000,000 yards per annum of shirting and sheetings, well known to the trade throughout the United States as goods that sell on their past and present good quality, one sale always opening the way for another.

The present officers are as follows: Directors, Ebenezer Dale, Nathaniel W. Farwell, Hervey Kent, Thomas Appleton, William J. Dale, Jr.; Ebenezer Dale, president; Hervey Kent, treasurer and agent.

Exeter Machine Company.—This is a large and flourishing establishment, and gives employment to a large number of hands. It is one of the representative manufactories of the State.

Military Record.—Exeter responded promptly to the call for troops during the late Rebellion, and the record of her soldiery is one in which her citizens may justly feel a patriotic pride. The following is a list of those who entered the service from this town,<sup>1</sup> as prepared by Rev. Elias Nason:

COMMODORE J. C. LONG.

Commodore John Collings Long, son of Capt. George and Marey (Hart) Long, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 5, 1795. His grandfather, Pierce Long, was a prominent officer in the American army during the Revolution. His father, also born at Portsmouth, was for many years a captain in the merchant marine service. John C. was educated at the academy in Portsmouth. In 1812 he entered the naval service of the United States, and August 29th of the same year was ordered to duty as aide to Commodore Bainbridge, commanding the United States frigate "Constitution." After only four months' service, Dec. 29, 1812, he was a participant in the bloody, desperate, and historic engagement between the "Constitution" and the British frigate "Java." In this Midshipman Long received a slight injury from a ball which killed two seamen at his side. (At the time of his death Commodore Long was the last one left of the gallant band of officers belonging to the "Constitution" engaged in this action.) His bearing and conduct on this occasion indicated his subsequent gallant and successful career.

J. C. Long

Sept. 14, 1814, he was transferred to the "Washington" (seventy-four guns), Commodore Hull, who subsequently placed him in command of gunboat "No. 87." This was the young midshipman's first separate command. He was next ordered to brig "Boxer," commanded by Commodore John Porter, and in that vessel made one cruise up the Mediterranean, and then others in the Gulf of Mexico and West Indies, where they cleared the Caribbean Islands of the piratical fleet infesting them. The "Boxer" was cast away Oct. 27, 1817, and in 1818 our young officer was granted a furlough, and made a voyage to the East Indies and return as first officer in a merchant ship, and in the same vessel other voyages to various European and South American ports, and in all these voyages was intrusted by the captain with entire command. Commodore Long always deemed this service as extremely valuable, giving as it did practical experience in seamanship not often acquired in the naval service. He returned on expiration of furlough to his naval duties, November, 1819, and was assigned to the "Independence" (seventy-four guns), Commodore Shaw. He joined the sloop "Hornet," engaged in suppression of piracy in the West Indies, February, 1823, and in November, 1823, was transferred to the sloop "Peacock," and went to the Pacific Ocean, and when the United States government contemplated dispatching the "Peacock" on a voyage of discovery to the South Pole, he was chosen as her first lieutenant. In 1824 he was joined to the frigate "United States," Commodore Hull, and served in her till June, 1827. Soon afterwards he was stationed at Portsmouth navy-yard, where he remained until 1831. While stationed at Portsmouth he married, June 1, 1829, Miss Mary O. Gilman, daughter of Nathaniel Gilman, of Exeter (Mrs. Long is now residing in her native town). On leaving Portsmouth he took command of schooner "Dolphin," and accompanied Commodore Downes in his fleet to the Pacific. On termination of this cruise, Capt. Long returned to Portsmouth, and stayed three years, when he was placed in command of a rendezvous in Boston, where he served two years. In 1840 he was given command of sloop "Boston" (twenty-two guns), and went to the East Indies, South Pacific, and Sandwich Islands, where he rendered valuable aid to the inhabitants, then suffering in the extremities of a fearful crisis. August, 1843, he returned to Boston, having circumnavigated the globe in his absence, and in 1849 was made "post-captain," at that time the highest office in the United States naval service.

Among the responsible positions for which Commodore Long was selected was that of commander of the United States steam frigate "Mississippi," sent to bring Kossuth to this country, and the proper and decided stand taken by him to prevent the eminent Hungarian from compromising our country by revolutionary harangues at Marseilles will long be remembered, and received the unqualified indorsement of our government. Commodore Long was placed in command of the "Saranac," Oct. 10, 1852, retaining that position three years. He was then appointed on a special commission to take home Chevalier de Soltre, the Brazilian minister, from which he returned in March of 1853, and was ordered to convey Hon. Carroll Spence, the American minister to the Turkish court, to Constantinople; which done, he joined the Mediterranean squadron, and remained until August, 1856. In 1857 he was placed in command of the United States Pacific squadron, with the "Merrimac" as his flag-ship. While inspecting the "Merrimac," previous to sailing, the commodore fell through an open hatchway, producing injuries that almost incapacitated him from active duties, and became ultimately the cause of his death. This cruise was ended in 1859, and was the closing cruise of his faithful and devoted services in the navy of the United States, in which he had passed more than fifty-one years, more than twenty-four of which were devoted to active duties, his shore duties occupying a period of more than thirteen years. He was compelled by his injuries to ask to be excused from taking command of the Brooklyn navy-yard, a highly responsible position, assigned him by the government, and in 1861 was placed upon the retired list, and passed his closing years in the pleasant quiet of the village of Exeter, N. H. His death occurred at North Conway, N. H., Sept. 2, 1865, while returning from a trip made for the improvement of his health to the White Mountains.

Commodore Long stood high on the roll of honor and fame among the officers of our navy. He adorned his profession by dignity, firmness, strict attention to duty, integrity of principle, high conscientiousness, goodness of heart, and affability of manners. At all foreign stations he commanded and secured respect for our flag. He was the model of a naval officer, and an ornament to our navy. He knew no jealousies or envyings in relation to others who enjoyed other or higher honors or favors than those which fell to his lot. His intercourse with his officers and men seemed like a beautiful exhibition of family affection. All who sailed with him respected, esteemed, and loved him. No shade of professional jealousy dimmed the brightness of his chivalrous devotion to his country's cause. So far was he from feeling any petty disappointment at the elevation of his juniors in rank, that he was the first to glory in the promotion and honor which rewarded their splendid services. His unselfishness was one of the most graceful features of his declining professional life.

We can, perhaps, no better close this brief memoir than to extract a few from among the many of published articles giving the commodore as seen by impartial eyes. We therefore take from the Exeter Ballot, contributed by Governor Charles H. Bell: "As an officer, Commodore Long was distinguished for his energy, his familiarity with his duties, his fidelity to his trusts, and his high sense of professional integrity and honor. In his various commands he enforced the most exact discipline, but with a courtesy and impartiality which won him the hearty confidence and respect of his associates. He numbered among his warmest friends many of the most distinguished officers in the service, and on foreign stations contributed in no small degree to sustain the high character of the navy abroad. . . . But it was by his exemplary private life and character that Commodore Long was best known to our own citizens. Unassuming, courteous, sympathetic, and generous, he had no enemy, and all who knew him were his friends. No appeal to his kindness or his charity was ever made in vain; the poor have lost in him a ready and constant benefactor. In social life his affability, his careful consideration for the feelings of others, his high-bred politeness and honor can never be forgotten by those who enjoyed the pleasure of his acquaintance. But his immediate friends, whose memories bear grateful testimony to so many acts of his thoughtful and delicate kindness and of his noble Christian charity, can alone feel the full bitterness of the stroke which has removed him from their midst."

The Boston Journal said, "On the tomb of this faithful public officer may be inscribed, without overstepping one iota the bounds of truth, 'He faithfully fulfilled through a long and eventful life his duties to his God and his country.'"

The New York Journal of Commerce says editorially, "He was one of the noblest specimens of a good and brave man that our country has produced, and thousands in and out of the service loved and admired him. During his long service he brought up many young officers who are now our distinguished heroes, and who, remembering their debt of gratitude, will lament him as a father. None could know Commodore Long personally without admiring and loving him. He was an accomplished Christian gentleman, a man of rare social qualities, as well as a thorough seaman and gallant officer. His features were exceedingly attractive, and as he grew to be an old man his snowy hair was a crown of glory to his fine countenance."

The Boston Transcript says, "Commodore Long was intrusted with high appointments, and always had the confidence of the Navy Department and of his brother-officers. It was a matter of deep regret to him that his injuries prevented him from taking a part in the suppression of the great Rebellion, and we well remember how his eye kindled and how emphatic were his expressions when he spoke of the villainy of our treacherous domestic foe. He had carried the flag of the nation to too many foreign ports to see it honored there as the flag of the Union not to express patriotic indignation at the treasonable attempt to dismember the republic. To his high qualities as an officer Commodore Long added the bearing of a gentleman and the pure character of a Christian. There was a manliness in his high moral and religious tone, unaccompanied as it was by any bigotry, cant, or intrusive pretensions, which proved its sincerity and won the respect of all who knew him."

WOODBIDGE ODLIN.

The first American Odlin was doubtless John Odlin, one of the first settlers of Boston, Mass., who was made freeman in 1634, was a member of artillery company in 1638, and died, aged eighty-five, in 1685. He had three sons,—Elisha, John, Peter. Elisha, born in 1640, was father of Rev. John Odlin, who was born in Boston in 1681, graduated at Harvard in 1702, was called as pastor to Exeter, N. H., and became the fourth settled minister in Exeter. His first wife was widow of Rev. Mr. Clarke, his immediate predecessor in the ministry. She was daughter of Rev. Benjamin Woodbridge, and granddaughter of Rev. John Woodbridge, the first settled minister of Haverhill, Mass. They had four sons,—John, Elisha, Dudley, Woodbridge. Elisha, born 1709, graduated at Harvard in 1731, married the same year, and became the third pastor of the "First Church of Christ" in Amesbury, Mass., dying there in 1752. His children were John, Winthrop, William, Anna, Elisha. William, born 1738, married Judith Wilson, settled in Exeter, dying in 1787. He had five children. His only son, William, born 1767, died 1825, married, 1791, Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. James Leavitt, of an Exeter family, dating back its occupancy and holding of its large tract of land to the original grants from the English crown. William was a saddler, carrying on his trade many years in a shop on the bridge in Exeter.

Woodbridge Odlin, son of William and Elizabeth (Leavitt) Odlin, was born in Exeter, N. H., May 9, 1805. He was educated in Phillips' Exeter Academy, and ever held it in high esteem. He learned the painter's trade, and began his business life as a painter and maker of carriages in Exeter. He afterwards became largely engaged in wool dealing. In many ways he continued in active business until a few years previous to his death, April 24, 1879, and was highly prospered. His success was the natural result of his ability to examine and readily comprehend any subject presented to him, his power to decide promptly, and his courage to act with vigor and persistence in accordance with his convictions. These traits of character moulded his entire life. In the early unpopular days of Free-Soil and Abolition labor, Mr. Odlin hesitated not, but cast the full force of his influence in favor of human freedom, and was one of the first pronounced workers in its cause. Both in this work and in that of temperance Mr. Odlin did effective labor. Many even now remember the impetuosity of the eloquence with which he scathingly denounced the abettors of either rum or slavery. His pen, too, did much good in this field. In all things Mr. Odlin acted with the energy of a strong positive nature, and impressed his powerful individuality upon all whom he met. He had the necessary qualities for a successful speaker. None could more clearly, forcibly, or convincingly present his views on any subject. He was a close analyst, a vigorous and independent thinker, and was considered a valuable counselor in intricate and complicated affairs. He was called to many positions of trust, represented Exeter in State Legislature several terms, and for many years was president of Exeter Savings-Bank. In the midst of his extended business operations he did not forget his duties to God and humanity, and was for many years active in church and Sabbath-school. He was a member of the First Congregational Society for many years.

Mr. Odlin was much interested in education. His aid to numerous students, and the encouragement given them by his wise counsel, manifests this, as well as his munificent gift to Phillips' Exeter Academy. It is eminently fitting that those who prize the educational standing and advantages of Exeter and its academy should cherish the memory of Woodbridge Odlin; and years after this, when generation after generation shall have passed away, there yet shall not be wanting those to reverence the kind and fatherly spirit that blessed them ere their lives began. Mr. Nathaniel Shute, in his "Recollections of Exeter," pays this just tribute: "Conspicuous among the departed who are entitled to honorable mention is the late Woodbridge Odlin, Esq., whose birthplace and home was in this part of the town. Commencing life with no capital save his own right hand and inflexible purpose, his industry and perseverance were rewarded by an ample competency of this world's goods, and a high, honorable standing among his fellow-men. His public benefactions have not been equalled by any other citizen of Exeter. In his munificent gift of twenty thousand dollars as a permanent fund to support an English department in Phillips' Exeter Academy he has left a monument of honor to his memory which will remain when monuments of stone shall have crumbled to dust. The iron fence in front of the First Congregational Church, it is well known, was erected by his liberality. These were not posthumous bequests. He did not hoard his wealth until death released his grasp, and then give it away because he could keep it no longer. These gifts were made years before his decease, and he lived to see the results of his generosity. In his private charities, which were not few, he followed the scriptural injunction, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Mr. Odlin married, in early life, Joanna Odiorne. She died in 1811. Their only child, Anna O., died in 1858, aged twenty-two. In 1844 he married Augusta Farley Little, who survives him. In the death of Mr. Odlin every good and worthy cause lost a kind patron, the community a citizen of rare integrity, the church a faithful worker, and his family a considerate and loving husband and father.

JEREMIAH L. MERRILL.

Conspicuous among the leading business names of Exeter during the past seventy-five years is that of Merrill. To no other is that flourishing village indebted so much for its prosperity, and it is eminently fitting that a sketch of the founder of the Exeter branch of the Merrill family, himself so many years interwoven with its diversified interests, should be embodied in this history.

Abner Merrill was born in Newbury, Mass., April 21, 1791. His ancestors were of English extraction, but were early colonists. He was one of a large family in limited financial circumstances, and after only meagre educational advantages was apprenticed to a hatter, which trade he thoroughly and minutely learned. He came to Exeter about 1812, marrying, two or three years later, Miss Sarah W. Leavitt, and moved into the house on Water Street so many years his home. He here commenced, in 1816, in a small way the manufacture of hats, and here a large family of children were born. For sixty-two years he carried on business at substantially the same place. His integrity, correct habits, business energy and sagacity were early shown, and gained him the esteem and confidence of all who knew him. Success attended his operations. When the supply of wool exceeded the demand for hats, he bought and sold largely to wool dealers and manufacturers in Boston.

This wool trade soon became his leading business, and resulted in the firm of A. Merrill & Sons, which was for many years signally prosperous, maintaining a high credit, and doing a business of fully half a million of dollars.

Mr. Merrill's children were Mary E., Jeremiah L., Joseph W., Charles A., Benjamin L., Abner L., Henry R., and David W. Merrill.

He died July 23, 1877, at his residence in Exeter, "full of days," in his eighty-sixth year. From an obituary article in the Exeter News-Letter we take this worthy tribute to his character:

"The loss of Mr. Merrill will be widely felt in the business circles, where his great capacity for affairs is familiar, in the town where he dwelt, and the religious society of which he was a member, where his public spirit and the purity of his life and character were fully recognized, but most of all by his immediate friends and family, who alone can rightly appreciate the warm heart and kindly and affectionate nature that was united with his vigorous mind and sound judgment."

JEREMIAH L. MERRILL, son of Abner and Sarah (Leavitt) Merrill, was born in Exeter, Jan. 4, 1819. He was delicate in health from a child. He entered his father's store as clerk when about fourteen, and was ever thereafter connected with business affairs as oldest son, taking confidential place in the financial matters of his father, and proving himself to have a natural capacity for business equalled by few. He was one of the three sons associated with his father in the firm of "A. Merrill & Sons," and for many years was financial manager of the firm. He was largely interested in the Granite State Bank, and also in its successor, the National Granite State Bank, of which he was president. He was also trustee of Exeter Savings-Bank. He was Whig and Republican in politics, but would have nothing to do with political office, believing it detrimental to his private business. He did, however, accept the position of one of the trustees of the estate of Jeremiah L. Robinson, of whom he was a namesake, and was a member of the Prudential school committee several years. He was eminently a business man of high order, and his financial success was the best evidence of that fact. He was a man of strong and positive opinions, ever careful of the feelings of others, however, and never obtruding upon them. Of strictest integrity, he enjoyed the fullest confidence of all, and he was one of the first, and always liberal, to aid any good work, religious, social, or educational. His death occurred March 8, 1879. He married Mary E., daughter of Theodore, and sister of Deacon John F. Moses, of Exeter. Their only child, Joseph W., is one of the leading business men of today in Exeter.

The following article from the Exeter News-Letter of March 14, 1879, written by one well conversant with Mr. Merrill, will give a juster estimate of his character and the esteem in which he was held by the community than any words of ours:

"Our town is again called to mourn the loss of one of its most prominent citizens, Mr. Jeremiah L. Merrill, who died at his residence on Saturday morning, at the age of sixty years. He was born in Exeter, and spent his life in this town. In January, 1844, he was associated with his father and two brothers in the firm of A. Merrill & Sons, and the firm remained unbroken until 1877. By their careful and prudent management the business grew until it became one of the largest and most important in this section of the State. Mr. Merrill was chosen a director of the National Granite State Bank, Feb. 3, 1873, and succeeded his father as president of the board of directors in January, 1876. Though his extensive private occupations prevented his accepting any public office, he has always been looked to for aid and counsel in every good work, and there are few of our citizens who are not indebted to Mr. Merrill for advice, encouragement, or assistance. As a business man, Mr. Merrill was cautious in forming an opinion, prompt in action when a decision was reached, enterprising and bold in the operations which his prudence sanctioned, and was possessed of the soundest judgment and good sense. His success is ample testimony to his wisdom and ability, and his scrupulous integrity is shown by the unlimited confidence reposed in him. In domestic life Mr. Merrill was cordial, warm-hearted, and generous. He was first in all charities and benevolent enterprises, and whoever was in distress found in him a ready and sympathetic listener, and a liberal and disinterested friend. He had long been an invalid, but he bore his affliction with noble and patient fortitude, and when his days were numbered he passed painlessly and peacefully to his reward. The funeral took place at his late residence on Wednesday morning, and was attended by a large number of sorrowing friends. Elegant contributions of flowers were received from the bank and from friends, both in this town and Boston, as a last tribute of affection and respect to one who had endeared himself to all by his life of kindness and benevolence."

As a business man, he was sagacious and far-seeing. In his intercourse with his fellow-men he was courteous and agreeable, and his vigor and indomitable will did much to maintain the high repute and to continue the successful career of the house of which he was a most active and reliable copartner. As a financier his judgment was sound, and his views of the most healthy character. His influence was exerted in behalf of progressive enterprise and judicious expenditures.

Joseph W. Merrill, only son of Jeremiah L. Merrill, was educated in Exeter. After finishing his education at Exeter, Phillips' Academy, took the position as clerk in the employ of A. Merrill & Sons. Here he remained about twenty years. He married, Sept. 20, 1866, Louise Clement, eldest daughter of Joshua J. and Susan (Bryant) Lane, of Stratham. They have four children,—William Edward, born June 29, 1867; Mary Louise, Jan. 25, 1871; Jeremiah Herbert, Oct. 13, 1875; Susan Emma, May 4, 1881.

HON. NATHANIEL GORDON.

Hon. Nathaniel Gordon, son of John S. and Frances Gordon, was born on the old homestead at "Gordon's Hill," Exeter, N. H., Nov. 26, 1829. He is a lineal descendant in the sixth generation of Alexander Gordon, a scion of the loyal Gordon family in the Highlands of Scotland. This young Alexander was a soldier in the royalist army of Charles II. He was captured by Cromwell, confined for a time in Tuthill Fields, London, and sent to America in 1651. He was held as prisoner of war at Watertown, Mass., until 1654, when he was released. He afterwards came to Exeter, N. H., where, in 1663, he married Mary, daughter of Nicholas Lysson. The next year the town voted him a grant of twenty acres of land, and he became a permanent resident, dying in 1697. From him and his descendants "Gordon's Hill" received its name. He had eight children, of whom Thomas was born in 1678. He married Elizabeth Harriman, of Haverhill, was father of eleven children, and died in 1762. From his son Timothy was descended John S. Gordon, and from his son Nathaniel was descended Frances Gordon. The line of John S. is Timothy (1), Timothy (2) (a Revolutionary soldier of bravery under Gen. Stark in battles of Bunker Hill, Bennington, Saratoga, etc.), Nathaniel (1), Nathaniel (2), and John S. The line of Frances is Thomas, Nathaniel (1), Nathaniel (2), and Frances.

John S. Gordon, like his immediate ancestors, was a quiet, unassuming farmer on "Gordon's Hill." He neither sought nor cared for office, but was a man of influence and weight in his neighborhood, serving, in his unobtrusive way, his day and generation well. His marriage to Frances Gordon occurred March 11, 1814, and his death in 1845. Mrs. Gordon was a superior woman in mental endowments, love of knowledge, social and domestic virtues, devotion to God, and Christian attainments. She is now living, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. Of his four children, Nathaniel and Mary D. (Mrs. Edwin Gordon, of Hyde Park, Mass.) are now surviving.

Nathaniel entered Phillips' Exeter Academy in the autumn of 1833, was there fitted for college, in 1838 entered the sophomore class of Dartmouth College, and was graduated therefrom in 1841. Each winter of his college course he taught school three months, and after graduation taught from September, 1841, to May, 1842, at St. Thomas' Hall, Flushing, L. I. Going South, he passed the summer of 1842 as teacher in a female seminary in Baltimore, and in Washington. In September, 1842, he became tutor in a private family in Prince George's County, Md., and held this position for two years, during which time he studied law, and was admitted to the bar at the April term of Prince George's County Court in 1844. For about two years Mr. Gordon practiced in the various courts of Prince George, Calvert, and Charles Counties, then removing to Baltimore, continued his profession there one year. He then (September, 1847) returned to Exeter, where he has made his home ever since.

Mr. Gordon opened a law-office in Exeter, but finding an unpromising financial outlook, he relinquished his practice and devoted himself to more profitable business pursuits. He has often been called upon to fill important positions of office and trust, and has ever been alive to the best interests of his constituents, discharging his duties conscientiously and ably. In 1849 he was chosen secretary and treasurer of the "Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company," and was re-elected annually for eight years. He represented Exeter in the Legislatures of 1849-50, and his district in the State Senate in 1869. In 1870 he was re-elected senator, and was chosen president of the Senate. His name was brought as a candidate before the Republican Congressional Convention held at Dover, Dec. 17, 1870. On the first ballot he received 76 out of 244 votes, the largest number cast for any candidate, received 85 on the next ballot, but after the third ballot withdrew in favor of Mr. Small, who was nominated and elected.

True to his principles, Mr. Gordon has been the uncompromising foe of slavery, and in the dark and trying days of 1861 was the boldest person in Exeter in support of the Union, placing every dollar he owned in government securities, thus showing his faith by his works. The result of this confidence was a very satisfactory financial increase.

From the age of eighteen, when Mr. Gordon, then in his sophomore year at college, united with the Congregational Church of Hanover, to the present he has been an earnest and devoted Christian, making other matters and secular pursuits subordinate to the cause of Christ. His time and his money have been freely given in aid of all good enterprises. His numerous benefactions show him to be thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the Master, and he has worthily filled the office of deacon in the Second Congregational Society of Exeter for about twelve years. He has also taken great interest in Sabbath-school work, and was for ten years superintendent of the school connected with his church.

Mr. Gordon's kindness to struggling and deserving students will long be remembered. From his interest in education he was chosen, Dec. 15, 1866, one of the seven members composing the first "board of trustees" of Robinson Female Seminary, then just organized. This position he held until expiration of term in 1870. In 1872 he gave one thousand dollars to Phillips' Exeter Academy for a scholarship for deserving indigent students, and in 1874 gave one thousand dollars more for the same purpose. In 1881 he gave one thousand dollars, to be applied in the same manner, to Dartmouth College.

In 1865, Mr. Gordon made a trip to California in the interests of a silver-mining company of Boston, and remained there one year.

Mr. Gordon married, first, Dec. 26, 1853, Aleina Eveline, daughter of Moses Sanborn, of Kingston, N. H. Their children were Moses Sanborn, John Thomas (died young), Nathaniel, Frances Eveline, and Mary Aleina Elizabeth. Mrs. Gordon died April 14, 1864; and June 4, 1868, he married George Anne, daughter of John Lowe, Jr., of Exeter.

Systematic and conservative in business, Mr. Gordon has been financially prosperous; but believing that "it is not all of life to live," his gains are not the object of his worship, and in many and widely varying directions the kindness of his benefactions will be a blessing and a happiness to many generations yet to come.

JEWETT CONNER.

Among the many old homesteads in Exeter is the homestead farm owned and occupied by Jewett Conner, which has been handed down from father to son unencumbered by debt for nearly two hundred years, he being the fifth in descent from Jeremiah Conner, who it appears was a large landholder both in Exeter and Gilmanton, N. H., and was one of the selectmen of Exeter several years in the early part of the last century. His children were Jonathan, Philip, Samuel, Benjamin, Hannah, and Ann. The daughters were married, and took the names of Hannah Rawlins and Ann Lyford. Jonathan had the homestead. His children were Jonathan, Jeremiah, John, Mehetable, and Anne. The daughters were married and took the names of Mehetable Thing and Anne Giddings. Jonathan had the homestead. He married Mary Jewett, of Exeter. Their children were Jesse, Daniel, Nathaniel, Jedediah, Mary, and Eunice. Mary married Ezekiel Barstow, of Exeter. Eunice never married. Jedediah had the homestead. He was twice married,—first to Elizabeth Jenkins. Their children were Elizabeth W., Daniel, Susan F., and Jewett. His second wife was Abigail Gilman. They had one daughter, Mary, who died in infancy. Of these, Elizabeth W. married the Hon. Parker Sheldon, of Gardiner, Me., and died Oct. 5, 1824. Daniel never married, and died Sept. 24, 1835. Susan F. married the Rev. Joel Terry, a Baptist clergyman of Kane, Ill., and died Oct. 15, 1841. Jewett had the homestead. He married Nov. 15, 1838, Lydia, daughter of Josiah R. and Betsey Norris, of Exeter. Their children are William N., Fannie E., Ellen A., and Mary E. Of these William N. married, September, 1866, Emma W. Hart, of Boston, Mass., who died Sept. 12, 1877, leaving one child, Arthur J., born March 26, 1868. Fannie E. married Jan. 17, 1877, Harrison G. Burley, of Newmarket, N. H. Ellen A. married Nov. 26, 1879, Orin F. Hart, of Chelsea, Mass. Mary E. married Dec. 26, 1881, Freeman Sanborn, of Newmarket, N. H. Mr. Conner is a modest, unassuming man, calm and deliberate, who acts from conviction and upon principle. He is one of the representative men of Exeter in more respects than one. As a descendant of an old and honorable family, as an agriculturist, as an honest, earnest, progressive man, he has been honored by his fellow-citizens and others with various positions of office and trust, having been repeatedly elected one of the selectmen and to other town offices; has been twice elected a member of the State Legislature; in 1863 was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury assistant assessor under the United States revenue law, and acted in that capacity seven years; in 1879 was appointed by the Supreme Court a member of the State Board of Equalization for the term of two years, and reappointed in 1881; the duties of all which have been honestly and conscientiously discharged. His children have all married and are away from the old homestead, yet Mr. and Mrs. Conner are surrounded by many other blessings that tend to make their declining years comfortable and happy.

SOLOMON J. PERKINS.

Solomon J., son of Stephen and Lydia (Smith) Perkins, was born in Lee, N. H., Aug. 18, 1804. His grandfather, Lieut. Perkins, was a distinguished soldier in the Revolutionary war, and lived in Waterville, Me. He had three sons,—John, Joseph, and Stephen. Stephen Perkins was probably born at Waterville, but when young he was apprenticed to a farmer in Exeter. He married when of age, and began the mercantile business in Rochester, N. H. He unfortunately lost his property, after which he moved to Exeter about 1815 and engaged in farming.

His children attaining maturity were John (deceased), Stephen (deceased), Solomon J., Benjamin R., Joseph W., Sarah A. (Mrs. John F. Merrill), and Adeline A. (Mrs. George Merrill). He was an attendant of the Congregational Church. In politics he was a Whig. He died in 1832, aged sixty-five years. His wife died Sept. 7, 1864.

Solomon J. Perkins, coming from Rochester to Exeter when about ten years of age, worked in the "Pickpocket" wrap-yarn factory for about three years, then went to the Rockingham Mills for a few years; from there went to Dover and worked in the Upper Mills, and then in the mills at the landing, being in Dover altogether about ten years. Thence he went to Pittsfield, N. H., where he had charge of the weaving and dressing departments in the mills for about two years. He married Armine Goolwin, of South Berwick, Me., Nov. 26, 1831. In connection with his brother, Benjamin R., he bought the Rockingham Mills, where they manufactured batting and coarse wrap-yarn. Leaving his brother in charge of the mills, he engaged with Capt. N. Gilman to superintend his mill at "Pickpocket," and stayed there two years. In 1836 he bought the John S. Gordon place on Gordon Hill, comprising eight acres of land, moved there in the fall, and in 1837 opened a tavern and kept it for several years. He has ever since made this place his home, and after a married life of over fifty years he and his esteemed wife have the satisfaction of knowing that they are held in high esteem by a large circle of relatives and friends.

This worthy couple have descendants as follows: seven children—Rev. George G. (pastor of Congregational Church, Avoca, Iowa), Solomon S. (a farmer, living near his father), Moses A. (United States mail agent), Augusta (Mrs. H. E. Parsons), Albert M. (died from wounds received while leading his company at Gettysburg), Robert Hamilton (a popular teacher in Portsmouth Grammar School), and Jennie S. (a teacher in Harvard Grammar School, Boston, Mass.)—and seventeen grandchildren. Mr. Perkins has ever been an industrious and valuable citizen of Exeter. He has never sought official station, but has held the office of selectman of Exeter for several terms. In politics he has always been a staunch Republican. Both he and his wife have been members of the Second Congregational Church of Exeter for many years.

Mrs. Perkins was a daughter of Moses and Sally (Lord) Goodwin. Moses Goodwin was a farmer and a builder of gondolas. He always resided in South Berwick and York, Me., dying in South Berwick in 1837. His wife died in 1861.

B. R. PERKINS.

Benjamin Rollins Perkins, son of Stephen Perkins, was born at Rochester, N. H., Jan. 17, 1807. When he was about five years old his father moved to Exeter, locating near Mr. Perkins' present residence, on what is now "Perkins' Hill," then known as "Gordon's Hill," to enable his family to work in the "Pickpocket" mill. This mill was one of the very first in this part of the State. The stern battle with poverty and adverse circumstances came on Mr. Perkins early in life, and we find him in childhood spreading hay, etc., for nine pence a day. From this humble beginning at the lowest round of the ladder he steadily ascended until he to-day ranks among Exeter's representative farmers, and is in a position of independent prosperity. We find him in various employments, earning a little at each, until 1821, when he began work in a shoe-shop in Exeter, where he labored for two years, becoming much attached to his employers. He was then offered the (to him) enormous salary of six dollars per month to work in the Rockingham factory, and this drew him thitherward, where he worked one year. In 1824 he went with a brother to work in a factory in Dover, and from five dollars rapidly gained in position and wages until he closed his connection with the mill in 1827, when he was receiving one dollar a day.

Feeling the lack of education he returned to Exeter, and as long as the stock of money he had laid by lasted attended common school and academy. He then went to Dover Landing, and worked in a mill for about two years at one dollar and twenty-five cents per day. By this time he had saved fifty dollars. This he spent in traveling while vainly endeavoring to obtain employment in strange places. In 1829 he purchased on credit the stock of the store, then closed, at "Pickpocket" mills, amounting to about one thousand dollars, and was a successful merchant. In 1831 he with Mr. Flagg hired and conducted the Rockingham mills for three years, he removing his merchandise thither. In 1834, Mr. Perkins bought the mill, paying five thousand dollars, and carried on the business five years, when he sold a half-interest to his brother Solomon, this copartnership continuing until 1841, when they sold the mill, and Benjamin removed to the beautiful farm where he has since resided. Mr. Perkins has been a Whig and a Republican in politics. He was at one time much interested in militia matters, and was promoted step by step from clerk to colonel.

Mr. Perkins married (1) Mary Jane Dolloff, of Exeter, in 1831. She died in 1868. Their children were Lydia F., deceased; Benjamin J., married Sarah Giles, and has five children; William H., deceased; Jacob S.; and Irene E. (2) Elmira J. Kimball, of Haverhill, Mass.

Mr. Perkins is in possession of a comfortable property, the result of his industry and economy, and may be considered one of the representative farmers in his portion of the town.

JACOB CARLISLE.

To no man is the community more indebted than to the one who, by diligence, attention to business, and years of labor, has risen by his own inherent force from poverty to competency, and is acknowledged a "self-made" man. Perhaps no one is more entitled to this appellation in Exeter than Jacob Carlisle. Certainly no man has done more, during his more than forty years' residence in that place, to help the advancement of improvement there, and a brief sketch of his career may be perused with benefit.

Jacob Carlisle, son of James Carlisle and Sally Dushong, his wife, was a native of Waterborough, Me. James Carlisle was an esteemed citizen, a farmer, and for many years served with acceptability as justice of the peace. He and one Swett were the first two settlers of Waterborough, and his family experienced all the vicissitudes of life in the woods. He died when Jacob—who was third in a family of four children—was a lad of thirteen. For a year thereafter Jacob was an inmate of the family of Mr. Swett. He then went to the home-place, originally two hundred and fifty acres (but two-thirds had been sold for four hundred and four dollars), and commenced his nearly half a century of business life by taking his mother's "thirds," the care of the family, and assuming a debt of one hundred and eighty dollars. He stayed here till he was eighteen, repaired the house (largely out of repair), erected a barn thirty-six by forty, paid the indebtedness, and had one hundred and fifty dollars at interest. This was a great achievement for a youth no older than he, and was the talk of the countryside. Young Carlisle had a vigorous and active temperament, and labored more days and hours than many men would do. When but sixteen he went into the woods, taking two men with him, whom he hired at two shillings per day, cash a wonderful thing in those times of almost universal barter, and made a kiln, and burned three thousand six hundred bushels of charcoal, personally attending to the labor for sixteen consecutive days and nights without once going out of the woods. This narration gives the key to the success of Mr. Carlisle's whole business life.

After leaving the farm he went to Lowell, Mass., and engaged for one season as boatman on the Essex Canal. The next year he engaged with the same man for another season, but the boat not being ready, he went to Exeter, N. H., to work on a railroad until needed. This was in May, 1840. He did not return to Lowell, for he soon formed a partnership with Hosler Shedd, a stone-mason. From this time to the present Mr. Carlisle has been a resident of Exeter. From time to time, as his earnings accumulated, he invested in real estate, and has since dealt quite largely in it. This copartnership did not last but a few months, and Mr. Carlisle continued the business alone for many years, employing at times as many as twenty men, winning a high reputation for honesty of work and promptness of execution. He afterwards began to move buildings, was very successful, and even yet is called upon to perform a difficult job. To employ the teams used in this business during the winter season, he commenced buying wood lots and clearing them of their lumber and firewood. He soon was extensively, for those days, engaged in this business, being the leading operator in this line. It never made any difference to him whether he was bound by a written contract or verbal agreement, his word was kept and his agreement met, even at pecuniary loss. A characteristic instance occurred in his wood contracts with the Boston and Maine Railroad. About 1860 he verbally agreed to deliver a thousand cords of wood at a defined price. Wood advanced a dollar on a cord, but Mr. Carlisle carried out his agreement, and by so doing lost the increase, one thousand dollars, in price. The next year, on same contract, the price increased five hundred dollars on the whole amount, and it was again filled. This keeping his word at a great loss gave him the confidence of the company, and for several years he could deliver wood when none else could, and has taken contracts for two thousand five hundred cords in one year.

For about ten years he carried on the grocery business in Exeter. He began the manufacture of tinware and dealing in stoves about 1865 (in the building on Water Street since occupied by Porter & Thying), with one Skillings, as Carlisle & Skillings.

This firm soon changed to Steele & Carlisle, and on completion of the Carlisle business block, built by Mr. Carlisle, in 1875, removed to the store now occupied by its successors, J. Carlisle & Son. In 1869 or 1870, Mr. Carlisle engaged in the foundry business with his brother James, and when, on the burning of the building ten months after this, the foundry was rebuilt by the "Exeter Building Company," Jacob took the business, and continued it until 1881, when he disposed of it to Lorenzo Ely.

Mr. Carlisle has personally superintended his business, and is regarded as a sagacious and reliable practical man, whose advice is sought often and carefully considered by many shrewd and successful men. He is frank and out-spoken, and goes toward his mark in a straightforward, practical way, successful generally in his projects, and always keeping his money moving where it benefits the community as well as himself. He has never invested in bank stocks or government bonds, and is probably much higher taxed than many of greater wealth. He was from the organization of the party a Republican, has been collector three years, selectman two years, and member of the State Legislature from Exeter for two years.

In 1843 he married Mary O., daughter of William and Olivia (Steele) Colcord, of Exeter. They have eight children now living,—James W. (of firm of J. Carlisle & Son), Josephine (Mrs. Woodbury Berry), George E., Cora (Mrs. Dudley Burpee), Walter S., Eva, Etta, and Jacob.

The career of Mr. Carlisle presents a valuable lesson to the poor but ambitious boy, starting as he did with nothing but willing hands, a stout heart, and a determination to succeed, and by industry, foresight, and integrity accumulating a handsome property and an independent position among men.

JOSEPH T. PORTER.

Joseph Thying Porter, son of Dudley and Lydia (Swasey) Thying, was born in Exeter, N. H., Feb. 14, 1815. His father was a blacksmith, working many years at that trade, and dying at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. Young Joseph was educated at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and was a fellow-student of Benjamin F. Butler. He commenced the active business of life as clerk in the hardware-store of John Gardner & Son, where, by attention to business and diligence, he remained seven years. About this time (1838), by an act of Legislature, he added the name of Porter to that of Thying. He then went to Georgetown, Ky., to enter the employ of Hatch & Miller as clerk in their mercantile establishment in that place. After discharging these duties with faithfulness for about two years he returned to Exeter, and in March, 1841, engaged in business for himself as grocer. His brother Samuel became associated in 1842, and the business was conducted under firm-name of Porter & Thying until the death of Mr. Porter, Jan. 10, 1881,

J. T. Porter

and continued in the same building where started until 1879, ranking among the oldest business houses of Exeter.

Mr. Porter was a careful, shrewd, conservative man of business, energetic witlnd, and with a strong honesty and honor that always forbade his stooping to a mean action. For nearly half a century he walked daily the streets of his native village and mingled with its people in social and business relations, and never did malice or suspicion whisper aught against his integrity. He was truly an honest man, and the vacuum caused by his loss cannot be filled by another. Possessing rare intelligence, capacity for and knowledge of business, he was for many years intrusted with various official positions, and in each position his judgment was accepted. As selectman of his town during the dark days of the great Rebellion, he discharged the duties of that very difficult position to the satisfaction of his townsmen, and was elected again and again. He was town clerk seven years, and represented Exeter in the State Legislature two years, and was faithful in the discharge of those duties.

In public and private life he was modest and unassuming in his manners, courteous and gentlemanly in his demeanor, and attached to his friends. He was firm and unflinching in the discharge of duty, energetic and indignant against all appearance of chicanery or fraud. Honest himself, he could not endure deception in others.

Mr. Porter married (1) in 1843, Abby P., daughter of Josiah Fogg, of Exeter. She died in 1861, leaving one daughter, Ella (Mrs. Hazen Churchill), whose only son bears his grandsire's name, "Joseph Porter;" (2) Dec. 26, 1861, Anna M., daughter of James J. and Nancy P. Wiggin, of an old and honored New Hampshire family.

Never possessed of a strong physical nature, Mr. Porter yet carried a pleasant philosophy of life through many months of illness, and when he died his family lost a kind and tender husband, a loving and indulgent father, and the community one of its worthy citizens.

His widow and daughter reside in the village of Exeter, and, like the lamented husband and father, enjoy a warm place in the hearts of a large circle of friends.

JOHN F. MOSES.

John F. Moses was born in Exeter, N. H., Sept. 10, 1792. He was second son of Theodore Moses, whose residence in Exeter dates back to 1776. As a young man he is known to have been industrious, early engaging in the manufacture of hats, which he continued many years. The war of 1812 found him just stepping into manhood; his name was enrolled as a volunteer, and for a short time he performed military service in Portsmouth. Dec. 27, 1815, he was united in marriage to Mary S. Pearson, a woman of rare worth, who died Aug. 10, 1844. By this marriage there were eight children, of whom two sons and three daughters survived their father. His second wife was Abby C. Boyd, a faithful helpmeet for him in his declining years. She outlived him but a few months, leaving one daughter and two sons. The home of this family was a centre of happiness, where the sceptre of rule was love and not fear, and where God was remembered and his word revered. As a citizen, Mr. Moses early won, and ever held, a high place in the estimation of the community. He took a lively interest in everything that promoted the welfare of the people,—in education, in morals, in good government, in the care of criminals, and in religious culture. He was broad in his sympathies, and his influence extended beyond his own town or county. For three successive years, 1849-51, he represented Exeter in the State Legislature. Engaged for many years in the wool business he was quite successful, and was well known and highly respected in business circles as a man of sterling integrity.

But it is as a representative Christian that Deacon Moses principally appears in this historical work. He was early identified with the First Baptist Church of Exeter, and for more than sixty-seven years was a faithful and a consistent member. During sixty-two years he served the church as a deacon, and his deaconate was after the pattern presented by Paul. For nearly fifty years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school, a work in which he took special delight. His love for children was always manifest. Previous to the formation of a school in his own church—as early as 1818—he assisted in forming one on a union plan, and gave to it years of patient toil. Deacon Moses was a man of deep research and intelligent reason. He was a genuine Christian, the result of close study of the Scriptures and clear convictions of their truth and belief in their teachings. He could give a reason for the hope that was in him. He was a believer of the Pauline stamp, and hence possessed that firmness and solidity of character which made him a pillar of strength in the church. He could be relied on every day in the year. He was a man of prayer. That was a true remark made at his funeral, "The easiest thing in the world for Deacon Moses to do was to get down on his knees and pray," and his prayers were unusually appropriate wherever offered.

A marked feature of his life was its beneficence. It truly exemplified a religion that "visits the widow and the fatherless in their affliction." It was not a cold, narrow, heartless form with him, but a life of active goodness, reaching out in the direction of need. Like his Master, "he went about doing good." He was eminently self-forgotten. Visiting the sick and relieving the needy were more than daily duties, they were labors of love. And in this work he sought out those who had the fewest friends and the most pressing wants. The almshouse was made more cheerful by his frequent visits. He was welcomed there as the poor man's friend. Many an inmate of the jail or convict of the prison had occasion to remember him for his kindly words, his earnest prayer, his gift of a Bible, and, in not a few cases, his seed-thought of hope that started into being a new life. The poor and unfortunate of Rockingham County had reason to thank God for the life of Deacon Moses. Of his manner of doing good it is enough to say that he illustrated the spirit of the precept, "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness." He was ready with his means to answer his own prayers, but never with ostentation, the recipient being often the only one to whom the act of kindness was known. His ministrations by the bedside of the sick and the dying were always suitable. He seemed to know just how to approach the sufferer with kindly words, and how, with singular appropriateness, to carry his ease to God. His motto was, "Hope for the best, but prepare for the worst." His activities did not cease till the very close of his life. His old age was beautiful for its serenity, its childlikeness, its strength, and its ripeness. He died, after a short illness, surrounded by his family, Dec. 24, 1877, at the age of eighty-five years, three months, and fourteen days. "The memory of the just is blessed!"

GILMAN BARKER.

Gilman Barker is descended from one Josiah Barker, and is the son of Noah Barker and Deborah (Gilman) Barker. Noah Barker was born in Exeter, N. H., Sept. 8, 1763. He married, first, Mary Philbrook, Oct. 7, 1789. Their children were Josiah, born July 25, 1790; Benjamin, born May 28, 1792; Noah, born March 22, 1794; Lydia, May 21, 1796; and John, July 3, 1798.

Mrs. Barker died May 17, 1800. Mr. Barker married for his second wife Deborah Gilman, Oct. 21, 1800. She was born June 29, 1773. Their children were Mary G., born Sept. 17, 1801; then three children who died in infancy; then Gilman, born March 1, 1808; Susannah G., April 27, 1810; Deborah, July 16, 1812; and William, Nov. 5, 1815. Of the above, Josiah, Benjamin, Noah, Lydia, John, and Deborah are dead. Of those living, Mary married John Scammon, of Stratham; Susan married Nathaniel Shute, of Exeter; and William is a jeweler in Elgin, Ill. Mrs. Barker died Nov. 21, 1855, and Mr. Barker, May 10, 1858, in his ninety-fifth year.

Gilman Barker, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, had very meagre educational facilities during his boyhood, but made the best of what opportunities were presented. He was the son of a farmer, and chose that as his lifetime occupation. He married, first, Emeline, daughter of Deacon Daniel Smith, of Brentwood, January, 1839. To them were born three children.—Sarah, born May 5, 1842; Annie E., born Dec. 6, 1846; William G., born July 10, 1849. Mrs. Barker died May 13, 1851, and Mr. Barker married for his second wife Lucy Ann, daughter of Thomas K. Russell, of Brentwood, June, 1853. Their children were Arthur C., born June 2, 1858, and Charles W., born June 4, 1863. Of these, Sarah married William C. Marble, of Methuen. They have three children.—Maud, Charles, and Ernest. William G. married Alice Amadon, of Bellows Falls, Vt.; they have two children living, Lucy and William, and one dead, Edith. Arthur C. is a machinist in Providence, R. I.; Charles W., also a machinist, is in Bellows Falls, Vt. Mr. Barker resides on the old homestead, which has been in possession of the family since about 1740. It is a large and valuable farm. In politics Mr. Barker is a Republican. He is a member of the First Congregational Church, Exeter. He is a modest, unassuming man, never has sought office or distinction, preferring a quiet, honest, unostentatious life, free from the cares, strife, turmoil, and intrigue incident to a public career. He is a very energetic, active man, and at seventy-two years of age his step is more brisk and his movements more sprightly than most men of forty.

He is a man who has the confidence and esteem of those who know him; and his reputation for truth, honesty, and nobility of character is beyond cavil or dispute.

CHAPTER XL.

FREMONT.

Geographical—Topographical—Early History—Incorporation—Population—Military History.

THE town of Fremont lies near the centre of the county and is bounded as follows: on the north by Epping; on the east by Brentwood; on the south by Danville and Sandown; and on the west by Chester and Raymond. The surface is generally level and the soil fertile. The early history of this town will be found in the history of Exeter and Brentwood, of which towns it originally formed a part. At the setting off of Brentwood from Exeter, in 1742, it became a part of the latter town and remained such until June 22, 1764, when it was organized as a separate town. It was originally called Poplin, but in 1854 changed to its present name, in honor, doubtless, of Gen. John C. Fremont, the first candidate of the Republican party for President.

The precise settlement of the town is not known. Rev. Orlo Hines was the first minister. There are two churches, Free Baptist and Methodist.

Fremont is a station on the Nashua and Rochester Railroad, seventy miles from Worcester. It is twenty-four miles west of Portsmouth, ten west of Exeter, and thirty southeast from Concord.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

ROBERT S. FRENCH.

Robert S. French was born March 21, 1801, in the town of Danville, N. H. He is the son of Jonathan French, of that town, who was one of the most prominent men of his community. He was a man of strong religious proclivities, and an earnest, faithful Christian. He possessed the confidence of his fellow-townsmen to a remarkable degree, and did a great deal of probate and justice business, was a representative to the Legislature three years, and held various other offices. He was an eminently pious, earnest, honest man (see French history, in another part of this volume). When Robert S. was twenty years of age he went to reside with an aunt in Chester, and after his father's death, in 1828, he made Chester his home, remaining with his aunt until her death. While living in Chester he was elected selectman two years. In 1835 he came to Fremont, and in November of that year he married Sarah, daughter of Abel and Abigail (Wood) Kimball, of that town. She was born in May, 1805, and died Oct. 6, 1875. She was a devoted wife, a kind, affectionate mother, and a generous, constant friend. She had learned early in life what it is to battle with the world. Her father died when she was but sixteen years of age, leaving her and her widowed mother alone. The cares of the farm devolved upon them entirely. They had a hard fight, but sustained themselves heroically and well.

When she and Mr. French were married he took charge of the place, and from that time to the present it has steadily and constantly been improved, beautified, and rendered more valuable. The old, tumble-down, dilapidated buildings were removed, and in their stead he has reared handsome structures,—a commodious and elegant residence, with numerous and spacious out-houses.

He has been a very successful man in business, and has surrounded himself with all the comforts and conveniences in his home which would tend to make his home-life enjoyable. He has always been Republican in politics, and a Free-Will Baptist in religion. He has twice represented his town in the Legislature, in 1856 and also in 1878, and has been selectman two years. Mr. French is a man of fine physique, and at eighty-two years of age is hale and active, and attends to more business than most young men would like to undertake. He has but one child, a daughter, Sarah E., who resides with her father. Miss French has inherited all her father's business qualities and intellectuality. She has taught twenty-seven terms of school,—eleven in Fremont, seven in Brentwood, two in Raymond, and three in Sandown. She has always received the highest encomiums of praise from superintendents and patrons for thoroughness and success as an instructor of youth. She is a rigid disciplinarian, an earnest worker in the school-room, and an intelligent, cultivated woman; just the kind of guardian and guide to direct the young mind in the proper pathway, and encourage its progress.

DANIEL BEEDE.

Daniel Beede is descended from one Eli Beede, who emigrated from the Isle of Jersey to this country about the year 1700, being then about sixteen years of age. He married Mehitable Sleeper, and to them were born six children,—Hezekiah, Daniel, Thomas, Jonathan, Elizabeth, and ——. Jonathan was born Sept. 18, 1734. He married Anna Sleeper, born Feb. 17, 1736. They had ten children,—Ruth, born May 22, 1759; Jonathan, born Dec. 24, 1760; Naomi, born Jan. 18, 1763; Mary, born Nov. 11, 1764; Hulda, Jan. 31, 1767; Hannah, March 31, 1769; John, April 8, 1771; Moses, July 16, 1773; Abraham, June 27, 1775; Eli, Sept. 9, 1777. He married for his second wife Susannah Hoag. He was the first of his family who joined the Society of Friends, in which church he became a minister, and all his descendants since his day have been birthright members of this society. He died June 14, 1825. Eli, his son, married Ruth Penslee, Oct. 22, 1800. They had four children,—Jonathan, born Jan. 4, 1802; Daniel, born March 28, 1804; Eli, born Aug. 1, 1806; and Mary, born May 18, 1808. He was a farmer, and held various town offices. He died in the prime of life, March 5, 1822. Mrs. Beede, his wife, died Nov. 13, 1842. Of their children, Jonathan is living now in Iowa. He married Ezzah Leishure, May 18, 1842. Eli is living in South Hampton, N. H. He married Miriam Huntington, Oct. 2, 1834. Their children are Ruth Ann, born Dec. 4, 1835; Phebe, Feb. 12, 1838; Lindley M., Feb. 5, 1840; Mary Ellen, Jan. 18, 1843. Mrs. Beede died July, 1845. He married for his second wife a sister of the first, Elizabeth Huntington, born April 20, 1822. They were married Aug. 24, 1846. Their children are Anna M., born March 4, 1848; Almira B., Nov. 15, 1850; Daniel S., Jan. 31, 1852; Charles E., Jan. 5, 1854; John J., Sept. 10, 1856; Lillie H., July 18, 1863.

Daniel Beede received a common-school education, supplemented by an attendance of six months at Y. M. B. School, Society of Friends, Providence, R. I. He made remarkable progress in his studies, particularly in the science of mathematics. He married, Oct. 9, 1834, Ann Elizabeth, daughter of John Folsom, of Epping (see Folsom history in this volume). They had two children,—Susan L., born June 12, 1836, and George F., born Jan. 5, 1838. Susan married Andrew Philbrick, of Danville, June 4, 1868.

Mrs. Beede died Dec. 30, 1846, and Mr. Beede has never married again. He has been a minister in his church between twenty and thirty years, and has traveled quite extensively both in the United States and Canada. He has been clerk or assistant clerk of society meeting for more than fifty years. His grandfather, his father, himself, and his son have each been selectmen of their town. He has been superintendent of school committee twenty years, was a member of Constitutional Convention of 1850, and has held various other offices and positions of trust. In politics he has always been Whig and Republican. He bears in his face the stamp of honor, truthfulness, and integrity, and through the course of a long and active life has so deported himself as to make friends of all with whom he came in contact; and now that his days draw near their close, can look back without regret, and review his career without remorse.

George F. Beede, his son, was married May 20, 1863, to Ruth P., daughter of John and Sarah Nichols, of Winslow, Me. She was born April 3, 1839. Their children are William B., born Aug. 3, 1864; Annie E., July 16, 1866; Louis A., May 20, 1868; George E., June 24, 1870; Mary Alice, Oct. 14, 1874; Augustine, March 27, 1876; Charles C., June 9, 1877; Abbie S., Jan. 15, 1880. He attended the Friends' school at Providence three winters, and one term at Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro', Me. By occupation he is a farmer, and also deals in lumber. He has been representative to Legislature two years, superintendent of schools ten years, selectman nine years, and chairman of the board eight years; is also justice of peace and land surveyor. He lives on the land owned by the original Eli Beede, and settled by Jonathan about 1760.

JOHN WHITTIER.

John Whittier, son of Aaron and Lydia (Worthen) Whittier, was born in Raymond, Rockingham Co., N. H., Aug. 12, 1818. Being reared a farmer's son, he had only such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools of his town, which at that early day were rather meagre. He made the best use possible, however, of such facilities as were presented, and succeeded in obtaining a fair education. At about eighteen or twenty years of age he learned carpentering and followed this trade until the death of his brother, who had remained at home with his father, called him back to the old homestead to take charge of the affairs there. He married, Sept. 12, 1849, Mary A. Lovering, born Aug. 31, 1825. She was the daughter of Daniel and Ruth (Atwood) Lovering. Mr. Lovering was a native of Raymond, and Mrs. Lovering of Hampstead, her father being James Atwood, who resided on the old Atwood homestead, and was a descendant of one of the earliest pioneers of that town. Mr. and Mrs. Whittier were married at Epping and came immediately to Fremont to re-

Horatio Beede

Horatio Beede was the son of Phineas and Miriam (Taylor) Beede, of Fremont. He was one of a family of five children,—Horatio, born Dec. 18, 1797, Sally, Mary, Phineas, and William T. Sally married Samuel Smith; she is now a widow, living in Bristol. Mary married David Robinson, is also a widow, and resides in Lawrence, Mass. Phineas Beede, Sr., was a prominent and worthy member of his town. He was a Federalist and Whig in politics, and in religious faith a Methodist. He died Jan. 7, 1863. His father was a sergeant in the Revolutionary war, and was descended from Eli Beede, who emigrated to this country from Jersey Isles about 1650. (See Beede history elsewhere in this volume.)

Horatio was reared a farmer and received only such education as was to be obtained at the common schools of that day. His life was chiefly spent in agricultural pursuits, with the exception of about seven years spent in Boston when a young man, during which time he never lost a day from his employment except when he came home to visit his parents. At the expiration of this period he came back to Fremont, and purchased the farm upon which he resided to the time of his death, and which his son, Phineas B., now owns. He married, April 12, 1824, Hannah Fellows, of Danville. She was born June 11, 1799. Their children were Hiram P., born Feb. 26, 1827; Mary M., born May 13, 1829; Phineas B., born Sept. 16, 1831; and Sarah J., born Oct. 18, 1840. Hiram P. lives now in Chalk Mound, Kan. He was a volunteer in Co. E, First New Hampshire Volunteer Sharpshooters, and was wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks. Mary M. married Smith Rowell, and resides in Sandown; Sarah J. married Geo. W. Bassett, and lives in Fremont. Mr. Beede was a captain of militia. He was selectman of his town, and also a representative to the Legislature. In religious belief he was a Universalist. He was a remarkably liberal-minded man, of broad views and sound judgment, of sterling integrity of character, firmness, and decision; independent in thought and action. A man who acted from principle, and acted fearlessly. Mrs. Beede died Jan. 27, 1862. Mr. Beede married for his second wife Mrs. Susan E. Tilton. (See history of French family in this volume.) He died Feb. 16, 1878. Phineas B. married, Oct. 29, 1856, Ann R., daughter of James and Affa (Atwood) Leavitt. They have but one child, Charles Ellsworth, born May 10, 1861. He is on the old homestead with his parents.

side, where, on small capital, Mr. Whittier established himself as a shoe-box manufacturer and a dealer in lumber. From a small beginning he, by dint of untiring energy, fair dealing, and a far-seeing business policy, succeeded in rapidly building up a large and lucrative business, and soon became one of the most successful men of the town. He dealt considerably in real estate, and through the course of a pushing, active, successful business career he built up and maintained a reputation for honesty, sincerity, candor, and fair dealing which it is the lot of few men to obtain. He was one of the few men against whom the voice of envy and malice seemed to be hushed. He died April 14, 1873, leaving one child,—Hattie A. As soon as the estate was settled up, Mrs. Whittier, with her daughter, removed to Manchester, N. H., where she now resides. She has a pleasant, beautiful home, and by her amiability and kindness of heart has won a large circle of friends.

GREENLAND.

Geographical—Topographical—Petition for Privileges—Petition for a Township—Documentary History—Petition of Inhabitants of "Breakfast Hill"—Other Petitions—Taverns—War of the Revolution—Action of the Towns—Town Stock of Ammunition—Hiring Soldiers—Annexation to Massachusetts

The town of Greenland lies in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded on the north by Great Bay and the town of Newington; on the east by Portsmouth and Rye; on the south by North Hampton and Stratham; and on the west by Stratham. The surface of the town is rolling and its soil fertile.

Documentary History.—The parish of Greenland was incorporated in 1703, and two years later, 1705, the inhabitants petitioned for liberty to have "a minister and school-master among themselves. The following is a copy of the petition:

Petition of the inhabitants of Greenland for Privileges—1705.

To His Excellency Joseph Dudley Esq.—Governor and Commander in Chief in and over his Majesties province of New Hampshire and Vice Admiral of the same—

The humble Petition of John Johnson Abraham Lewis and Samuel Weeks on behalf of themselves and the Inhabitants of Greenland, belonging to the Town of Portsmouth.

Humbly Sheweth

That there are about three hundred & Twenty persons; men women and Children in Greenland who are Obligated to come to the Bank to meeting, and the distance being five and six miles and the season of the year occasioning hard travelling as well the danger of the Enemy makes it very difficult and tedious to get to the said meeting, or to send their children every day to school being not able to Take them abroad; Soe that your poor petitioners are almost deprived of publicly hearing the word of God or getting their children Educated with Reading and writing And your petitioners have desired at a publick Towne meeting to have the Liberty of a minister and schoolmaster among themselves. They paying their salary and to be Exempted from paying to the minister and schoolmaster at the Bank but there is noe care taken about itt by the Town who continues Silent in the matter.

May it therefore please yr Excellency to Consider the promise, and to order as you in your prudent Judgment shall see most relating to the same whereby yo<sup>r</sup> petitioners may obtaine the privilage of a minister and schoolmaster among themselves as aforesaid, And they as in duty bound shall ever pray &c

In 1716, Ebenezer Johnson and others petitioned to be joined to the parish of Greenland, as follows:

17th January 1716

To the Honourable George Vaughan Esq. Lt. Governor of his Majesties Province of New Hampshire and the Honourable his Majesties Council—

The Humble petition of the Inhabitants That live on the Path adjacent to Greenland who are on this side of the line which was formerly Ran between Portsmouth and Exeter beginning att Walls-Clack & running to Hampton bounds—Humbly Sheweth

That we the subscribers would humbly pray that we may be joined to Greenland Parish because we there commonly attend the worship of God, which is abundantly more convenient for us than any other place of publick worship and have diverse of us been helpfull in building a house to worship God In there att s<sup>d</sup> Parish.

We likewise the Inhabitants of Greenland being a poor & small Parish Humbly pray your honors to Grant that all the Inhabitants which are within the afore s<sup>d</sup> line from Walls clack to Hampton bounds May be added to us—We therefore humbly crave your Honours Grant of these our request & your petitioners as In Duty bound shall pray &c.

New Hamp<sup>ts</sup> ) mander in Chief in and over his Maj<sup>ty</sup> Province of New Hampshire and to the hon<sup>ble</sup> the Council & house of Representatives Conven<sup>d</sup> in Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly for s<sup>d</sup> Province.

The humble Petition of Capt Sannell Weeks, Capt Joshua Weeks & Mr John Cate.

<sup>1</sup> So called from the circumstance that a party of Indians in 1696, after an early attack on inhabitants of Portsmouth, and the slaughter of fourteen persons, hastily retreated, and stopped on the declivity of a hill (now in Greenland) and took breakfast. Ever since it has retained the name of Breakfast Hill.

In the behalfe of the Poore- parish of Greenland as they are Impow- ered by said parish to represent the same with the select men of Greenland.

humbly Sheweth.

That whereas by a vote formerly of the Town of Port-mouth (of which the said Greenland is a part) It was voted that Greenland Bounds should be on the South side of Packers farm (which suppose is now Ductor Marches) and Whereas by a Vote of the Gen<sup>l</sup> Assembly 2nd July 1714, Its said that Greenland bounds to Backets Bridge and thence to Joshua Haines M<sup>r</sup> Cates & Edw<sup>d</sup> Ayerss farm, The Same is very Ambiguous Whether they are included or Excluded and also Mr. Edward Ayers at that time had two farms Southwest of s<sup>d</sup> Packers or Marches farm— & it is not mention<sup>d</sup> which—And Whereas Capt Langdon & the committee that made the last return: run the line from said Marches farm to Edward Ayers southwestwardly farm, Exclusive of said Farm; which line comes to Northward of Berry Brook in the Road to Sandy Beech, which is not above a mile from Greenland Meeting house, and Excludes fifteen families that live about Breakfast hill from y<sup>e</sup> Parrish of Green- land that need to pay there towards maintenance of the ministry & lies most convenient for them to come there. The loss of so many families is very Great & Grievous to your very poore petitioners.

Therefore your humble Petitioners Humbly prayes (That considering your said parish of Greenland consists chiefly in very poore Inhabitants and Contains a very small quantity of Ground; Great Part of said Parrish being not three quarters of a mile Deep & In the Deapest or Widest place very little above a mile—That they Containe a small Compass of Ground & no probability of Increasing themselves—Humbly prayes your consolation & order that their line betwixt them and Portsmth may Extend Due south from Marches farm to y<sup>e</sup> farm M<sup>r</sup> Edward Ayers Bought of the Adm<sup>r</sup> of Richard Jose Esq Decesd and thence South East to New Castle line which line will take in the fifteen families afores<sup>d</sup> and suppose the line formerly Intended—But if it should seem most to your hon<sup>rs</sup> to take these fifteen families from said Parrish it would occasion there Breaking up not being able of them- selves that remaine to support the charges of the Ministry with the other contiguous to them.

All the Committees that Ever made any returne relating to a Division- ale line being all of Portsmth they made it as much in their favor as possible by all Strait<sup>d</sup> construction—Therefore if your hon<sup>rs</sup> be not meet to Grant us the line Desired, That then y<sup>e</sup> hon<sup>rs</sup> will appoint a Committee of some other Towns (wthly Indifferent) to make and settle a line as they shall see convenient, accordin to Portsmth Town VOTE, in 1705 and in Greater Certainty than hath as yet been Don. And your Petitioners as in Duty bound shall ever pray &c.

Jan. 12th 1763.

Humbly Shews—James Brackett & Simon Dearborn both of Greenland in said Province yeomen and two of the selectmen of said Greenland for the year 1762 the Maj. part for themselves & in behalf of the Inhabitants of said Greenland that the selectmen of said Greenland for said year Raised a Tax on the said inhabitants and gave a list thereof to Joseph Packerin Constable of said Greenland for said year with a warrant, and the hands of the Major part of the said selectmen, in consequence thereof the said constable hath made distress on sumry of the said Inhabitants of said Greenland who refused to pay their Re.

spective Taxes and for which sundry actions are bro't against him to the Inferior court to be held in March next, and on examining the warrant aforesaid, it appears that the Selectmen have neglected to send the same, which is thought necessary by Law, and it so will greatly hurt said Inhabitants, for altho' most of them may not dispute it, yet there are many that do & so pay no Tax this year, Besides bringing a great charge on the said Inhabitants for the suits already com'd and oth'rs that may be, wherefore the Petitioners as aforesaid humbly pray the advise-ment of this Hon<sup>ble</sup> Court on the Premises—and that you will be pleased to pass such Order thereon as to make the said Warrant good & Valid The want of seals notwithstanding or grant such other Relief thereon as to you shall seem meet. Taverns.—At a town-meeting held Nov. 11, 1771, it was voted that three taverns could not be kept "on the parade, so called." It seems in the early days the people exercised a care over the "taverns" and tavern-keepers, for at the same meeting it was voted that Mr. John Folsom should not keep a tavern, and then a petition be presented to the court "that he may not be licensed to keep a tavern, and if he now is licensed, that said license be abrogated and rendered null and void."

War of the Revolution.—The first vote on the old town-book concerning the Revolutionary struggle is under date July 12, 1774, when it was voted that Clement March and William Weeks be appointed delegates to attend the Provincial Congress to be held at Exeter for the choice of delegates to the Continental Congress. Thus was Greenland early aware to the importance of the then impending struggle.

Jan. 9, 1775, the town voted to approve "of the measures agreed upon by the Continental Congress," and also voted "that John Haven, William Weeks, James Brackett, Clement March, and Greenleaf Clark be a committee to carry such measures into execution."

April 21, 1775, it was voted "to send to the aid and assistance of our Brethren of the Massachusetts Bay in their defence against the ministerial troops."

"Voted, That twelve men be immediately enlisted and sent for the above purpose."

"Voted, That said men be allowed two shillings lawful money per day each, and be found necessary provisions during this continuance in said service."

"Voted, That Captain Nathan Johnson enlist said men."

Town Stock of Ammunition.—May 1, 1775, it was voted to procure ten fire-arms and a barrel of powder.

July 17th, a committee was appointed to ascertain the number of persons not provided with guns.

Hiring Soldiers.—It appears that the recruiting officer was abroad in the land during the Revolutionary struggle, as well as during the late war of the Rebellion, for under date April 2, 1777, the town

"Voted, That Mr. James Brackett and Lieut. David Simpson be a committee to go to Durham to endeavor to hire soldiers to serve for this town in the Continental service."

It was also "voted, to pay the expense that the officers of the militia were at in treating the soldiers to encourage them to enlist on Tuesday, April the 3d, and Wednesday, April the 3d."

It was also "voted, to pay a bounty of $20 to those who should enlist for three years, or during the present war with Great Britain."

Annexation to Massachusetts.—The following is a list of those in Greenland who, in 1739, petitioned to be annexed to Massachusetts: Saml. Weeks, Joshua Weeks, Benjn. Macres, Samll. Chapman, Penel Chapman, Ebenr. Johnson, Matthias Harris, Lewis Harris, James Johnson, Samll. Davis, John Weeks, Jr., Ebenr. Johnson, Jr., Samuell Weeks, Jr., Joseph Hill, John Johnson, George Kennison, Joseph Melon, Joseph Weeks, Samll. King, Joshua Macres, Robert Bryon, Jr., Jona. Dockum, Jr., Jno. Dockum, Robert Bryon, Jno. Watson, Tucker Cate, Jno. Rawlins, Wm. Symptom, Samll. Bryon, Jno. Lang, Jerehiah Weeks, David Dearborn, Jno. Weeks, Walter Weeks, Matthias Weeks, Benja. Kennison, Jona. Weeks, James Cate, Enoch Clark, Brackett Johnson, Samll. Hix, Henry Clark, Elias Philbrook, Beja. Philbrook, Joseph Grant, Jona. Weeks, Henry Clark, Jr., John Johnson, Elisha Bryon, Nathl. Huggin, Danll. Aldin, Jr., Nathan Johnson, Jr., Joseph Nelson, Jr., Leonard Weeks, and Wm. Wallis.

GREENLAND.—(Continued.)

Civil History.—Incorporation of the Town.—The First Town-Meeting.—Officers Elected.—Ecclesiastical.—Congregational Church.—Methodist Episcopal Church.—Junkens Council, American Legion of Honor.—Winnott Lodge, No. 92, F. and A. M.—Brackett Academy.—Representatives.—Military Record.

Civil History.—The town of Greenland was incorporated in 1703. The first record of which we have any knowledge is under date March 14, 1749, as follows:

"At a legal meeting of the Inhabitants of the Parish of Greenland held at the meeting-house on March 13, 1749—49,

"Voted, Clement March, Esq., moderator; Walter Weeks, clerk.

"Voted, Daniel Lunt, Ebenezer Johnson, Walter Weeks, selectmen.

"Voted, William Hains, Jr., Nathan Marston, assessors.

"Voted, Samll. Hains, Jr., constable.

"Voted, Clem<sup>o</sup> March, Esq., Enoch Clark, viewers.

"Voted, Joseph Clark, Frazz is Berry, tythingmen.

"Voted, Joseph Malson, W. Jenkins, survs. of highways.

"Voted, Nath<sup>o</sup> Gray, B. Kenniston, hog constables.

"Voted, Will. Berry, Joseph Hains, to take account of the heads and stock.

"Voted, Henry Clark, Jr., John Watson, fenceviewers.

"Voted, Clem<sup>o</sup> March, Esq., Danl. Lunt, The Packer, Esq., a committee to settle the account of the parish with the selectmen for the years 1741, 1745.

"Voted, Ja. Nod, John Johnson, to settle the value of the lands in the parish."

Enoch Clark, Walter Weeks, and Ebenezer Johnson were selectmen in 1750.

Conspicuous among the votes at the early town-meetings were those relating to the ministry. Nearly the entire business transacted by the town was in relation to regulating the minister's salary, collecting his rate, etc.

The Congregational Church in Greenland was organized in July, 1706, consisting of twenty-nine members, whose names are as follows: William Philbrick, John Cate, Ebenezer Johnson, Joshua Haines, Samuel Weeks, Richard White, Joshua Weeks, Samuel Weeks, Hannah Lewis, Elinor Johnson, Mary Philbrook, Margaret Johnson, Judith Cate, Comfort Weeks, Mary Whidden, Ellis Haines, Prudence Philbrook, Martha Philbrook, Elinor Berry, Elizabeth Berry, Hannah Brick, Susannah Foss, Mary Foss, Abigail Burnham, Dorothy Crockett, Sarah Babbe, Sarah Keustone, James Sherburne, — Sherburne.

Pastors.—Rev. William Allen was ordained July 15, 1707. Died Sept. 8, 1760, aged eighty-four years. Rev. Samuel MacClintock was ordained as colleague with Mr. Allen, Nov. 3, 1756. Died April 27, 1804, aged seventy-two.

Rev. James Armstrong Neal was ordained May 22, 1805. Died July 18, 1808, aged thirty-four.

Rev. Ephraim Abbott was ordained Oct. 27, 1813. Dismissed Oct. 28, 1828.

Rev. Samuel Wallace Clark was ordained Aug. 5, 1829. Died Aug. 17, 1847, aged fifty-two.

Rev. Edwin Holt was installed March 8, 1848. Dismissed Jan. 7, 1851.

Rev. Edward Robie was ordained Feb. 25, 1852, and is the present pastor.

The present church edifice was built in 1756, was remodeled in 1834, and renovated again in 1881. It is the second church edifice occupied by the society.

The present officers are Rev. Edward Robie, pastor; Joseph A. Holmes and John Porter Weeks, deacons. George Brackett, Esq., who died June 23, 1825, aged eighty-eight, gave in trust to the Massachusetts Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge five thousand dollars, on condition that that society pay two hundred dollars annually to the pastor of the Congregational Church in Greenland.

Mr. Brackett was very desirous of doing good with his property. He founded the academy in Greenland which bears his name. He gave two thousand six hundred dollars to the academy in Hampton, also considerable sums to other charitable objects. The gift of five thousand dollars to the Massachusetts Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge was made six or seven years before his death.

Francis March, who died in New York in 1858, aged seventy-one, a native of Greenland, left by will a legacy of five thousand dollars to the Congregational Church and Society for the support of their minister.

REV. SAMUEL MACCLINTOCK.—A worthy patriot during the Revolution was Rev. Samuel MacClintock, D.D., pastor of the Congregational Church. He was the son of William MacClintock, who lived at Medford, Mass., where Samuel was born May 1, 1732. He graduated at Princeton in 1751. He settled in the ministry at Greenland in 1756, where he had supplied the desk for the aged Mr. Allen. He was of warm temperament, and encouraged enlistments in the army destined for the overthrow of the French power in America. That his practice might tally with his preaching, he volunteered as chaplain for Col. Goffee's regiment. He continued with his regiment until after the fall of Montreal and its return to Crown Point, which place he left September 22d and returned home, accompanied by Moses Ham, Samuel Sleeper, and Henry Hill as a guard. In the war of the Revolution he warmly espoused the patriot cause, went into active service, officiated as chaplain, "in turn with other clergymen in the province," for the New Hampshire troops in the vicinity of Boston in 1775, and was the regularly appointed chaplain of Stark's regiment of 1775, and Cilley's of 1776, the former ever speaking of him with pleasure as "my chaplain." Dr. MacClintock died April 27, 1804, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

Methodist Church.<sup>1</sup>—The first Methodist sermon preached in Greenland was in August, 1808, by Rev. George Pickering.

In July, 1808, he organized a church, consisting of forty members, among whom were the following persons, the only names preserved in the history of the organization: Samuel Hatch, Sr., and his wife, Polly Hatch, Samuel Hatch, Jr., William Simpson and his wife Abigail, Abigail Paeker, Thomas Chapman and Sally, his wife, Joseph Clark and Comfort, his wife, Isaiah Berry and Elizabeth, his wife, Mary Marston, Olive Snell, and Elizabeth Gookin.

The pastors of the church from its organization to the present, with the year of the appointment of each and not the time of service, are as follows: 1809, George Pickering; 1810, John Brodhead; 1811, Orlando Hinds; 1812, Lewis Bates; 1813, Jonathan Cheney; 1814, William Hinman; 1815, Martin Ruter; 1816, Caleb Dustin; 1817, A. Metcalf (a local preacher who supplied the church until 1835); 1825, Russell H. Spaulding; 1836, J. H. Patterson; 1837, Samuel Prescott; 1838, E. D. Trickey; 1840, A. H. Worthing; 1841, John Smith; 1842, Matthew Newhall; 1844, Richard Newhall; 1845, James Adams; 1847, Franklin Farber; 1849, Benjamin R. Hoyt; 1851, Silas Green; 1853, James Thurston; 1855, Lorenzo Draper; 1856, N. L. Chase; 1858, J. W. Guernsey; 1860, Charles Young; 1861, Eleazer Smith; 1863, George S. Barnes; 1865, Nelson Green; 1867, A. C. Manson; 1869, George N. Bryant; 1871, Fred. D. Chandler; 1873, Hugh Montgomery; 1875, N. M. D. Granger; 1877, George W. Ruland; 1880, W. E. Bennett; 1882, W. H. Jones.

The first church edifice was erected in 1815. Previous to this worship was held in private houses. In November, 1836, the church edifice was destroyed by fire. The present edifice was erected the following year, 1837. It was quite thoroughly remodeled in 1872. The present membership of the church is one hundred and twenty-five.

Junkins Council, American Legion of Honor, No. 45,<sup>2</sup> was organized Oct. 31, 1879, with nineteen charter members, viz.: William O. Junkins, Frank P. Philbrick, Fred. S. Smith, E. Bloomer Jewell, Herbert C. Taft, George L. Wentworth, Daniel Keeffe, Nathaniel P. Ordway, George G. White, Joseph S. Holmes, Crosby R. Edmunds, Nathaniel Wiggin, John W. Hobbs, Carmi A. Norton, Nathaniel M. Gookin, Levi Barker. Present membership, forty-two.

The council was named in honor of its organizer, Dr. William O. Junkins. Average age of members, thirty-five years. Number of assessments the past year, ten. Amount of one assessment, $44.37. Amount of insurance represented, $75,500. Average of one assessment, $1.95. Amount paid the benefit fund, $606.71.

Past Commanders, William O. Junkins, Herbert C. Taft, N. P. Ordway, C. M. de Rochemont.

No deaths have occurred in the council at Greenland since its organization. Its members are insured from $500 to $5000, and pay according to age and amount insured. The cost for insuring a member during the last year has been $5.20 on $1000 at thirty-four years of age.

The officers for 1882 are as follows: C., William S. Bennett; V. C., Jeremiah C. Shaw; Orator, Nathaniel M. Gookin; Sec., Frank P. Philbrick; Col., Ernest Holmes; Treas., Nathaniel P. Ordway; Mod. Exam., William O. Junkins; Chap., Fredmah S. Smith; G., Mary J. de Rochemont; W., George C. White; S., Arthur H. Durgin.

Winnicot Lodge, No. 92, A. F. and A. M.,<sup>1</sup> was instituted May 16, 1877. Charter members were Herbert C. Taft, Edgar S. Taft, William O. Junkins, William H. L. Brackett, John H. Brackett, Nathaniel P. Ordway, Carmi A. Norton, Lorenzo D. Duntley, Frank M. Holmes.

The lodge is named after the river Winnicot, which flows through the town. Past Masters, Herbert C. Taft, Edgar S. Taft, William O. Junkins. Present membership, twenty-four. The lodge is not only free from debt, but has a fund invested. The lodge-room is small but well furnished. Junkins Council, A. L. H., hold their meetings in the Masonic Hall.

Brackett Academy<sup>2</sup> was incorporated by act of the Legislature of New Hampshire, A. D. 1824. Its title-name was derived from its principal benefactor, George Brackett, Esq., whose family were among the earliest settlers on that beautiful and fertile tract of land in the town of Greenland bordering the south-eastern shore of the Great Bay, and known in the vicinity as the "Bay-side."

The sum of two thousand dollars was granted by Mr. Brackett to the trustees named in the act of incorporation, for the purpose of founding a literary institution for the higher education of the youth of the community in which he and his ancestors lived. Additional funds to the amount of about two thousand dollars appear to have been contributed by others, citizens of the town and friends of popular education.

The first meeting of the board of trustees was holden Aug. 11, 1826. It consisted of Rev. Ephraim Abbot (afterwards principal), Rev. Huntington Porter, Nathan Parker, Stephen Pickering, and J. W. March. In the mean time, between the date of the act of incorporation and the first meeting, funds had been procured, material and labor contributed by the citizens, to erect quite an imposing edifice, according to the standard of architecture of those earlier days.

The preamble of the constitution drafted by the Rev. Ephraim Abbot, a learned and progressive Congregational minister of the town, is a model of excellent English, as well as a concise and expressive statement of the value and importance of a good education to every community. It reads as follows:

"A serious consideration of the great destiny of the Parent of the universe in the creation of man, and of the improvements in knowledge and virtue of which the human mind is capable, and a full conviction that youth is the important period, on the improvement or neglect of which depend consequences of the highest moment, both to individuals and to the community, have determined me to appropriate, in the following conveyance, a part of the substance wherewith God has blessed me to the purpose of laying the foundation of an Academy for the instruction of youth, not only in English and Latin grammar, arithmetic, and the sciences, but more especially to teach them the great end and real business of life."

The first principal was Rev. Ephraim Abbot, a Congregational clergyman, settled over the church at Greenland. It is recorded of him that he worked on the building, then being erected, with fore-plane and leveling-axe.

He was also the first president of the board of trustees. He resigned in 1829, both as principal and trustee. Rev. Huntington Porter was the second president of the board, from 1829 to 1840, and Joseph Hale second principal of the academy. The funds contributed being exhausted, as appears by the record in 1830-31, the building was subsequently leased, free of rent, to any competent teacher who applied to the trustees with testimonials as to his fitness. From 1840 to 1876 ex-Governor Ichabod Goodwin was the acting president of the board of trustees. He was succeeded in 1876 by Charles W. Pickering, of Greenland, who is now the acting president. For five years past the academy has been in operation under the instruction of a competent principal, but the old charter has been so far modified by the Legislature that the town has control under lease from the trustees of the academy building for all purposes, public and literary. This change was made in 1876, in order to induce the town to appropriate a liberal sum of money to remodel and re-furnish the building, which was accordingly done. The building now contains one of the most commodious and richly-furnished school-rooms in the State. It is supplied with a valuable library of books of reference in all departments of science and literature, together with a cabinet of minerals and natural history. The last graduating class numbered twelve. The course of study embraces Latin and French, sciences, and English literature.

Military Record.—Greenland during the late Rebellion furnished thirty-eight men for the service, and the bounties paid amounted to $24,184. The following is a list of their names, as far as we have been able to secure them:

The following died in the service:

John W. Pickering, Joseph Sanborn, Jacob Davis, Jeremiah Mahoney, Peter Brownman, John Froeland. There may have been others, but the records show no additional names.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CHARLES W. HATCH.

Charles W. Hatch was born in the town of Greenland, Oct. 24, 1820. At twenty-seven years of age he married, Feb. 6, 1848, Mary Christiner Hall, daughter of Rev. Ralph Hall, of Strafford. They had two daughters,—Marianna and Ruth Allen, who died in early life, greatly beloved by all. Mr. Hatch's life was passed in the town of Greenland, and by its uprightness and usefulness proved him to be a worthy and exemplary citizen. While it is not denied that, in common with all, he had his faults and failures, yet it is claimed that in him they were fewer in number and less glaring in character than in most men of his station in life. As a man, he was considerate and kind, truthful and honest. He acknowledged both in his acts and in his heart the great brotherhood of man, and whenever he found the impress of humanity he recognized the full, inalienable rights bestowed by God on all the race. The genuine essence of humanity was in his soul, and he was possessed of feelings that could be touched by others' woes, and would respond to their claims for sympathy and aid. Impiety and revenge had no home in his heart. With charity towards all and enmity towards none, he had no foe to whom he would intentionally do harm; but such were his generous impulses, such the moderation of his wrath, that if one must needs fall into the power of his enemy, he might well wish that enemy were he. Nothing of hauteur or self-importance tainted his life or marred his intercourse with his fellows, and he claimed only to be a man with men, yet in that consciousness of true manhood that scorned to be an underling. He claimed to be a man in that higher sense which spurned the duplicity and chicanery of the unprincipled, and sordidness and supineness of the pretentious and the selfish. He was a simple, honest brother in the great family circle of man. As a citizen his ideas were progressive and liberal rather than radical or prodigal. In both his judgment and action he was found on the right side, with opinions of his own, but ready to give place to the opinions of others if they gave promise of subserving the interests of a greater number. In matters of public improvement he occupied the golden mean, not bound by the chains of self-interest on the one hand, nor dazzled with visions of local superiority on the other. By his townsmen he was honored with all the preferment within the range of their suffrages, and acquitted himself honorably in them all; and the citizens of his district showed their appreciation of his merit by placing him in the Senate of the State.

In all these positions he never betrayed the trust reposed in him, nor performed an act which might cause a flush of shame upon the cheek of purest truth and honesty. In his departure the community lost a candid, upright citizen, and his native town a well-wisher to all its vital interests. As a friend, he was true, constant, and affectionate. He was not a demonstrative man, whose friendship is like the shallow noisy stream, but his friends always found the fountains of his love copiously but quietly flowing. His friendship was calm and deliberate, rather than spontaneous and gushing; so, while it burned not with so fierce a flame it excelled in continuance and equability. The siren song of fortune, which allures so many to wander from the scenes of childhood and the family haunts, had no power to fascinate him or cause him to break from the ties of kinship and friendship. He wished not that strangers should perform the last deeds of kindness for him or for his most cherished ones. He was not of that cast of mind that gained outside of his family circle very ardent attachments, but very general esteem and respect. His friendship was of that quiet, unobtrusive kind that must be sought after, rather than offer itself to every passer-by. Consequently it was in his own immediate circle of home influences and affections that he was to be seen to best advantage. As a son, he was respectful and dutiful; as a husband, forbearing, affectionate, and thoughtful; as a father, indulgent and mild, but faithful; as a brother, cordial, appreciative and kind; so that the loss sustained by his decease, while it is felt deeply in the town, and more deeply in the church of which he was a worthy member, falls most afflictively upon the dear ones who best know his worth. He joined the church in 1840, when about twenty years of age, and for thirty years cheerfully bore his share of the labors and anxieties of the church as well as of its financial burdens. In the counsels of the church he stood deservedly high for his good sense and sound judgment. He held and properly performed the duties of every office of the church below the ministry. He served, many years as superintendent of the Sunday-school and steward, both of which offices he held at the time of his decease. He had also served as class-leader and trustee.

SAMUEL A. HATCH.

Samuel A. Hatch, son of Samuel and Nancy (Wiggin) Hatch, was born in the town of Greenland, N. H., Sept. 1, 1826. The ancestors of the subject of our sketch came from England and settled somewhere in New England. One of his descendants was Samuel Hatch (grandfather of the above Samuel), who was a poor boy, and spent his youth with an uncle Knight, in Newington, N. H.; removed to Greenland in an early day, and kept what was familiarly known as "Hatch's Hotel." He died June 7, 1843, aged eighty-four years. His wife died Sept. 16, 1843, aged eighty-two. They had children, one of whom was Samuel, born about 1790, married Nancy Wiggin, and to them were born five children, viz.: Elizabeth, deceased; Charles W., deceased, whose portrait and biography may be seen in another part of this work; Sarah A., Samuel A., and Harriet J., all of whom were born in the town of Greenland. Mr. Hatch was a Democrat and Free-Soiler in politics. He held the office of selectman for several years, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died Dec. 1, 1851, aged sixty-one, and his wife died Jan. 17, 1867.

Samuel A. Hatch was educated in the common schools of his town. As his father was a farmer, he was reared in all the practical details of farm life, which he has successfully followed. In politics he is a Republican. He has held the more important offices of his town, in all of which he has proved himself both competent and worthy. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been twice married,—first to Lucy H., youngest daughter of Rev. John F. Adams, whose steel portrait and biography are in this work. They were married June 26, 1856, and to them were born four children, viz.: Ida M., John William, Charlotte A., and George A. Mrs. Hatch died June 6, 1875. She was an earnest worker and member of the Methodist Church, and a lady universally respected wherever known. Mr. Hatch married for his second wife, March 7, 1877, Mrs. Harriet B. Little, widow of Silas Little, of Newbury, Mass. She was a daughter of Nathan Molton, of Hampton Falls, N. H. She died Aug. 21, 1877.

JOHN L. BRACKETT.

The subject of this sketch was born in Greenland, N. H., April 19, 1811, and was the third and youngest son of Thomas Brackett, who was the son of George Brackett, the founder of Brackett Academy of Greenland.

Tilling the soil has been the occupation of the Bracketts for several generations, and by their industry and frugality have been always rated among the most important farmers of their native town, and have ever been ready to contribute to any worthy object that would promote the growth or prosperity of Greenland. John L. is the fourth John Brackett, and now owns the estate granted by the king to his forefathers, who have handed it down from generation to generation. He married Ellen A. Smith, daughter of S. P. Smith, of Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 13, 1836. Of this union there were born two children, a son and a daughter,—Anna D., who married Rev. J. W. Garland, of Canada, and Simeon S., who married Abby, daughter of Charles C. Barrell, of York, Me. He is an honored member of the Congregational Church, to which he is much attached. In politics he is Republican, but being of a retiring disposition has never sought or accepted office. Quiet and unassuming, he has always held the friendship and esteem of his neighbors, who love to speak of him, as well as his ancestors, in terms of praise. His grandfather died 1825, at the ripe age of eighty-eight years. His father died 1851, aged seventy-eight years.

REV. JOHN F. ADAMS.

Rev. John F. Adams, a son of John Adams, an officer in the Revolution, was born in Stratham, N. H., May 23, 1790. He joined the New England Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1812, which Conference at that time embraced all the Methodist Episcopal Churches of New England. His appointments for the first three years of his ministry were circuits in the back settlements of Maine, and were full of the peculiar hardships incident to the war with Great Britain then being waged.

His earliest preaching-places were chiefly in poor, dark houses and in barns. His salary for the first year was only thirty-two dollars, mostly in articles of clothing. Like the majority of the Methodist preachers of those days, he was furnished with saddle-bags, rode over his large circuits on horseback, and studied principally the Bible, Methodist hymn-book, and discipline. His saddle-bags were filled with books, which he would read when he could and then sell to the people.

His appointments were as follows: 1812, Durham Circuit, Maine; 1813, Livermore Circuit, Maine; 1814, Bethel Circuit, Maine; 1815, asked and obtained a location for two years; 1817, he again joined the traveling connection, and for two successive years was stationed at Salisbury, Mass.; 1819-20, Rochester, N. H.; 1821-22, Barre Circuit, Vermont; 1823-24, Lyndon Circuit, Vermont; 1825-26, Lynn Common, Mass.; 1827-30, presiding elder of the New Hampshire District; 1831, appointed to Great Falls; 1832, Lyndon, Vt.; 1833-34, St. Johnsbury Circuit, Vermont; 1835-38, solicitor of funds for Newbury, Vt., Conference Seminary; 1839, stationed at Bronfield Street, Boston; 1840-43, presiding elder of Dover District, New Hampshire Conference; 1844, stationed at Hampton, N. H.; 1845, Durham, N. H.; 1846, Auburn, N. H.

At the Conference of 1847 he asked for and was granted a superannuated relation, in which relation he continued until, at the ripe age of ninety-one years, he died at his home in Greenland, N. H., June 11, 1881.

He was twice married,—first to Mary Lane, Feb. 24, 1815, with whom he lived happily for fifty-one years, or until her death, March 1, 1866. Six children were born to them, of whom only two survived the father.

His second marriage, July 25, 1867, was to Sarah W., daughter of Capt. Charles and Elizabeth Treadwell, formerly of Portsmouth, a lady in every way worthy of the man, who made his home happy, and won the highest esteem of all his friends.

The entire life of Mr. Adams was quite eventful, and he has left on record many narrow escapes from death and severe injuries. He was an intimate friend of Bishop Hedding, and was four times elected a delegate of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

He was several times elected representative, first by his native town, and later from the town of Greenland, where he resided from 1852 until his death. After his retirement from the active work of the ministry he devoted much time to horticulture and agriculture, in which he took great delight, and from which he realized a reasonable pecuniary profit. As a preacher, Mr. Adams was pleasing and instructive, and although his educational advantages were meagre, he attained to high rank among his brethren in the ministry. One who knew him well says of him,—

“A strong vein of good sense was wont to pervade his pulpit ministrations. His voice, never boisterous or strained, was, however, invariably grateful and pleasant to the ear. His preaching was not the storm-wind, sweeping resistlessly athwart the landscape, nor was it the rushing of swollen floods, bearing everything away on their rapid tide; it was rather the gentle breeze, coming with its balmy influence to gladden and refresh us, or the calm waters flowing with gentle current through pleasant fields and sunny pasture-lands.”

REV. JOHN A. M. CHAPMAN, D.D.

Rev. John Alfred Metcalf Chapman, D.D., now (1882) pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, was born in Greenland, N. H., Aug. 21, 1829. His parents were Nathaniel and Martha Meserve Chapman. His brothers and sisters are Sarah J., wife of Nathan Berry; Joseph W.; Nathaniel; Martha J., wife of Eli Waterhouse; and Lucy R. Dr. Chapman is a lineal descendant of Edward Chapman, who came from England in 1642, and settled in Ipswich, Mass., the line of descent being through Samuel, Samuel, Pennel, Samuel, and Nathaniel.

He inherited a good constitution, which was developed and hardened by the stern duties and plain living of a farmer's boy. He planted the first seeds of a liberal education in the common school, and at the academy at Hampton, N. H., and being an apt, as well as a diligent, scholar, he was always ranked among the foremost in his class. In these early days he acquired a taste for reading by appropriating the contents of every readable book in the neighborhood, thus laying the foundation for the broad culture of his ripened manhood.

Ambitious to acquire an education, with the spirit of a true New England boy, he determined to help himself by helping others, and in the autumn of his sixteenth year tramped over into the State of Maine and secured a school, which he taught successfully, returning home in the spring with his winter's wages, and the more valuable acquisition, increased self-reliance. From this time to the close of his college course he supported himself by working on the farm and teaching school, thus securing his education by his unaided exertions.

In August, 1844, at the age of fifteen, he made a public profession of religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church the same month in his native town. Impressed from the first with the conviction that he was called to the gospel ministry, he still shrunk from the vast responsibility which it involved, and sought for some legitimate avenue of escape. In the spring of 1848 he went to Ohio for the purpose of teaching and studying, with the intention of making the law his life profession. He looked for employment as a teacher in the vicinity of Cleveland, Akron, and Worcester, but not succeeding he journeyed towards Cincinnati. To add to his discouragement he found much sickness in the State, and that dreaded scourge, the Asiatic cholera, had made its appearance. Change of climate, diet, anxiety and disappointment, with loss of sleep, resulted in serious illness, and as he left the cars at Cincinnati and stepped upon the platform, valise in hand, the shadow of death seemed settling upon him. Alone in a strange city, almost penniless, too sick to think or act intelligently, he was thus accosted by a gentleman in friendly tones: “Young man, you seem to be a stranger here, and you are sick. Come with me, or you will be in the Potter's Field in twenty-four hours, and your mother will never know what has become of you.” He complied instinctively, and, stepping into a carriage, was driven to the Galt House, amid the rumbling of the death-carts as they bore their dead burdens away to burial. His benefactor was Dr. Shepherd, a bachelor physician of considerable wealth and distinction, who took him to his own room, tended him through a severe attack of cholera with a physician's skill and the tenderness of a father, and kept him for three weeks without charge, and then assisted him in securing a school near Xenia.

This good Samaritan “builid better than he knew.” He could not explain what impelled him to go to the depot that morning and fix his attention upon the young stranger, nor did he live long enough to know that his kindly act had saved to the Christian pulpit one of its brightest lights.

Our young hero remained but a few weeks in Ohio, as his broken health compelled him to return to his native hills. As his health returned he began anew his struggle for an education, which was finally completed at Waterville College, Maine, and at the Biblical Institute in Concord, N. H. He left the latter institution in the fall of 1853, having been licensed to preach in the previous year. He joined the Providence Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1854, at its session in Edgartown, Mass., and received his first appointment at North Fair Haven in the same State.

On the 15th of October, 1853, he was united in marriage to Miss Emma J. G. Knox, daughter of Nehemiah Knox, Esq., of Pembroke, N. H., and sister of Col. Thomas W. Knox, the distinguished writer and traveler. In his marriage he found indeed a helpmeet for him through all the vicissitudes of his itinerant life. Their surviving children are Mattie Ethol, born March 28, 1866, and Alfred Knight, born June 5, 1868.

After remaining a year at his first appointment he was stationed at Millville, Mass., and the year following at New Bedford, where he preached with great success for two years. He then spent a year in Taunton, and the two following in Providence, R. I., and was then stationed at Fall River, Mass., where for two years he labored with extraordinary success, great numbers being converted and added to the church. After these exhausting labors he took a much needed rest of a few months, but a vacancy occurring in Hanover Street Church, Boston, he was induced to become the pastor of that church, and the same year, 1863, was transferred to the New England Conference. The following spring he was regularly appointed there, where he remained two years longer, the constitutional term having been extended to three years by the General Conference of 1864. In 1866 he was appointed to the pastorate of the Tremont Street Church, and after three years of successful labor went to Grace Church, in Temple Street, and in 1871 was transferred to the New York East Conference and stationed at St. John's Church, Brooklyn. His eight years in Boston had been a period of toil and triumph seldom paralleled. His power in the pulpit and on the platform was universally acknowledged. His services were sought for in every direction. The war of the Rebellion enlisted all his power of sympathy and eloquence. He was chaplain of the State Legislature, and his physical endurance was the only limit of his victorious zeal.

It was with great reluctance that his Boston friends gave him up to New York. But his health seemed to demand the change, and, after three years of successful work in St. John's Church, he was stationed at St. Paul's Church, New York, only to be returned, at their earnest request, when his term closed at the latter place. But before the second year of his second term at St. John's had closed he was obliged to ask for a period of rest, which his intense study and unremitting toil demanded. He retired to his old home in Greenland, N. H., and in 1879 traveled extensively in Europe with his family. He returned with invigorated health, and in 1880, at the unanimous invitation of the church, was reappointed to the pastorate of St. Paul's, New York. Dr. Chapman received the degree of Master of Arts from his Alma Mater, and in 187- the Wesleyan University conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Dr. Chapman's success has not been the result of a happy accident nor the wise triumph of genius, but is the legitimate fruit of a laudable ambition and a "genius for hard work." When his education was "finished," as common parlance has it, he regarded himself as having merely finished his preparatory studies, and has ever since been a student. Believing that the profession of the Christian ministry is the very highest to which man can be called, his motto has ever been "This one thing I do," and no temptation to secular occupations and no call to honorable official place have ever moved him from his purpose to give himself entirely to the regular work of the ministry. With superior natural endowments of mind and body, and a heart alive to the needs of humanity, such ambition, devotion, and industry could have but one result. He has never had to seek for place, but is frequently embarrassed by the numerous calls from the best churches in the denomination to which he belongs. His sermons are models,—brief and logical, concise almost to severity, and yet ornate and eloquent,—so that the artist is gratified and the stern logician seldom finds a word that he can call superfluous. With such rare qualifications for the work of his profession, it is not surprising that men well qualified to judge should pronounce him, for all in all, without a superior in the pulpit of Methodism, or even of Protestantism.

REV. EDWIN HOLT.

Rev. Edwin Holt was born in New London, Conn., April 17, 1805. When he was about three years old his parents removed to New York City, where he spent his early years, and entered Columbia College in October, 1818, at the age of thirteen and a half; he graduated in August, 1821, and in September of the same year commenced the study of medicine with Dr. A. H. Stevens, one of the most eminent physicians of the city, and had nearly completed his medical course when he experienced religion, and joined Dr. Spring's church in April, 1823, and was soon induced, by the advice of his pastor and his own convictions of duty, to turn his attention to theology. He entered Auburn Theological Seminary in 1824, and was licensed to preach in October, 1826, and was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Westfield, N. J., in November, 1827.

On the 24th of July, 1828, he was married to Miss Emily Titcomb, of Newburyport, Mass.

After several other changes he accepted the call of the North Congregational Church, in Portsmouth, N. H., where he labored for nearly seven years, and was blessed of God with one of the most powerful revivals of religion that church has ever enjoyed. After a time it became his duty to accept the call of the West Presbyterian Church, in Carmine Street, New York, where, after four years of faithful labor, his health again failed, and he was dismissed from his people April 2, 1846. He was unable to preach for a year or two, but such was his love for his chosen work that as soon as he found his voice returning he accepted the call of the Congregational Church in Greenland; but soon—his health becoming feeble, and finding the climate too severe—leaving Greenland, he settled over the Second Church, in Madison, Ind. Here he soon found himself unable to continue his labors in the ministry, and, leaving his people, removed to Evansville, Ind., where he was ever ready to assist his brethren as his strength admitted.

His last sermon was preached in the old church at Evansville, with more than his usual impressive earnestness. Immediately after service he was seized with a severe attack of Asiatic cholera, which finally terminated in his old complaint of the throat, and after an illness of two weeks, which he bore with great patience, he expired on Sabbath morning, July 2, 1854, in his forty-ninth year.

In the words of one of his devoted friends, "he brought to his profession a well-trained intellect and a devoted heart." His ministry extended over a period of twenty-eight years. The great head of the church owned his labors in several powerful revivals of religion.

His remains rest in the cemetery of Evansville, beside those of his oldest son, whom he laid in the grave with the deepest sorrow just eight months before his own death.

GEORGE WEEKS.

George Weeks was born and lived at the Bay Side, Greenland, N. H., where his brother, J. Clement Weeks, resides. He married Caroline, daughter of Maj. John Avery, of Greenland, Dec. 24, 1856. He died Aug. 2, 1869.

He was a good citizen, holding various offices in the town, representing it in the Legislature at the time of the Rebellion, where, by his influence and vote, he did all in his power to sustain the government. Few men have passed through life with a higher character for usefulness, integrity, and fidelity in all the relations of public and private life.

Weeks is a Devonshire name. It has been variously written, as Wick, Wyke, Week, Weekes, and Weeks, etc. An old record says, "The Weeks family in England did not spring from obscurity," and describes their coat of arms.

Leonard Weeks, the emigrant, came to Portsmouth previous to 1669, located in Greenland, and married Mary, daughter of Deacon Samuel Haines, of Portsmouth. He was an influential man, holding positions of responsibility and trust in the colony. He is spoken of as "one of the men who stood rather for Massachusetts than the crown, as in Mass. Col. Rec. iv., pt. 2, 279." His name became a prominent one in all public movements of the time. A descendant of one of his daughters was Capt. Tobias Lear, who resided in Gen. Washington's family as his private secretary, married a niece of his, and after the general's death was appointed ambassador to some part of Europe. A descendant of another daughter was Governor John Langdon, of Portsmouth.

Joshua Weeks, a descendant of the emigrant, was the first of the name to make his residence at that part of the town called the Bay Side. To this branch of the family Mr. George Weeks, the subject of this sketch, belonged. He married in 1690 Comfort Hubbard, of Boston, whose father was the ancestor of Thomas Hubbard, treasurer of Harvard College twenty-one years, until his death, when he was succeeded in that office by John Hancock. His portrait by Copley hangs on the walls there, with the portraits of other benefactors of the college.

Maj. William Weeks, son of Joshua, married Eleanor March, daughter of Dr. Clement March, Sr., of Greenland, March 19, 1748. He was one of the leading men in town, a large landholder at the Bay Side, and did much to advance the best interests of the town. In his family Dr. Belknap, the historian, for a time resided as private instructor to his children. Afterwards the daughters were sent to school in Boston. Two sons graduated at Harvard and one of his sons was in the Revolutionary army, holding the rank of major.

John, a son of Maj. William, and father of George Weeks, also lived at the Bay Side. He was deacon of the Congregational Church many years. Benevolence, soundness of judgment and intellect, a strong interest in the cause of education, and of whatever would promote the best interests of the town were among his many good traits. He married Mary Coffin, a descendant of the emigrant, Tristram Coffin, and also of Hon. Nath. Weare, father of Meshech Weare, who, with the title of "President," was the first Governor of the State, holding various important offices in the public service forty-five years.

GEORGE W. DAVIS.

George W. Davis was born in Greenland, N. H., Sept. 17, 1806, and is the son of Amos Davis, who was born in Amesbury, Mass., Dec. 4, 1761, and settled in Stratham, N. H., when a young man. He was for nine years in the employ of Judge Wingate of that place, but from there moved to Greenland, N. H., where he died in 1848, at the age of eighty-seven years. He was a farmer and married Olive Veasey, daughter of Simon Veasey, of Stratham, N. H. To them were born nine children, two dying in childhood, and seven grew to man and womanhood, but at this time (1882) George W. is the only surviving member of this large family.

He served his town as selectman, and in many ways became identified with the growth and prosperity of Greenland. He was an attendant upon and a supporter of the Methodist Church, of which his wife was a member. She died in 1848, aged eighty-one years. This family was of English origin, their ancestors being among the early settlers of Massachusetts.

George W. Davis received a common-school and academic education, and taught school several terms. His life's work has been that of a farmer, and for a number of years he has spent his winters in Florida, where he is engaged in the cultivation of an orange grove. In politics he is a Republican, and as such represented his town in the Legislature of 1857. He has been several times selectman, and held various other offices of trust in the interests of Greenland.

He married, June 26, 1850, Catherine M., daughter of William and Julia (English) Henry, of Balston, N. Y. Mrs. Davis was born April 23, 1814. Of this union there was born but one child, a son, George H. Davis, who died in 1865, aged nine years.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis are attendants upon the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Davis is a member, and he a liberal supporter.

WILLIAM WEEKS.

Leonard Weeks came from England in company with two brothers previous to 1660. One of the brothers settled at Falmouth, now Portland, Me., one in Rhode Island, and Leonard in Greenland, N. H., where the brick house now stands. He had four sons—John, Samuel, Jonathan, and Joshua—and three daughters,—Mary, Margaret, and Sarah. Joshua settled at Bay Side. His son William (1st) was born in 1729, and married Eleanor Marsh in 1748, by whom he had nine sons and seven daughters.

William (2d) was born April 23, 1755. He was twice married,—first to Nabby Rogers, Oct. 5, 1780, and to them were born two children,—William and George. His wife died Dec. 8, 1783, aged twenty-three years. His second wife was Sarah Cotton Weeks, by whom he had twelve children.

William (3d), son of William (2d) and Nabby (Rogers) Weeks, was born Aug. 21, 1781. He married, May 26, 1835, Louisa Porter, daughter of Rev. Huntington Porter, of Rye, N. H. They had five children,—Ann Louisa, born March 22, 1836; Ellen Maria, born Jan. 23, 1838; Sarah Porter, born Oct. 27, 1839; George William, born Sept. 8, 1841, married

Sarah L. Robinson, of Exeter, May 26, 1878. They had a son born May 1, 1880, named William.

John P. Weeks, born Jan. 24, 1844, married Ellen R. Hatch, April 26, 1870. She died Jan. 3, 1874. He married for his second wife Laura A. Foss, Sept. 26, 1876. They have two children,—Mabel Porter, born July 11, 1878, and Carrie F., born March 26, 1881.

William Weeks was a representative man of Greenland, filling all the more important offices of his town. He and his estimable wife were worthy members of the Congregational Church in Greenland for many years, and he was one of its most active deacons. He was closely identified with the Sunday-school interest of his church, and for many years was an acceptable superintendent of the same. He died Feb. 20, 1864. From the pen of a personal friend we quote the following:

"Seldom has the Christian profession shone with a brighter and more steady light than it did in the life of this excellent man. Humble and retiring, he was nevertheless efficient and influential. He was distinguished by a sincerity and kindness of heart which won for him the respect and love of all who knew him. His temper and daily walk betokened 'an Israelite indeed in whom is no guile.' The church of which he was long a good and faithful officer and servant, and the community in whose welfare he felt a tender interest, will ever cherish his memory as that of one whose life was eminently valuable and useful, and whose example will still remain for their imitation and encouragement.

CAPT. G. T. BALL.<sup>1</sup>

George T. Ball was of English ancestry, three brothers having come, from England, and settled, one in New Hampshire, one in Virginia, and one in the far West. He is the son of Samuel S. and Mary (Muelmore) Ball, born in the seaport town of Portsmouth, N. H., Oct. 27, 1809. He is one of a family of eight children, the names of several of whom are not unknown in some of our larger cities.

Mr. Ball's early educational advantages were somewhat limited, yet possessing a penetrating mind he acquired much information by reading and observation. He commenced his struggle with Dame Fortune at a very early age. When about fifteen or sixteen years of age the intense desire that he had always felt for a life on the "rolling deep" overcame all obstacles, and he shipped in the capacity of a cabin-boy under Capt. Howe. After one or two voyages he commenced the study of navigation with Mr. William Harris, of his native place. Later he sailed as the employé of Messrs. Cones & Goodwin, in the South American trade; of Messrs. Rice, Sise & Sims, in the European trade; Mr. Eben Wheelwright, in trade with St. Domingo, and others. Mr. Ball followed the sea for about twenty years, during ten of which he stood in the position of captain. At no time in his sea-life did he suffer from ill health or shipwreck, although several times he was fortunate enough to be able to effectively assist others in the latter plight. In April, 1844, the Philadelphia and Liverpool packet, "William and James Brown," became crushed in the ice off the coast of Newfoundland and sank, carrying down thirty-seven persons; with much exertion the remaining twenty-six were saved from an icy grave. Capt. Ball cherishes with much care the beautiful souvenir (engraved with the date, latitude, and longitude of the disaster) presented him by the rescued passengers. When about thirty-seven years of age he retired from the sea and purchased a farm, containing about one hundred acres, in the town of Greenland. Twenty years later he retired from active life and settled where he now resides, at Greenland Parade. Capt. Ball has been twice married, his first wife being Laurinda Mason, daughter of Samuel Mason, of Rye. They had four children, of whom the only surviving one, Arthur P., now resides in California. His second wife was Sarah A. Furber, of Newington, still living.

Capt. and Mrs. Ball are worthy members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and able supporters of the cause. Capt. Ball is a Republican in politics, but has preferred to accept no positions of trust. Much of his knowledge of life was obtained from contact with foreign nations, having crossed the ocean many times, and visited many places of interest on our own continent and mingled with many races; he has acquired a good understanding of various dialects of foreign countries. He is now (1882) seventy-two years of age, and still active, hale, and hearty.

NATHAN BERRY.

Nathan Berry is of English origin, and a lineal descendant of Thomas Berry, who was born Feb. 27, 1731, and Abigail Berry, born Nov. 23, 1734. They settled on the farm now (1882) owned by Nathan Berry, in the town of Greenland, N. H. There were ten children born to them. Isaiah Berry was their fourth son, born April 6, 1761, and married Bethsheba Shaw, and to them were born ten children, the fourth being Levi, born March 26, 1792, and married Patience Marsden, of Portsmouth, about 1815. To them were born four children, to wit: Abigail, Martha, Olive, and Francis A. (deceased).

Isaiah Berry was a representative to the State Legislature, and was a representative man of his day, taking a lively interest in matters of state as well as in the educational and industrial affairs of his native town.

Levi Berry was a captain in the State militia and served in the war of 1812. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was thoroughly identified with the growth and prosperity of Greenland. They journeyed down the path of life together, living to a good old age. He died in December, 1867, aged seventy-four years and eight months; she lived to the age of sixty-eight years.

Nathan Berry was born in Greenland, N. H., Oct. 23, 1818; received a common-school and academic education; was elected by the Democratic party a member of the State Legislature in 1875-76. He is a successful farmer, and one of the largest milk producers in the town. He married Sallie J., daughter of Nathaniel Chapman, of Greenland, March 4, 1841, who was born Dec. 27, 1818, and to them was born one son, George W. Berry, May 8, 1844, who married Annie M. L. S. De Rochemont, and to them were born five children,—Alice M., Martha C., Albert L., Edward A., and Percy D.

Nathaniel Chapman was a descendant of one Edward Chapman, of Ipswich, Mass., who settled at Windsor, Vt., as early as 1662. Nathaniel was a farmer and had seven children,—Sally J., Joseph W., Nathaniel, Martha J., Lucy R., and John A. M., D.D., who became an eminent divine, and did efficient work in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is now (1882) pastor of a church in New York City.

George W., another son, died at fourteen years of age.

Nathaniel Chapman died in 1867, aged seventy-three years, ten months, and twenty-eight days. His wife, Martha Meserve, died about 1871, aged seventy-nine years.

EDWIN A. PICKERING.

Nicholas Pickering, son of Thomas Pickering, was born in the town of Newington, N. H. He was twice married, his second wife being a Langdon, of Portsmouth, and a relative of Governor Langdon. By his second wife he had four children, one of whom was Thomas, who married Martha P., daughter of Joshua Brackett, of Greenland, and to them were born six children, viz.: Edwin A., James A., Joshua B., Frank T., Martha P., deceased, and John B., all born in Newington, where their father always resided, and was a farmer by occupation. He died at forty-five years in 1825, and his wife at seventy-six nearly in 1856.

Edwin A. was born Oct. 21, 1808, and at two years of age commenced living with his maternal grandparents, Joshua Pickering and wife, in Greenland, on the same farm where he now resides, and where he has continued to live, except some three years spent with his mother at home in Newington, succeeding the death of his father. His brother, John B., commenced living with his maternal grandparents, also, at six months of age, and he has continued to reside there ever since. Their present farm was given to them by their grandparents, said farm never having been out of the Brackett name until the present time, and the present owners are relatives. Edwin A. received a common-school and academic education, and taught several terms. His business through a long and successful life has been that of a farmer. In politics he is a Democrat, as his fathers were for generations. He has been selectman of Greenland and member of the Legislature in 1871-72, serving on several important committees. Since 1871 he has been magistrate of his town, and was at one time captain of the State militia. He is unmarried. James A. married Susan Mathos, and has three children, viz.: Frederick, Alice B., and Sarah. Joshua B. married Jane Pickering, and has two children, Deborah B. and Joshua B., Jr. Frank T. married Sophia De Witt, and has four children, viz.: Thomas, James B., Mary S., and Adelia. John B. was born March 7, 1821; married May 28, 1868, Sarah J. Hodgdon, and has two children, viz.: Edwin C. and John B.

RUFUS W. WEEKS.

The ancestors of Rufus W. Weeks on the paternal side came from England about the year 1620 and settled in Greenland, then a part of Portsmouth. His grandfather, Dr. Ichabod Weeks, born 1738, died 1807, was a practicing physician for many years in Hampton, N. H., and in Greenland. His first wife was Sarah C. Cotton, daughter of Rev. Ward Cotton, of Hampton. His second wife was Comfort Johnson, of Greenland. His third wife was Abigail March, daughter of Col. Clement March, of Greenland. By his third wife he left one son and two daughters. His son, Stephen March Weeks, married Mary Shackford Gookin, and were the parents of six children, viz.: Charles M., Stephen M., Caroline, Nathaniel Gookin, Ichabod, and Rufus W.

The subject of this biography is descended on the maternal side from Daniel Gookin, who was born in England, 1612. At the age of nine he accompanied his father, a colonist, to Virginia, and in 1664 removed to Cambridge, Mass. In 1655 he was made superintendent of Indian affairs, a position which he maintained during life. In military rank he rose to major-general. He wrote "Historical Collections of the Indians in Massachusetts down to 1674." He died in 1687. His son, Rev. Daniel Gookin, minister of the church in Cambridge, Mass., married Hannah Savage. Their son, Rev. Nathaniel Gookin, of Hampton, N. H., graduated at Harvard, 1703; ordained pastor of the church in Hampton, 1710; died 1734. His wife was Dorothy Cotton, great-granddaughter of Rev. John Cotton, who was born in 1585, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1612 vicar of St. Botolph's Church, in Boston, England, where he remained twenty years. Came to America in 1633. There he became pastor of the First Church. Their son was Rev. Nathaniel Gookin, of North Hampton, N. H., born in 1713, graduated at Harvard in 1731, ordained pastor in 1739, died in 1766; his ministry continued nearly twenty-seven years. He married Ann Fitch. Their son was Nathaniel Gookin, of Portsmouth, who married Mary Shackford. Their daughter, Mary Shackford Gookin, was the mother of the subject of this biography, who, in 1861, married E. Jenette Belknap, daughter of William Belknap, of Lisbon, N. H. They have four sons, viz., Belknap, Goldwin Ichabod, Arthur Hale, and Rufus W., Jr. He has held the various town offices, and represented the town in the Legislature.

CHAPTER XLIII.

GOSPORT.

The town of Gosport is one of the cluster of islands known as the "Isles of Shoals," lying in the Atlantic Ocean, about twelve miles off the coast of Portsmouth, and with the exception of Appledore Island are within the jurisdiction of the State of Maine. Appledore lies within the boundaries of New Hampshire, and forms the town of Gosport, Rockingham Co.

From a very early period in the history of this section of country these islands have been known as quite famous fishing-grounds, and were settled at an early date. In 1728 the inhabitants paid sixteen pounds as their proportion of the province tax of one thousand pounds.

The Pioneer Preacher.—As early as 1650, Rev. John Brock held religious services on this island. The following story is related of him by Mather: "Mr. Brock brought the people into an agreement that, exclusive of the Lord's day, they would spend one day every month together in the worship of our Lord Jesus Christ. On a certain day, which by their agreement belonged unto the exercises of religion, the fishermen came to Mr. Brock and asked him if they might put by their meeting and go a-fishing, because they had lost many days by reason of foul weather. He, seeing that without his consent they resolved upon doing what they had asked of him, replied, 'If you will go away, I say unto you, catch fish if you can. But as for you that will tarry and worship the Lord Jesus Christ this day, I will pray unto him for you, that you may take fish till you are weary.' Thirty men went away from the meeting and five tarried. The thirty which went away, with all their skill, could catch but four fishes; the five who tarried went forth afterwards, and they took five hundred. The fishermen after this readily attended whatever meetings Mr. Brock appointed them."

Appledore and Star Islands are famous summer resorts, and not often is it the fortune of the summer tourist to drift into pleasanter waters than those that break upon the Isles of Shoals. Here are located the Appledore and Oceanic Hotels, both owned by Laighton Brothers & Co.

The islands are nine in number,—Appledore, Haley's or Smutty Nose, Duck, Malaga, Cedar, Star,

Reufus W. Weeks

Londoner's, Seavey's, and White Island, on which stands the light-house. Haley's Island has the safest harbor at the Shoals, and is the principal fishing port, many quintals of fish being cured there annually. During Mr. Haley's life a rope-walk was in existence upon this low-lying rock, and in it were made fishing lines and cordage. A wind-mill also turned its sails to the breeze, and a bakery furnished bread to all the islands. Of all these things no trace remains, but the handful of fishermen who inhabit the place keep up a brisk business while the season lasts, and the flitting back and forth of graceful fishing crafts makes glad the eyes of the artist and the lover of beauty.

Appledore had at one time a population of six hundred souls, it being one of the first points settled in New England. Traces of an ancient town are yet to be found upon its southern portion,—a ruined cellar here, a garden inclosure there, a half obliterated turfy burial-ground,—unmistakable evidence of lives which have passed away. Some of the Englishmen who made the first settlement christened it "Appledore," after a village in Devon-shire, and the old name yet clings to the island.

Star Island held for many years the little village of Gosport safe above the tide. That quaint and most original and peculiar little town is now a thing of the past; hardly a trace of it is to be seen upon the island except the historic church.

HAMPSTEAD.

Geographical—Topographical—Petition for a Parish—Names of Early Settlers—Petitions—The First Settlements—Miscellaneous—Congregational Church—Military Record.

THE town of Hampstead lies in the southwestern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Sandown and Danville, on the east by Kingston and Plaistow, on the south by Atkinson, and on the west by Derry.

This town lies partly on the ridge of land between the Merrimac and Piscataqua Rivers. The soil is generally fertile.

Petition for a Parish.—The first measures taken for the formation of Hampstead as a parish was a petition presented to the Governor and Council, Jan. 1, 1743-44, signed by fifty-four inhabitants, as follows:

To his Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Governor and Commander in Chief In and Over his Majesties Province of New Hampshire in New England, And to the Honourable His Majesties Council and house of Representatives in General Court Assembled, Jan. 1, 1743-4.

The Humble petition of the subscribers Inhabitants in the Province aforesd, Sheweth,

That the greater part of your Petitioners are Inhabitants of the Land in Controversie between Kingstown and Haverhill—That one part of us hold our Land of Haverhill and the other of Kingstown. That However the Right of the soil may be disputed, we are without Dispute of New Hampshire Government. That your Petitioners are at such a Distance from every Parish Meeting house as Renders our attending publick Worship upon the Sabbath in any of our Neighbouring Congregations Exceeding Difficult, and to many of us quite Impracticable. That we are therefore obliged to procure some person to preach to us or else to live without the Benefit of that Ordinance. May it therefore please your Excellency and Honours to take our case under your Wise consideration, and either Vest us with Parish Powers with the following bounds, viz. Beginning at a Crooked red oak tree standing in London Derry line from thence runing Eastwardly three miles on Bryants line Thence Northwardly to a bridge called Capt Ingalls Bridge thence westerly so as to comprehend the Dwelling house of one Jacob Wells from thence to the Corner Beach tree on Chester line and from thence upon London Derry line to the bounds first mentioned, Or If this may not at present be granted at least to pass an Act to Impower us for a time to assess and Levie Taxes upon the inhabitants within the bounds above sd for the support of the Gospel and other Incident Charges and your Petitioners as in Duty bound shall every pray.

Petition of Richard Hazzen, &c., about support of Rev. James Cushing.

To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Governour & Commander in Chief in and over his Majestys Province of New Hampshire in New England & to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> his Majesties Council & House of Representatives in Generall Court assembled at Portsmouth for s<sup>d</sup> Province, May 1748. Humbly Shews.

Richard Hazzen for himself and in behalfe of the Inhabitants of that Part of Haverhill district commonly called Timberlane,

That the inhabitants of said Timberlane have for the greatest part of fifteen years past at a very great cost and charge hired a minister to preach amongst them and at the same time been Excused from paying any thing towards the support of the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr James Cushing.

That the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr Cushings Hearers (Exclusive of said Timberlane) live about two thirds of them on the North Side of the Boundary Line and in this Province and the other third on y<sup>e</sup> other side on which side lyes also the greatest part of his Personage or Glebe Land.

That at a meeting of the District in November last Pursuant to the selectmens warrant it was agreed & Voted that the inhabitants living on this side of y<sup>e</sup> line (meaning those who lived out of Timberlane limits) should pay the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr Cushing Two Hundred pounds for his support this year, Old Tenor on consideration of the Depreciating of the money & which would have been a small matter more than what they paid last year.

That some time afterwards at a Legall meeting of the afore s<sup>d</sup> Districts. The inhabitants of Timberlane were by vote set off from Mr Cushings Parish and near the same lines which a committee Sent by your Excellency & the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Council thought proper to be done as appears by their Report.

That notwithstanding the meaning & intent of the afore s<sup>d</sup> Vote respecting Mr Cushings Support by which the Inhabitants of Timberlane ought to have been excused from paying any thing thereto & after they were set off from Mr Cushings Parish as much as the District had a power to do, The assessors have rated us to Mr Cushing and thereby made their own Taxes much less than last year, & taken away our money from us which we should have had to pay our own minister.

That we have been thereby necessitated to make a Rate amongst Our selves to pay our minister but as we had no legall power to do it some refuse to pay, so that we are now in a very deplorable Condition unless your Excellency & Honours will Interpose on our behalfe.

We therefore Humbly & Earnestly request your Excellency & Honours to compassionate our circumstances & give Such Orders that we may be excused from paying to y<sup>e</sup> Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. James Cushing & at the same time that he may not be cheated and defrauded of his honest due, & that we may be Impowered to raise a Tax amongst our Selves to pay our own minister or that you will afford us Such other Relief as to your Excellency & Honours shall think best for us.

And for your Excellency & Honours your Humble petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray &c

Petition of Edward Flint and others to be annexed to Hampstead.

To his Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Governour & Commander in Chief in & over his Majesties Province of New Hampshire in New England & to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> the Council of said Province, Humbly Shews,

The petition of Edward Flynt, Samuel Stevens & others the Subscribers that your petitioners Liveing in that part of Haverhill District commonly called Timberlane have always together with the other Inhabitants cheerfully paid their Taxes & when a petition was prefer<sup>d</sup> by the said Inhabitants to your Excellency & Honours to be incorporated into a Township, your petitioners signed y<sup>e</sup> said petition & hoped that when the Township was incorporated that not only your petitioners Houses but their estates also would have been taken within y<sup>e</sup> charter being much more for the Interests of your petitioners than to be put any where Else.

But so it is may it please your Excellency & Honours that by the Charter of Hampstead lately Granted, your petitioners Estates are so Divided that near one half lye within the Town of Hampstead & the other half is left out notwithstanding these lands have for many years past been fence<sup>d</sup> in and improved & being so Divided & Split by the said Lines it is to the very great damage of your petitioners.

We therefore earnestly request your Excellency & Honours to annex our whole lands to Hampstead according to our first petition.

And for your Excellency & Honours your Humble petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

Hampstead, February 14th, 1749.

The first settlement by white men in Hampstead was made prior to the year 1728 by a Mr. Ford, who is supposed to have been the pioneer. In 1728 a Mr. Emerson settled in the south part of the town. Prior to the division line between the States of Massachusetts and New Hampshire this territory was embraced in Amesbury and Haverhill, Mass. It was granted Jan. 19, 1749, and named after the pleasant village of Hampstead, in England, a short distance north of London. It included within its grant a portion of Kingston, which created a long dispute between the two towns, which was finally settled by Hampstead paying one thousand pounds, old tenor.

The town is well supplied with railway facilities, the Worcester and Nashua road passing the western part.

The resources of the town are principally from the productions of the soil and mechanical labor.

There is a flourishing high school in Hampstead, founded by the liberality of B. D. Emerson.

The present physicians are J. C. Eastman and Benjamin Woodman. Postmasters, Hampstead, Thomas Foote; West Hampstead, J. D. Ordway; East Hampstead, H. S. Martin.

The Congregational Church<sup>1</sup> was organized June 3, 1752, with sixty-eight members. The first pastor was Rev. Henry True, who served (till the day of his death) thirty years. The church was then without a pastor ten years. The second pastor was Rev. John Kelly, who served forty-four years; third pastor, Rev. J. M. C. Barkley, served twenty years; fourth pastor, Rev. Theodore C. Pratt, served ten years; fifth pastor, Rev. Ebenezer W. Bullard, served five years; sixth and present pastor, Rev. Albert Watson, was installed March 23, 1876.

The church first worshiped in an edifice built by the town over one hundred years ago. In 1837 the society built a new church and dissolved partnership with the State. The old church was then remodeled and made available for town purposes, and ever since has been used as a town hall, and with a little repairing seems good for fifty or one hundred years more. The church built in 1837 was found to be in an unsafe condition after being used a little over twenty years. In the year 1860 it was taken down, and the following year the present commodious edifice was built upon the same site. The church is in a prosperous condition, and has a membership of one hundred and fifty-six.

Military Record, 1861-65.—The following is a list of soldiers, residents of the town, who served during the late Rebellion, and was contributed to this work by Mr. Aaron H. Davis:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

DR. J. C. EASTMAN.

J. C. Eastman, M.D., son of Dr. Joseph and Miriam (Calef) Eastman, was born in London, N. H., April 22, 1811. His grandfather, Timothy Eastman, was a farmer in East Kingston, born, however, in Raymond, and was descended from an old English family of high repute. He married Abigail, daughter of Col. Gale, of East Kingston. The mother of Dr. Eastman was a daughter of Joseph and Miriam (Bartlett) Calef, and granddaughter of Hon. Josiah Bartlett, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and President and Governor of New Hampshire for three years, who brought her up from fifteen months of age as his own child (her mother dying at that time). The doctor unites, therefore, in his veins the blood of two of the most distinguished families of the United States. (For full history of Bartlett family, see Judge Bartlett's genealogy of the same.)

Joseph Eastman was a graduate of Dartmouth; was born in East Kingston, and died in Meredith, N. H., at the early age of thirty-three years, having already acquired celebrity in his profession. Two of his children are now living.—Dr. J. C. Eastman and Susan (Mrs. Lorenzo Bachelieri), of Derry. Another child, Joseph, became a physician, spent some years in California, and retiring to New Hampshire died in Hampstead.

Dr. J. C. Eastman was educated at Kingston, Atkinson, and Saco (Me.) Academies, taught district school eight years, and was graduated from Dartmouth with honors in 1837. For a short time he practiced as a physician at Newmarket, and about 1839 located at Hampstead, N. H., where he has ever since been, except during his military life, in active practice. He has been a member of New Hampshire State Medical Society over forty years, and its president in 1869, at which time the photograph from which the accompanying engraving was made was taken. He is a member of Rockingham Medical Society, and was twice its president. He is also an honored member of the American Medical Association, attending its meetings at Washington, Baltimore, New York, and other leading cities, and frequently as delegate from New Hampshire.

During the Centennial Exposition (1876) there was an International Medical Congress held at Philadelphia. It consisted of seven hundred different members, representing sixteen nationalities, and each State of the United States had therein the same representation as in the House of Representatives. Dr. Eastman was one of the three who had the honor to represent the State of New Hampshire. His favorite branches of practice are surgery (both major and minor operations) and obstetrics. He has witnessed the births of over forty-five hundred children who have lived and of which he has kept a record.

Aug. 20, 1861, he was appointed by Governor Berry surgeon of the Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, with rank as major. He accompanied the regiment to Washington, Annapolis, Port Royal, Hilton Head, St. Augustine, and Jacksonville, and did active and laborious service for two years, when on account of illness in his family he resigned his commission and returned to Hampstead. Shortly afterwards he was offered the colonelcy of a new regiment, which position he declined, although a military career would have been not only in accord with his tastes, but also one in which he would doubtless have made a brilliant record. As evidences of this we would say that when a mere lad he was chosen by the sagacious Hon. Levi Woodbury as a cadet at West Point Military Academy, but though longing to go, through the pleadings of a widowed mother he refused the appointment so congenial to his nature. We would also mention that in old militia times he was promoted through every grade from private to colonel. In politics he has been ever unwaveringly a Democrat. His ancestors have held in every generation high official positions in the different political parties. He also has been highly honored with political trusts. In 1845 was county treasurer. Renominated in 1847, he declined the nomination (equivalent to an election). He represented Hampstead in the Legislature in 1848, 1849, and 1850 (five sessions). Served his district as State senator in 1853-54; elected by twenty-three votes over the joint Whig and Free-Soil vote united on Thomas J. Melvin; was renominated and elected as senator in 1854 over Melvin (Whig) and Hoyt (Free-Soiler) by thirty-eight majority. (In 1855, Melvin was placed in candidacy by the Know-Nothings against Hon. N. Colby, Democrat, and elected by nearly one thousand majority.)

While he was in the Senate the Know-Nothings, concluding to nominate a Democrat for Governor, sent a committee to Dr. Eastman urging him to join their party and accept the nomination, and they would make him Governor. This proffered bribe he indignantly refused. They nominated Ralph Metcalf, and elected him by several thousand majority. This illustrates the strength of political principle possessed by Dr. Eastman.

Had the Democratic party since that time been the majority party in this State, it is highly probable that ere this he would have filled the gubernatorial chair.

J. C. Eastman

Isaac Taylor

He has been for years one of the standard-bearers of the Democratic party, and its candidate for counselor at two elections. He was a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Gen. McClellan for the Presidency, and also to the convention that nominated for President that distinguished and honored statesman ex-Governor Horatio Seymour, of New York.

He married (first) Ann A., daughter of Capt. Leonard Wilson (a pensioner of 1812) and Elizabeth Gregg, his wife. She was daughter of Nathaniel Warner, Esq. of Derry. Their children are Mary Bartlett (Mrs. Lavosier Hill, of New York City) and Ella. Second, Mary Helen, daughter of Dr. Jerome Harris and Mary Tewksbury, his wife, of Amesbury, Mass. Their children are Josiah Bartlett and Susie A. The doctor has held various official positions, which the limits of this sketch forbid our mentioning. We must not forget, however, to say that he was largely interested in the building of the Rochester and Nashua Railroad, and one of its directors from organization. President Kinnicutt once remarked that in all probability the road would never have been built without the influence and direct help of Dr. Eastman, Col. Waters, and one or two others, and that its present route through Hampton was dictated entirely by the doctor. Social and genial in his manners, the doctor fills the highest positions gracefully and well, and has a large circle of friends. His medical services are highly appreciated by his people, their only complaint being that the multiplicity of his public calls and official duties interfered too much with his attendance on them. He has one of the most attractive homes in the county in which to spend the closing years of a busy life, and with a cheerful philosophy and with malice to none he is passing on to the "twilight."

ISAAC TEWKSBURY.

Isaac Tewksbury, the oldest medical practitioner in Lawrence, Mass., and one of the venerables of the faculty in Essex County, was born in West Newbury, Mass., Jan. 13, 1795. Availing himself of the educational advantages of his time, he became early qualified for a teacher, and a portion of his early life was spent in that employment, teaching schools in West Newbury, East Haverhill, and in that neighborhood. One of his pupils who has since become distinguished was John G. Whittier, then a lad of eight years. This youth then began to attract attention, and on a certain occasion his teacher, Mr. Tewksbury, remarked of him that "if he lived to be thirty years of age he would occupy a prominent position in the literary world." This remark was based upon his knowledge of anatomy and physiology, phrenology not then having become recognized as a suggestive science. Still aiming in the direction of the medical profession, Dr. Tewksbury attended anatomical lectures in Gloucester, Maine, and other places in connection with his study of medical works. In 1817 he commenced the practice of his profession in Hampton, N. H., where he remained for thirty years. On May 2, 1824, a diploma was conferred upon him by the faculty of Dartmouth College, signed by Reuben D. Muzzey, president; Josiah Crosby, Thomas Chadbourne, censors; Peter Bartlett, secretary. In the same year he joined the New Hampshire Medical Society, and for several years held the offices of counselor and censor. In the second year of his practice he entirely discarded the use of mercury, and entered his protest against it as a deleterious medicine, in consequence of which he encountered fierce opposition from prominent and popular physicians, but he firmly faced their hostility and established a high reputation as a medical practitioner. In 1847 he removed to Lawrence, Mass., where he still resides, and, in the eighty-seventh year of his age, is now actively in practice, retaining all his faculties of body and mind to a remarkable degree; and at this advanced age illustrates the advantage of a temperate and well-ordered life by the exhibition of a "sound mind in a sound body." The early companion of his days has long since passed to her repose, and whose place is now filled by another, to share the joys and sorrows which attend his days' decline. A somewhat numerous family of children are living, some of whom are residents of New England, and others are in distant portions of the country. In his religious opinions he is evangelical, and in religious and political opinions conservative.

CHAPTER XLV.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlement—The "Band House"—Names of Early Settlers—Incidents.

HAMPTON is located on the coast, and is bounded as follows: on the north by North Hampton, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the south and west by Hampton Falls. The surface is level and the soil fertile.

The settlement of this ancient town dates back to 1638, when the Rev. Stephen Batchelor<sup>2</sup> and a company of adventurous pioneers located upon its fertile lands.

Johnson, in his "Wonder-Working Providence,"<sup>3</sup> which was the first history of New England ever published, in referring to the settlement here, says:

"Much about this time (1638) began the town of Hampton, in the county of Norfolk, to have the foundation-stone laid, situate near the sea coast not far from the famous River of Merrimack, the great store of salt marsh did entice the people to set down their habitation there, for as yet Cowes and Cattell of their kinde were not come to the great downfall in their price, of which they have about 450 head; and for the form of the Town it is like a Flower de Luce, two streets of houses wheeling off from the main body thereof; the land is fertile, but filled with swamps and some store of rocks, the people are about 60 Families, being gathered together in Church covenant, they called to office the reverend, grave, and gracious Mr. Doulton, having also for some little space of time the more ancient Mr. Batchelder to preach unto them also; here take a short remembrance for the other:

"Doulton doth teach perspicuously and sound,
With wholesome truths of Christ thy flock doth feed.
Thy honor with thy labor doth abound,
Age crowns thy head, in righteousness proceed
To battle downe, root up, and quite destroy
All Hereses and Errors that draw back
Unto perdition, and Christ's flocks annoy;
To warre for him these weapons dost not lack.
Long days to see that long'd for day to come
Of Abel's fall and Israel's quiet peace;
Thou yet must live of days so great a sum,
To see this work let not thy warfare cease."

This was the "one and twentieth town" settled within the bounds of the ancient county of Norfolk.

In 1636 Massachusetts, with a view of securing the valuable meadows in this vicinity, empowered Mr. Drummond and John Spencer, of Newbury, to build a "bound house" here at the expense of the colony. It was built in 1638, the architect being Nicholas Easton, who subsequently removed to Rhode Island and erected the first English house in Newport. This "bound house" was the first structure erected by whites within the bounds of the ancient town.

The following additional settlers are found in 1643: James Davis, Jr., William Marston, Jr., William and Stephen Sanborn, A. Chase, Edward Tucke, Francis Swaine, Thomas Linnet, John Sanborn, William Huntington, and Richard Knight.

The town of Hampton was incorporated May 22, 1639, by a "court holden at Boston." It had previously been called Wauwauwauet, but the court ordered that it "shall be called Hampton."

Early Settlers.—Henry Ambrose was granted lands in 1640. He assisted in building the first pond in the town. It stood on the meeting-house green.

Francis Austin was one of the earliest proprietors of Hampton. He was here in 1741. He had two children, Isabella and Jemima. Isabella married Philip Towle, and was charged with being a witch. George Aborne was here prior to 1650. The name was sometimes spelled Elborne, or Elbourne. Rev. Stephen Batchiler. (See sketch elsewhere.)

Jasper Blake was here in 1650, when he and his wife had seats assigned to them in the meeting-house. He died in 1673, leaving a widow, Deborah. She died in 1678, and among the articles of her estate which were appraised were "a pike well headed, 5 shillings; a sword, 5s.; and a gun barrel, 5s."

Nathaniel Boulter was here in 1644. It is related of him that "he was a quarrelsome, litigious fellow, always in the law, and very unpopular." What doubtless rendered him peculiarly odious to the inhabitants of Hampton was the fact of his taking an active part against them in the celebrated suits of Mason, which involved the title to the lands in New Hampshire. He died in 1693.

John Brown was one of the first company who settled here. He was here in 1640. He built the first "barque" was built in Hampton in 1641-42, at the river near Perkins Mill. He was a prominent man, became one of the largest land-owners in the town, was one of the selectmen in 1651 and 1656, and in 1663 was chosen "to see that the boys do not play in the gallery." He died in 1686.

John Cass came to Hampton, and married Martha, the daughter of Thomas Philbrick, before 1650. He died "suddenly in his bed," April 7, 1675. His estate, as appraised by Edward Gove and Joseph Dow, was valued at £940 11s. His property was of more value than that of any person who died in Hampton prior to 1680. The Hon. Lewis Cass was a direct descendant of the above.

Aquila Chase was here in 1640. He was born in 1618, and died in 1670. He was the ancestor of Hon. Dudley Chase, Bishop Chase, and of the Chase families of Portsmouth and New Castle.

Thomas Cass was one of the first settlers who came here the first summer. He died in 1652.

John Clifford and wife came to Hampton prior to 1650. He was a selectman in 1660, and a signer to Weare's petition to the King in 1683. He had three wives, and died in 1694.

Edward Colcord settled here prior to 1645. A son, Edward, was killed by the Indians in that part of North Hampton known as Pagetown. "Ould Edward

RESIDENCE OF LYDIA DEARBORN,

HAMPTON, N. H.

Colcord died in 1681." His wife and family having been abused by him, and fearful of their personal safety, had him confined in jail. He gave bonds to keep the peace, and was discharged. He and his wife Ann having complained of each other for fighting, were both bound over to keep the peace, April 22, 1686.

William Cole was one of the witnesses to Wheelwright's Indian deed, and was in Exeter in 1638. He came to Hampton soon after. He died in 1662, aged about eighty years. He was the husband of Eunice Cole, the reputed witch.<sup>1</sup>

Thomas Coleman was here prior to 1650.

Moses Cox was one of the earliest settlers. In 1657 he lost his wife and only son, John, by drowning. This event is thus related in the town records:

"20, 8, 1657. The sad Hand of God upon Eight persons going in a vessell by Sea from Hampton to Boston who were all swallowed up in the osian sone after they were out of the Harbor, the persons wear by name as followeth. Robert Nead, surgent, Willim Swaine, Manewell Hilyard, John Philbrick, and Ann Philbrick his wife and Sarah Philbrick the daughter, Alise the wife of Moses Corks, three sons, who were all Drowned this 20th of the 8 mo 1657." This was the most distressing event which occurred during the early settlement of the town.

John Cross was one of Bachiler's friends, who came here in the first company.

Philemon Dalton was one of the fifteen persons to whom Hampton was granted. He came here with his brother Timothy in 1638.

Rev. Timothy Dalton, a brother of the above, came here with Bachiler in 1638, Bachiler being the pastor, and Dalton the teacher, of the church.

James Davis, Sr., came in 1640, and "lived on the landing road."

James Davis, Jr., was also a pioneer.

Godfrey Dearborn came here from Exeter between the years 1645 and 1650. Maj.-Gen. Henry Dearborn was a descendant. He was a prominent man in the town, and was selectman, representative, etc.

William Fuller came in 1640. Liberty was given him "to come and sitt downe here as a Planter and Smith in case he bring a certificate of approbation from y<sup>e</sup> mag<sup>r</sup> or Elders." He was selectman and representative. He was one of the signers to Weare's petition. By his will he gave to the church at Hampton "my Porter Flagon."

John Garland came to Hampton before 1653. He died in 1671.

Sammel Getchell came from Exeter here prior to 1645.

Deacon William Godfrey was admitted a freeman in 1640.

Henry Green, Esq., came to Hampton before 1645, and was one of the most prominent men for many years. He was one of the assistant judges who tried the Rev. Mr. Moodye. He died in 1700.

Daniel Hendrick was one of the young men who came here the first summer.

Barnabas Horton was also one of the pioneers.

E. Hilliard was here before 1650.

Maurice Hobbs, one of the pioneers, left England in consequence of disappointed love. The course of true love failing to run smooth, he sailed for the Western world, and became an inhabitant of Hampton soon after 1640. He married Sarah, daughter of William Easton.

Lieut. William Howard was one of the earliest settlers, and one of the most prominent men during his residence in the town. He came in 1640. He was the first commander of the militia of Hampton, and was one of the leading business men, being chosen to nearly all the offices, both in church and town.

John Huggens came the first summer.

Christopher Hussey was a son-in-law of Rev. Mr. Bachiler, and came here with him. He was a prominent and influential citizen, and held various offices.

Edmund Johnson was one of the first company of settlers. In 1648 he is chosen to ring the bell, keep the meeting-house clean, and keep out the dogs for a year. His son Thomas was the first white child born in Hampton.

Thomas Jones was one of the first prospectors. He was not here after 1641.

John Legatt was an inhabitant in 1640. He was a schoolmaster.<sup>2</sup>

Thomas Marston was among the married men who came to Hampton the first summer of its settlement. He was a surveyor.

William Marston was also an early settler. He remained here until about 1651, when he removed to North Hampton.

Joseph Merry came to Hampton prior to 1653, and was a carpenter.

Jeffrey Mingay was among the first company of settlers. He is said to have been a very active and useful man, both in church and town affairs.

Robert Page came to Hampton in the second summer of its settlement. He was selectman, representative, and deacon. "He was one of the most enterprising and useful men of his day, so far as his want of knowledge sufficient to write his name would permit."

Abraham Perkins was among the first settlers. He is described as being superior in point of education to the most of his contemporaries, writing a beautiful hand, and was often employed as an appraiser of estates, etc. He died in 1683.

Isaac Perkins was one of the first settlers. The Perkinses of Seabrooke are his descendants.

James Philbrick was here prior to 1650. He was a mariner, and was drowned in Hampton River in 1674.

John Philbrick came during the second summer of the settlement. He was the first of the name in Hampton.

Thomas Philbrick came here in 1650 or 1651, and is supposed to be the ancestor of the Philbricks in Hampton, Rye, Seabrooke, etc.

Robert Read, of Boston, is admitted as an inhabitant into the town to follow his trade of shoemaking." (Town records, 1657.) He was drowned in 1657.

John Redman was an early settler. In 1684 he was chosen to keep the boys from playing in the gallery. He was an aid to Mason and Cranfield in their controversy with the people.

Edward Rishworth came here in about 1650. He was a son-in-law of Wheelwright, and a leading man while here. He removed to Kittery in 1652.

Henry Roby came to Hampton in 1653. He was a leading spirit, and was one of the justices of the Court of Sessions before whom Mr. Moody had his trial in 1684. He was selectman in 1656, 1660, 1665, and 1681. He died in 1688. His descendants reside in this vicinity and in Maine. It is believed that Col. Frederick Robie, the present Governor of Maine, is a descendant.

Lieut. John Sanborn, with his brothers Stephen and William, came to Hampton in 1649. His mother was a daughter of the Rev. Stephen Bachiler. Lieut. Sanborn was an active, influential citizen, and was chosen to various positions of trust and responsibility. He was one of the most strenuous opponents of the Masonian claim and of Cranfield's administration. He was a signer to Weare's petition to the king in 1683. In October, 1683, Robert Mason, Sherlock, the marshal, and James Leach came to Sanborn's house in order to give Mason house possession, when Sanborn not opening the door, Leach by the marshal's order broke it open, and gave Mason possession. Mr. Sherlock took Sanborn prisoner, when Mason openly told the people "that is what you shall all come to."

In 1683, Cranfield brought an action against Sanborn for saying, "I question whether ever the King knew of his, the said Edward Cranfield's, commission or patent." His four sons—Richard, Josiah, John, and Joseph—were signers to Weare's petition.

Stephen Sanborn was a brother of John and William, and came to Hampton with them.

William Sanborn, brother of the above named, was also an active citizen.

Robert Shaw came to Hampton between 1646 and 1649. He was a representative in 1651-53.

DOCUMENTARY HISTORY—WITCHCRAFT.

Quakers—Fine for Non-attendance at Town-Meeting—The First Mill—The Meeting-House—Wolves—Profane Swearing—Watch-House—Purity of the Ballot—"Hansoming" the Church—Fast Driving Forbidden—Forts—Garrisons—Ring the Bell—The Causeway—Witchcraft—"Goodie Cole"—Persecution of the Quakers.

AMONG the first votes passed by the good people of Hampton was one imposing a fine for non-attendance at town-meeting, as follows:

"Twelve pence fine imposed on all who neglect to attend the meetings of the Freemen after one-half hour of the time appointed, having had a sufficient warning. Aug. 30, 1639."

In the following month William Sanborn was chosen bell-ringer.

Dec. 27, 1639, it was voted that "every master of a family provide a Ladder (before the last of May next) whereby he may reach to the top of his House, or they shall forfeit 4 pence a piece." The constable ordered "to collect it or pay it himself."

The First Mill.—April 6, 1640, the town ordered that "writings be drawn between the town and Richard Knight concerning his building a mill near the landing place."

At the same meeting a vote was passed to build a "Meeting-House 40 feet long, 22 Feet wide, & 13 Feet high between joyns. A place to be fixed for a Bell now given by the Rev. Pastor, Mr. Batchelder." The expense of this meeting-house to be defrayed by voluntary contributions.

Ten shillings voted to be given to those who kill a wolf.

In 1647 mention is made of a mill which Timothy Dalton and William Howard undertook to build.

In 1648 a grant of twenty-five acres was made to Abraham Perkins and Henry Green in consideration of their building a mill.

In 1697, Philip Towle fined one shilling for profane swearing by Henry Dow, justice of the peace.

In 1687, "it was ordered by vote that the selectmen shall take care to build a convenient watch-house according to law, and to sett it where the onld watch-house stood, and to provide Powder, bullets, mach-flints, or what els the Law requires for a Perm stock for the soldiers, and to make a rate for the same upon the inhabitants not exceeding £10."

The constable ordered to keep the youth from playing on Sabbath days.

Attention to the "purity of the ballot-box" was early given. In 1700, "Ten shillings' Fine imposed on persons voting who are not qualified, and all who do not withdraw, when the vote is disputed, from among the voters, the same penalty."

"Hansoming" the Church.—Feb. 15, 1704, the town voted "that the present Selectmen take care that all the clay walls in the Meeting House that are not ceiled shall be smoothed over with clay and washed with White Lime and made hansom."

March 1, 1714, a vote was passed imposing a fine of ten shillings on those who vote in a meeting of the Commons without a right.

In 1726, Deborah Brown was given notice by the selectmen to remove from town, otherwise to give security; if not, they will prosecute her "according to Law."

In 1661 a penalty was imposed on any one "who shall ride or lead a Horse into the meeting house."

Forts.—May 17, 1692, "It was voted that liberty is given to so many as are willing to remove the Fortification from about the Meeting House and to sett it between the Minister's House, the Prison, and the Meeting House in some convenient place, that there may be liberty for any concerned in it to build Houses in it, according to custom in other Forts," "It was voted that there shall be a House builded in said Fort, at the Town's charge, of 14 feet wide and 16 feet long, and finished forthwith for the use of it; it shall be improved for a Scout House, or the Watch House removed and made habitable."

Garrisons.—The following is an interesting document concerning garrisons:

HAMPTON, 11 Oct. 1703.

"I do hereby Direct that you forthwith order a convenient Number of Garrisons for the Town of Hampton, particularly one in the body of the Town, Near the Church, to be of large Contents, where the women and children may repair in Case of Danger, that your soldiers may the better defend the place, and that you command all the soldiers of your Towns to attend thereof till they be finished. Given under my hand the day and year above written.

"J. DUDLEY."

Ring the Bell.—In 1650 a vote passed to have the bell rung every evening at nine o'clock throughout the year except Sunday, when it was to be rung at eight.

The Causeway.—The Hampton Causeway Turnpike Corporation, incorporated in 1808, distance one and three-quarters miles, cost $14,173.66; discontinued in 1826.

Hampton Proprietary School, now called Hampton Academy, was incorporated June 16, 1810.

Witchcraft.—Emice Cole, widow of William Cole, was a fruitful source of vexation to the good people of Hampton for a long series of years. Hated and despised for her ugly and malicious disposition, she was also feared by many on account of her supposed alliance with the devil, who had given her power to inflict whatever punishment or injury she chose upon all who had the daring in any way to offend her. But notwithstanding her reputation of being a witch, it did not prevent the young people of that day from playing upon her many a trick, which the fact of her living solitary and alone afforded them a good opportunity. The story goes that Peter Johnson, who was a carpenter, was a ringleader among her tormenters. At one time he was framing the second meeting-house, when attempting to hew off a chip from a stick of timber, while she was standing by waiting to pick it up for her fire, he struck blow after blow without producing any apparent impression upon the stubborn wood. This caused her to laugh at him, and taunt him with his great skill as a carpenter, which so irritated him that he threw his axe directly at her. It, however, passed her, and stuck in the ground, with the handle upwards. He caught hold of the handle with the intention of taking it up, but in vain. At length after repeated unavailing efforts, he requested her to give him his axe again, and told her that he was very sorry for what he had done. She immediately went and pulled the axe out with the greatest ease.

It is also related that at one time some of the more daring of the young people looked into her windows one evening, when they saw her very busily engaged in turning a bowl with something in it, apparently in the shape of a boat. At last she turned it over, and exclaimed, "There, the devil has got the imps!" That night news came that Peter Johnson, carpenter, and James Philbrick, mariner, were drowned at the same hour from a boat in the river, near the creek now known as Cole's Creek. The drowning of these men, who were much lamented, increased the fear and hatred of the old woman.

On the Rockingham County records is the following: "At a Quarter Court held at Hampton, in the Province of New Hampshire, 7 Sept. 1680, Maj. Richard Waldron Pres., Eunice Cole, of Hampton, by Authority, committed to prison on suspicion of being a witch, & upon examination of Testimonys the Court vehemently suspects her so to be, but not full proof is sentenced, & confined to Imprisonment, & to be kept in durance until this Court take further ord<sup>r</sup> with a lock to be kept on her legg. In meane while the Selectmen of Hampton to take care to provide for her as formerly that she may be retained.

"The testimony put on file."

She lived in a little hut in the rear of the academy, and upon her death the people dragged the body to a hole and covered it up with all speed, and then drove a stake through it with a horseshoe attached, to prevent her from again troubling the good people of Hampton.

The fear of her name would alarm the most courageous or subdue the worst temper from generation to generation.

Persecution of the Quakers.—The persecution of the Quakers in New England during the middle and latter part of the seventeenth century is too well known to be repeated here. This honored town did not escape the fanaticism of the day, as we have recorded evidence that "three vagabond Quakers, Anna Coleman, Mary Tompkins, and Abie Ambrose," were made fast to the "cart's tail" and whipped upon their naked backs through the town. This decree was ordered by Richard Waldron, dated "Dover, Dec. 22, 1662." It was sent to the various constables in the towns from Dover to Dedham, that those Quakers should be conveyed from constable to constable, receiving ten stripes in each town "till they are out of this jurisdiction." This order was only executed in Dover, Hampton, and Salisbury. In the latter town Walter Barefoot, under the pretence of delivering them to the constable of Newbury, secured them from further cruelty by sending them out of the province.

CHAPTER XLVII.

HAMPTON.—(Continued.)

First Vote concerning British Oppression—Tea Act Resolves—Provincial Congress—Guard—Committee of Safety—Soldiers' Bounties—List of Revolutionary Soldiers—Soldiers of the Rebellion.

THE first recorded action of the town of Hampton concerning the war of the Revolution was under date of Jan. 17, 1774, when a series of resolutions were passed called the "Tea Act Resolves." They stigmatized the tea tax as "unreasonable and unconstitutional," and, further, that "it must be evident to every one that is not lost to virtue nor devoid of common sense that if they are submitted to will be totally destructive to our natural and constitutional rights and liberties, and have a direct tendency to reduce the Americans to a state of actual slavery."

At this meeting the following committee of correspondence was chosen: Mr. Philip Towle, Capt. Josiah Moulton, Amos Coffin, Esq., Mr. William Lane, and Josiah Moulton (3d).

July 18, 1774, Col. Jonathan Moulton, Col. Christopher Toppan, Capt. Josiah Moulton, and Mr. Josiah Moulton (3d) were chosen delegates to the Provincial Congress to be holden at Exeter on the 21st inst. to chose delegates to the Continental Congress."

Aug. 7, 1775, it was "voted to set a guard of four men each night upon the Beach until the Fall of the year."

July 29, 1776, four pounds was voted to each man who should enlist, in addition to the bounty given by the colony.

List of Revolutionary Soldiers.—The following is a list of Revolutionary soldiers from this town:

"A roll of the company who enlisted under Capt. Henry Elkins and went to the assistance of the Massachusetts colony (the next day after the fight at Concord) as far as Ipswich; the following is a list:

Captain, Henry Elkins; Lieutenants, James Perkins and John Dearborn; Privates, Simon Sanborn,

CHAPTER XLVIII.

ECCLESIASTICAL—MISCELLANEOUS.

Congregational Church—Methodist Church—Baptist Church—Advent Church—Physicians—Hampton as a Summer Resort—Incorporation of Town—Original Territorial Limits—List of Representatives from 1639 to 1883—Town Clerks.

Congregational Church.—The Congregational Church of Hampton is the oldest existing church in the State, and was the seventeenth formed in the colony of Massachusetts. A church in Exeter was formed the same year, but it existed only a few years.

The organization of the church was co-existent with the settlement of the town. In fact, the pioneers were united in church covenant before coming to the new settlement.

The first pastor was Rev. Stephen Bachelor, then seventy-seven years of age, who had been a minister in England for many years. His descendants are numerous in this vicinity.

In the early days of the settlement the church worshipped in a log building which stood near the present academy. The first recorded action found concerning the erection of a framed church building was under date of April 6, 1849, when the town voted "to build a meeting-house 40 feet long, 22 Feet wide, and 13 Feet high 'between Joists.' A place to be fixed for a Bell now given by the Rev. Pastor Batchelder."

This primitive structure was built by voluntary contribution, and many years elapsed before it was completed. When it was first occupied as a house of worship is not known. The first churches were without pews.

The third meeting-house was erected in 1675, near the site of the old one. By an order of the town all the inhabitants of more than twenty years of age were required to assist in its raising. During Mr. Gookin's ministry, in 1719, the fourth church edifice was erected. It was first finished with one pew for the minister's family. Others were subsequently added. The fifth church building was erected in 1797.

Pastors.—As mentioned above, the first pastor was Rev. Stephen Bachelor, who remained until 1641. In 1639, Rev. Timothy Dalton became associated with Mr. Bachelor in the pastoral office, and upon the latter's dismissal in 1641, Mr. Dalton succeeded him and was sole pastor of the church about six years, when the celebrated Rev. John Wheelwright became his associate. He was subsequently dismissed, and Mr. Dalton again ministered alone to the little settlement. Mr. Dalton gave to the church and town of Hampton the property from which the ministerial funds of Hampton, Hampton Falls, and North Hampton were derived.

Mr. Dalton died in 1660, and he was succeeded as pastor by Rev. Seaborn Cotton, a son of John Cotton, the celebrated New England divine. He continued in the ministry until his death, in 1686. After the death of Mr. Cotton the church was destitute of a pastor about ten years. The next regular pastor was Rev. John Cotton, who was ordained Nov. 19, 1696, and continued in the ministry until his death, March 27, 1710. Rev. Nathaniel Gookin was the next pastor, from 1710 to 1734. The next pastor was Rev. Ward Cotton, from 1734 to 1765. He was followed, in 1766, by Rev. Ebenezer Thayer, who remained until his death, in 1792. Soon after the death of Mr. Thayer a division arose in the church, and a majority declared themselves Presbyterians, held the old church building, and called Rev. William Pidgin to the pastoral office, who accepted and was ordained Jan. 27, 1796, and remained until 1807. The minority built a church edifice, and called Rev. Joseph Appleton in 1797. In 1807, Mr. Appleton was elected president of Bowdoin College, and both churches were thus destitute of pastors. They were then reunited, the Presbyterian being merged in the Congregational, and Rev. Josiah Webster installed pastor July 8, 1808, and continued in that office until his death, in 1837. The pastors from that time to the present have been as follows: Erasmus D. Eldredge, 1838-49; Solomon D. Fay, 1849-55; John Colby, 1855-63; John W. Dodge, 1865-68; James McLean, 1870-72; F. D. Chandler, 1873-75; John S. Batchelder, 1875-78; William H. Cutler, 1878, present incumbent.

The present house of worship was erected in 1843, and dedicated in January of the following year.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—Methodism was introduced into the town of Hampton in the year 1835 by the Rev. James M. Fuller, at that time stationed at Lamprey River, Newmarket, who some time in December came to Hampton and preached one Saturday evening in the North school-house, and the Sunday following in the old meeting-house, at that time unoccupied. The Rev. Mr. Fuller was followed in two weeks by the Rev. James H. Patterson, then stationed at Newfield, Newmarket, after which there was no Methodist preaching in town until July, 1836, when the Rev. Mr. Fuller once more visited the place and spoke to the people about "the way of life and salvation." From July until November there was preaching regularly once in two weeks, the pulpit being supplied by ministers from the body known in Methodism as "local preachers." Such was the encouragement given to these regular services by the people of the town that the friends of Methodism decided in November to hold a "protracted meeting," as a result of which about twenty professed conversion and were gathered into a "class," which may be said to be the beginning of the Methodist Church in Hampton. The society had been worshipping during these months in the old meeting house above mentioned, a church formerly occupied by the Christian Society, but then owned by Messrs. Fogg and Lamprey. In the spring of 1837 the house was given to the Methodist Society for their use while they should occupy it as a place of worship, and after due repairs it was dedicated to the worship of God, May 23d, the Rev. Mr. Fuller preaching an appropriate sermon from Psalms xciii, 5: "Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forever."

The church and society being now quite well established it was thought best to move forward a little, and at the session of the New Hampshire Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met at Great Falls, July 4, 1837, Hampton was joined with the Seabrook Station, and received its first regularly appointed ministerial supply in the services of the Rev. E. D. Trickey and the Rev. John Brodhead, who were stationed on the circuit, but as the Rev. Mr. Brodhead confined his labors almost entirely to Hampton from "Conference" until his death, which occurred at his home in South Newmarket, April 7, 1838, he may be said to have been the first Methodist preacher stationed in Hampton. In 1838 Hampton was connected with Greenland, and the Rev. E. D. Trickey and William Padman were appointed to the circuit. The Rev. Mr. Padman, however, gave most of his services to the Hampton Church, and during the year there was a revival of religious interest and quite a number of additions were made to the church. In 1839 Hampton was joined with Rye, and the Rev. S. A. Cushing was appointed to the circuit, one to be supplied, and the Rev. A. M. Osgood was appointed by the presiding elder to assist Mr. Cushing on the circuit, and they labored alternately in each place from week to week until January, 1840, when the Rev. Mr. Cushing was released from the circuit, and Mr. Osgood directed to finish the year at Hampton, which he did, with some considerable success attending his labors.

Since 1840, Hampton has been an independent station, and has been served by the following pastors: 1840, A. M. Osgood; 1841, Abraham Folsom; 1842-43, H. N. Taplin; 1844, John F. Adams; 1845, J. M. Young; 1846, C. H. Chase; 1847-48, Henry Nutter; 1849, A. M. Osgood; 1850, Ira A. Sweatland; 1851, Matthew Newhall.

In 1852, Abel Heath was appointed to Hampton Station by the New Hampshire Conference, but being taken sick, and dying before he reached Hampton, the church was without a pastor until Matthew Newhall was appointed to the station to fill out the year. Since then the appointments have been: 1853, James M. Hartwell; 1854-55, John English; 1856-57, John W. Johnson; 1858-59, N. L. Chase; 1860, Joseph Hayes; 1861-62, F. K. Stratton; 1863, S. F. Whidden; 1864, E. Lewis; 1865, N. L. Chase; 1866, A. C. Coult; 1867-68, A. A. Cleveland; 1869-70, G. W. Ruland; 1871, S. J. Robinson; 1872-74, Elihu Scott; 1875-76, J. H. Knatt; 1877-78, J. P. Frye; 1879-80, A. B. Carter; 1881-82, J. F. Spalding.

In 1846, during the pastorate of the Rev. C. H. Chase, the society secured a parsonage for its preachers by buying and moving to an eligible location on the Portsmouth road a house standing on the line of the Eastern Railroad, then being built, and since that time the preachers stationed in Hampton have had a comfortable home for themselves and families.

In 1848, under the labors of the Rev. Henry Nutter, a building lot was secured at the corner of Ann's Lane, so called, and the Portsmouth road, and a neat, comfortable church erected, which was dedicated to the worship of God in November of the same year, the Rev. Benjamin R. Hoyt preaching the dedicatory sermon from Heb. xiii, 16: "But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." This church, which cost about twelve hundred dollars, served the society as a place of worship without material change until the fall of 1881, when, for the better accommodation of the wants of the society, it was moved to a more eligible location near the village on the Portsmouth road, and thoroughly remodeled and repaired at an expense of three thousand one hundred dollars. The house was rededicated to the worship of God Jan. 5, 1882, the Rev. Bradford K. Peirce, of Boston, preaching the sermon from Luke ii. 7: "Because there was no room for them in the inn."

At the close of the dedicatory service mentioned as having taken place in May, 1897, the Rev. Mr. Fuller called the people together and addressed them upon "The Importance of the Study of God's Word," and at the close of his remarks some twenty or more came forward and organized themselves into classes with Jonathan Towle as leader, and thus the Sunday-school work of the Methodist Church may be said to have commenced, although it was some three or four years before the school became well organized and established. From that small beginning the school has continued with good success until the present, when it has seventy-two members and an average attendance through the year of fifty.

In 1839, when the first record of official members is found, the officary of the church was as follows: Pastor, A. M. Osgood; Stewards, Ebenezer C. Fogg, Oliver Towle, Andrew S. Warner, Nathan Knowles, John Foy, Benjamin Ordion, Ebenezer W. Long; Class-Leaders, Oliver Towle, Samuel Fisk; Superintendent of Sunday-school, Samuel Fisk.

The present, 1882, officary is as follows: Pastor, J. F. Spalding; Stewards, Dearborn Blake, Elihu Scott, E. W. Godfrey, George W. Lane, E. Q. Knowls, E. R. Lamprey, Frank Laird, Emory Fogg, George R. Godfrey; Class-Leaders, S. W. Dow, D. A. Marston; Superintendent of Sunday-school, G. W. Lane.

The Baptist Church.—The Baptist Church was first organized in 1817, with the following members: Joshua Lane, Abraham Marston, Amos Towle, Jr., Samuel L. Brown, Samuel Nudd, Josiah Dearborn, Joseph Mace, Willard Emery, Jr., Abna Mace, Josiah Shaw, Simon Garland, Samuel Batchelder, Jonathan Philbrick, Abigail Mason, Abigail Lane, Betty Towle, Betty Marston, Elizabeth Nudd, Sarah B. Towle, Nancy Towle, Hannah Blak, Patty Mason, Ludin Shaw, Molly Brown, Sarah Emery, Irene Moss, and Betty Garland.

The deacons have been as follows: Amos Towle, Jr., Joshua Lane, Elvin Emery, David Garland, Jr., Charles M. Perkins, William Blake, and John A. Towle.

Clerks, Joshua Lane, Samuel Garland, Samuel Drake, and Daniel Moulton.

The first church building was given to the society, and fitted up with common board seats with no backs, and no arrangements for fire in the winter season for some time. A new edifice was erected in 1834, and raised up in 1878 and a vestry added. The society now has a good meeting-house and parsonage, which was erected in 1854, and also a fund of about eighteen hundred dollars, the interest of which is applied to the support of the ministry.

The following is a list of the pastors from Rev. Mr. Hareman to the present time: Revs. Elias Hutchins, 1838; P. S. Burbank, 1840; Wm. Johnson, 1845; P. S. Burbank, 1846; William P. Merrill, 1848; F. Moulton, 1851; Wm. Rogers, 1853; Wm. H. Waldron, 1856; Wm. C. Clark, 1857; De Witt C. Durgin, 1858; F. H. Lyford, 1870; G. J. Abbott, 1873; L. L. Harman, 1877; and F. P. Wormwood, 1881.

Second Advent Church.—The church edifice belonging to this society was erected in 1871, and the church was organized in 1877.

Schools.—In 1706 the town voted "that if the inhabitants on the South side of Taylor's river shall take care to have their children taught, they shall not be assessed to the schoolmaster or Town from yeare to yeare."

Sept. 22, 1712, it was "voted to build a school-house, 24 ft. by 20, on the land granted for that purpose by Dea. Dalton, to be finished by the last of April."

In 1737 it was "voted to build a school-house on the school-house acre in the room of the one which was burnt, of the same size, £25 to be paid for building said school-house."

Feb. 7, 1791, it was voted to build Centre and Bride Hill school-houses.

Hampton Academy was incorporated in 1810, and for a long series of years occupied a prominent place among the literary institutions of the State.

Physicians.—The following is a list of physicians who have practiced in Hampton: Richard Hooper, Clement Jackson, Edmund Toppen, Nathaniel Sargeant, Anthony Emery, John Weeks, John Wingate, Obed Sterne, Samuel Page, — French, Ebenezer Lawrence, John Newman, Benjamin Dole, Abraham Green, and others. The present physician is W. T. Merrill.

Summer Resort.—Hampton is famous as a summer resort, and its hotels are among the best on the coast. These are Boar's Head Hotel, S. H. Dumas, proprietor; Ocean House, Phillips, Yeaton & Co., proprietors; Hampton Beach Hotel, Leavitt Brothers, proprietors; Atlantic House; Granite House, A. J. Batchelder, proprietor; Lancey House, Dean & Whittier, proprietors; and the Union House, O. H. Whittier, proprietor. These are all at the beach except the latter, which is pleasantly located in Hampton village, a short distance from the Eastern Railroad station.

Hampton was incorporated May 22, 1639, and embraced, in addition to its present territory, the present towns of North Hampton, Hampton Falls, Seabrook, Kensington, and South Hampton, having an area of about forty-five thousand five hundred acres.

It was originally a portion of Massachusetts, and remained as such until 1680, when it was joined to New Hampshire.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN DEARBORN.

John Dearborn is a descendant of Godfrey Dearborn, who came from Exeter, England, with his son Henry, a man grown, and settled at Exeter, Rockingham Co., N. H., in 1639. Between 1645 and 1650 he moved to Hampton and settled on the farm of the late John Dearborn, and which has been in the family ever since. His tax in 1653 was 15s. 10d. He was one of the selectmen in 1655, 1663, and 1671. Sept. 21, 1664, he voted with the minority on the question of a division of the Commons, and entered his dissent against it. The vote was 13 for and 9 against. March 3, 1670, he had eighty acres granted him. The date of his death is not known by the writer. He was twice married. His first wife died between 1650 and 1662, when he married Dorothy Dalton, widow of Philemon Dalton. His children by his first marriage were Henry, Thomas, John, Sarah, and two other daughters, names not known. If Henry was a man grown, or even quite a boy when his father came from England, then it is more than probable that more of the above family were born in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Dearborn were members of the Congregationalist Church, and both died before 1696. Mr. Dearborn's posterity is very numerous in New Hampshire. Maj.-Gen. Henry Dearborn, Secretary of War under Jefferson, was one of his descendants.

Henry, eldest son of Godfrey Dearborn, born in Exeter, England, came to America with his parents, and probably settled with them at Exeter, N. H., and thence to Hampton. Nov. 10, 1665, he married Elizabeth Marrian. He was selectman in 1676-92. He was one of the signers to Weare's petition. March 3, 1670, he had a grant of eighty acres (No. 4). His children were John, Abigail, Samuel, Elizabeth, Sarah, Elizabeth (2), and Henry.

John Dearborn, son of Godfrey, born in 1642 in Exeter, N. H., married, Oct. 12, 1672, Mary, daughter of Thomas Ward. She died Dec. 14, 1725, aged seventy-three. Mr. Dearborn was selectman in 1694. His name is not found on Weare's petition, although he contributed £1 5s. towards defraying the expense of Mr. Weare in going to England. He died Nov. 14, 1713. His children were John, Thomas, and Mary.

Thomas Dearborn, son of Godfrey, had granted him eighty acres (No. 68), March 3, 1670; was one of the selectmen in 1675, 1678, 1693. Nov. 1, 1699, he was chosen deacon. He was one of the signers to Weare's petition. He was twice married, first to Hannah, daughter of Edward Colcord, Oct. 28, 1665. Of this union the following children were born: Samuel, Ebenezer, Thomas, and Jonathan. Deacon Dearborn married for his second wife Huldah, daughter of John Smith, Jan. 2, 1701.

John H. Hogg

Joseph Freese Dearborn, great-grandson of Godfrey Dearborn, was born on the old Dearborn homestead in Hampton, N. H., Oct. 6, 1740; married Sarah Sherborn, or Sherburne, March 20, 1755. She was born July 15, 1719. He died July 3, 1752, aged forty-two. One of his children was Josiah Dearborn, born Jan. 11, 1738, and died Sept. 15, 1814, aged seventy-seven. His wife was Sarah Freese, who was born Dec. 18, 1737, and died Sept. 7, 1828, aged ninety years and nine months. Their children were John, Joseph F., Josiah, Sarah, Samuel, Anna, Samuel (2), Molley, Freese, and Anna (2). All of whom were born between 1758 and 1780 on the old homestead.

Joseph Freese (2), son of Josiah Dearborn, was born June 11, 1761, and died Nov. 13, 1827. One of his children was Simon N., who married Hannah Towle, and had children,—(1) Sarah Ann, wife of David Marston, of Hampton; (2) John; (3) Simon; (4) Dolly (Mrs. Emery Batchelder, of Hampton Falls); (5) Lavina, who married Joseph Leavitt, of North Hampton; (6) Abigail, wife of Adna Lane, of Hampton. Mr. Dearborn was a farmer by occupation, and a Whig in politics.

John Dearborn, eldest son of Simon N. Dearborn, and the eighth in descent from Godfrey Dearborn, was born in Hampton, N. H., on the same farm where he always resided, and which has been handed down from generation to generation, Sept. 2, 1810. He died at his residence Nov. 14, 1880. He was one of Hampton's substantial men and farmers. He always was interested in the prosperity of his native town. He took a deep interest in the educational work of Hampton, and for many years was a trustee and treasurer of "Hampton Academy." Politically he was a Republican, and as such was selectman several years, and represented his town in the State Legislature two terms. Though not a member of the church, he and his wife were constant attendants upon and supporters of the Congregational Church of Hampton.

He married Lydia, daughter of Sandborn Batchelder and Mary Elkins, October, 1838. She is a descendant of the Rev. Stephen Batchelder, first minister of Hampton, and was born in Hampton, May 22, 1811. Their children are Orion M., born March 15, 1841, and Mary Anna, wife of Harry S. Clark, son of Hon. Daniel Clark, of Manchester, N. H. Mrs. Harry S. Clark has children,—Frank, Daniel, Harry (deceased), and Gracia Lydia.

Mr. John Dearborn was a man universally esteemed, of kind disposition, good judgment, and possessed that happy faculty of making many friends. He was emphatically an honest man. His widow still survives him and lives on the old homestead, a view of which may be seen in this work. A portion of this house was built by Godfrey Dearborn about 1645, and now is in a good state of preservation. Too much credit cannot be given to Mrs. John Dearborn, who in every way has been a worthy partner of her husband. To her more than to any other one is due the credit of the present fine condition of this home. She is a lady of great energy and force of character, and naturally of a lively disposition. She, too, enjoys the esteem of her neighbors, and views the past with no apprehension of the future.

A friend speaks of her as follows: "In regard to the preservation of the old Dearborn mansion much credit is due Mrs. Dearborn. At the time of her entering it as sole mistress she began at once to modernize it. Possessed of good taste, she selected colors that would harmonize, caused wood-work to be removed, painted, carpeted, in fact turned old into new; in this way it was kept free from mould and damp more or less found in the early homes of our ancestors. To-day it is a comfortable home, and should not fire or tempest destroy it, it bids fair to last another generation. She has passed through a severe sickness which but few could survive, and is still courageous at the advanced age of seventy, and evidently earnest to perform every duty. She is the last survivor of her father's family, her only brother having died March 24, 1882. She is the only occupant of the old home with the exception of one male servant. Her evenings are devoted to reading and writing; her only son being in Colorado engaged in mining, for him she has the tenderest affection which only death can sunder."

JOHN H. FOGG.

John H. Fogg is a lineal descendant of the seventh generation from Samuel Fogg, who settled in Hampton about 1652. Where Samuel came from, or when he came to America, the writer is not able to tell, but probably from England about the time above mentioned. His tax in 1653 was thirteen shillings one penny; the same year he built five rods of fence around the burial-ground. He was one of the selectmen in 1655 and 1663. In 1669 he had forty acres granted him in the New Plantation, situated in the east part of Hampton. In 1670 he and two others were chosen to appraise the goods which the constable took for rates by distress.

He was twice married; first, to Anne, daughter of Roger Shaw, Dec. 10, 1652. Their children were Samuel, Joseph, John, Daniel, and Mary. Mrs. Fogg died Oct. 10, 1663, and Mr. Fogg married, for his second wife, Mary, daughter of Robat (probably Robert) Page. Of this union the following children were born,—Seth, James, and Hannah. Mr. Fogg died Feb. 16, 1672, leaving a will dated Jan. 9, 1671, witnessed by Samuel Dalton, William and Francis Fuller, appraisers, Thomas Marston, and Henry Dow. The executors to his will were William Fuller, Nathaniel Batchelder, "loving brother Thomas Ward," and Samuel Dalton. By the terms of this will Samuel was to have two-thirds, and Daniel one-third, of the real estate, and were to learn trades.

James Fogg, son of Samuel Fogg, was born April 18, 1668, and died June 18, 1760. He married Mary ———, Jan. 9, 1695. She died Oct. 14, 1750, aged eighty years. Their children were Mary, James, John, Sarah, Enoch, and Hannah.

Samuel Fogg, the eldest son of Samuel and Anne (Shaw) Fogg, was born Dec. 25, 1653, and married, Oct. 19, 1676, Hannah Marston, daughter of William Marston, and granddaughter of Robert Page, who gave her five pounds in his will. Samuel Fogg was one of the signers of Weare's petition. His children were Samuel, Joseph, and probably Daniel.

Seth Fogg, the eldest son of Samuel Fogg by his second marriage, was born Nov. 28, 1666, and died Sept. 6, 1755. In 1704 he was one of the selectmen. His wife, Sarah ———, died April 10, 1756, aged eighty-eight years. Their children were Benoni, Hannah, Seth, Sarah, Esther, Samuel, Simon, Abner, Abigail, Daniel, Jeremiah, and Ebenezer.

Deacon John Fogg, a great-grandson of the first Samuel, and son of John, who was a son of James, was born Oct. 11, 1702, and died May 7, 1754. He had eleven children by his wife, Elizabeth Drake, of whom John Fogg was their only son. He was born in Hampton, N. H., married Abigail Blake, and had children,—Susannah C., Abraham, Elizabeth, Betsey (died young), Abigail B., Mary, and Meribah, all born on the old Fogg homestead, and all are now (1882) dead except Mary and Meribah. Mr. Fogg was a farmer, as all his ancestors had been. In politics a Democrat. He died April 8, 1831, aged sixty-two, and his wife died April 23, 1809, aged thirty-five.

ABRAHAM FOGG, only son of John and Abigail (Blake) Fogg, was born in Hampton, N. H., Aug. 6, 1797; married Mary Robinson, Nov. 1, 1821. Children,—Jeremiah R., a resident at Salisbury, Mass.; Mary A., wife of Robert C. Thomson, of Exeter; John H.; Rebecca F. (Mrs. J. Warren Sanborn, of Kingston, N. H.); Susan E. (deceased); and Sarah J., who died at twenty-one. Mrs. Fogg was a member of the Congregational Church of Hampton. Mr. Fogg was a Democrat, and held all the important offices of his town. He was universally esteemed for his kind disposition and sympathizing heart. "None knew him but to love him." He lived respected, and died regretted, March 27, 1869, and his wife died May 29, 1877, aged seventy-nine years.

JOHN H. FOGG, seventh in descent from Samuel, was born on the old Fogg homestead in Hampton, N. H., July 1, 1828. He received a common-school education. He is a farmer by occupation, gaining the title by inheritance, possession, and lifelong service under it. His present beautiful farm has been in the family for seven generations. He justly regards it the best and dearest spot on earth to him, and right well has Mr. Fogg honored the name of his ancestors by word and deed.

Mr. Fogg has inherited the political proclivities of his ancestors, hence is a Jeffersonian-Jackson Democrat. Though the town is Republican, Mr. Fogg has been selectman five years, one of which he was chairman, besides holding various other town offices. In 1878 he was elected to the State Legislature by Democrats and Republicans, serving on the committee of "Bills of Second Reading." In 1880 he was the candidate of his party for the State senatorship, and though defeated ran ahead of his ticket. In 1880 he was elected one of the trustees of Hampton Academy, New Hampshire, which position he still retains.

He married Mary E., daughter of Samuel and Mehitabel (Pickering) Drake, Sept. 2, 1852. She was born in North Hampton, N. H., Jan. 9, 1832.

On the 2d of September, 1877, Mr. and Mrs. Fogg celebrated their "silver wedding," and more than one hundred of their friends and neighbors gathered in to pay their compliments to those whom they hold in the very highest regard. The home was gayly illuminated by Chinese lanterns, and presented a beautiful appearance. The tables were laden with the choicest viands, and were nicely decorated. The Rev. Mr. J. S. Batchelder read a poem appropriate to the occasion, and the gifts were numerous and excellent. The one most highly prized by Mr. and Mrs. Fogg is an elegant silver urn, the joint present of their neighbors.

Mr. and Mrs. Fogg are members of the Congregational Church of Hampton, and he is treasurer of the same.

JOSIAH H. BARKER.

Josiah H. Barker, son of Samuel Barker, was born in Hampton, N. H., April 16, 1810. His father was born in Ipswich, Mass., March 4, 1780, and died at his residence in Hampton, Feb. 27, 1873, aged nearly ninety-three years. He was a farmer and fisherman by occupation. He settled in Hampton when he was quite a young man; married Polly, daughter of Jethro Blake, a descendant of Jasper Blake, one of the early settlers of Hampton. Jasper had eleven children, the fourth of whom was John, the ancestor of all the Blakes of Hampton. Mr. and Mrs. Barker had children,—Betsey, Josiah H., Sarah (deceased), Eliza A., Samuel, Polly, Abby, and James, all born in Hampton, on the place now owned by Josiah H. Barker. Mrs. Barker died April 27, 1857. Mr. Barker was a Republican in politics. His son, Josiah H., received a common-school education. At eighteen he went to Boston to learn the carpenter and joiner's trade, and after serving an apprenticeship of three years with one Abel Baldwin, was immediately engaged by Jonas Fitch, of Boston, as his foreman at five dollars a day. Mr. Fitch was a large contractor and builder, and on Mr. Barker devolved the task of seeing to the details of the business. He was in the employ of Mr. Fitch twenty-five years, at five dollars a day. For the next ten years he received ten dollars a day as general overseer in the building of large and costly houses in Massachusetts, Vermont, and New York. During this time he owned a shop in Boston, which was worth some fifteen hundred dollars a year net. In October, 1871, he was taken sick, and was not able to be out of the house till the following spring. Oct. 17, 1834, he married Adeline, daughter of Capt. James and Theodate Godfrey, both of whom were descendants of Deacon William Godfrey, who was admitted a freeman at Watertown, Mass., in 1640, and thence to Hampton, N. H., between 1645 and 1650. Mrs. Barker was born Dec. 7, 1812, in Hampton, and is a twin to Jonathan Godfrey, now of Hampton, who is the father of fourteen living children.

Mr. and Mrs. Barker have children,—Theodate (deceased) and Anna T., born July 9, 1840. She married R. H. Shelton, a native of Boston, and at present a resident of Worcester, Mass., where he is engaged as secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. Their children are Emma D. and Richard B.

Mr. Barker left Boston for Melrose, Mass., about 1840 or 1841, and remained there till April, 1872, when he returned to his native town and purchased the old place where he now resides. Since his settlement in Hampton he has not been engaged in business. In politics a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Barker have been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1834. He has held all the important offices of the church, such as steward, class-leader, trustee, superintendent of the Sabbath-school, etc. He has always been liberal to the church and charitable to the poor. As a citizen and neighbor he stands deservedly high. He is a man of sound judgment and well-defined views. Few were his equal in his chosen business through life.

THE MARSTON FAMILY.

The Marston family is very numerous in New Hampshire. The first of the name of whom we know was one Thomas Marston, who was at Salem, Mass., in 1637, and was among the married men who settled in Hampton in 1638. He was prominent in all town matters, and held all the offices of the town worthy of mention. His wife was Mary, daughter of William Easton. Their children were Isaac, Bertha, Ephraim, James, Caleb, Mary, and Sarah. He died Sept. 28, 1690.

William Marston was in Salem in 1637, and settled in Hampton in 1639, or the second summer of its settlement. It seems from the records that he too was active in town affairs. He died June 30, 1672. His wife was Sabina —, and their children were Thomas, William, John, and Frénia.

Robert Marston came from Salem to Hampton in 1640.

David Marston was a descendant of one of the above, and was born in Hampton, N. H., Dec. 29, 1797; married Sarah A., daughter of Simon N. Dearborn (see Dearborn history, Hampton), April 23, 1832.

She was born Aug. 23, 1807. Their children are Augusta M. (deceased), wife of Langdon Brown, of Rye. Left a son, George H.

(2) Caleb G., born Oct. 17, 1835; married Vianna Palmer, and has a daughter, Annie May.

(3) Lovinia M. (Mrs. Ambrose Swasey, of Cleveland, Ohio).

(4) Melborn, born March 23, 1845; was a soldier in Company D, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and was killed at the battle of Shenandoah Valley, Sept. 19, 1861.

David Marston was a Republican in politics, was selectman, and represented his town in the Legislature.

He was a farmer by occupation, and a mason by trade. He and wife always attended the Congregational Church in Hampton. He died July 11, 1860.

His father was Elisha Smith Marston, a son of Elisha, born Jan. 29, 1750, in Hampton. Married Judith Morrill, and had seven sons and one daughter. He died in April, 1832.

Josiah Marston, son of Josiah, was born in Hampton in 1794; was twice married, first to Hannah Drew, and had three children, two of whom are living,—Mary A., who married Capt. Joseph Marden (deceased), of Portsmouth, and Hannah, wife of Samuel P. Garland (deceased), of Rye.

Mr. Marston's second wife was Mary Ann, daughter of Joseph Freese Dearborn (see Dearborn history), April 6, 1852. She was born Dec. 15, 1800. Mr. Marston was a school-teacher in his early life, and for a while after his first marriage, but later became a farmer in Portsmouth, near where Mr. Winchester now resides, and where his first wife died. He was a Whig and Republican in politics.

His widow is living with her niece (Mrs. David Marston), and is now in her eighty-second year. In her youth she received an academic education at the Hampton Academy. She is a member of the Congregational Church of Hampton.

THE BACHELDER FAMILY.

Rev. Stephen Bachiler (as the name was formerly spelled) was born in England in 1561, and received orders in the Established Church; but being displeased with some of the ceremonies of the church, and refusing to conform to it, was refused permission to perform them. He went to Holland in company with his family, where he remained several years, and then returned to London, from which place he sailed on the 9th of March, 1632, in the "William and Francis." Mr. Thomas was master, with sixty passengers on board. Mr. Bachiler and family arrived at Boston June 5, 1632, having been eighty-eight days on the way. He immediately settled with his family at Lynn, Mass., where he organized a church composed partly of six persons who had left the Established Church of England when he did. A difficulty arising in the church, Mr. Bachiler requested dismissal for himself and the original six members, which was granted. He was admitted a freeman May 6, 1635, and removed from Lynn in February, 1636, and went to Ipswich, Mass. In the winter of 1636-37, being then some seventy-six years of age, he made a journey on foot with some friends to Matakeese (now Yarmouth), a distance of one hundred miles, where he intended to plant a church, but finally gave up the idea and returned to Ipswich. On the 6th of July, 1638, we find him at Newbury, where he received grants of land. On the 6th of September, 1638, the General Court of Massachusetts granted him permission to commence a settlement at Winnacunnet (now Hampton). In 1639 the inhabitants of Ipswich were very desirous that he should be their minister, but on the 5th of July of the same year he sold his interest there and settled in Hampton, N. H., when a town was begun and a church gathered, of which he was its first pastor. He became a large land-owner, and, as appears from the records, presented the first bell to the society in Hampton as early as 1640. He was considered a man of good judgment and upright in character, but in due time got into some trouble, which caused a dissension in the church, and it was thought advisable for him to leave, which he did April 20, 1647, when he went to Portsmouth, where he remained three years. In 1650 he married his third wife, being in his ninetieth year. In May he was fined ten pounds for not publishing his marriage, but in October following half of his fine was remitted.

In a few years he went back to England, where he married his fourth wife, while his third was still living in Portsmouth. He died at Harkney, in England, in 1660, aged about one hundred years. Notwithstanding his errors and follies, he had undoubtedly many virtues, or he would not have had so many friends, and they would not have continued with him through every change of his fortune. His descendants are numerous. He had seven children, Theodata, Deborah, Nathaniel, Francis, Stephen, and another son and daughter.

Nathaniel Bachiler, son of Rev. Stephen Bachiler, was one of the leading men in the town for a long period. He had a good education, wealth, and a large family connection, and exerted a controlling influence in the town. He was opposed to Capt. John Mason, and first on the list to head "Weare's Petition." He held all the offices of the town, and was representative in 1694. His first wife was Deborah Smith, by whom he had nine children, viz.: Deborah, Nathaniel, Ruth, Esther, Abigail, Jane, Stephen, Benjamin, and Stephen (2d). His wife died March 8, 1676, and he married for his second wife Widow Mary Wyman, by whom he had eight children, viz.: Mercy, Mary, Samuel, Jonathan, Thomas, Theodata, Joseph, and Mary (2d). His second wife died in 1688, and he married again Elizabeth ———. He died between 1707 and 1710.

Levi Batchelder, son of Nathaniel, born Aug. 14, 1765, married Deborah Ward, and had two sons, Samuel and Cotton, who died at thirty. Levi Batchelder was a tailor by trade. He died Aug. 26, 1822. His wife died Nov. 10, 1849, aged seventy-one years and ten months.

Samuel, son of Levi Batchelder, was born in Hampton, N. H., Feb. 19, 1786, and died at his residence, Dec. 12, 1863, aged seventy-seven years and ten months. His advantages for an education were limited, but his thirst for knowledge caused him to surmount every difficulty, and he obtained a good business education. He was a good farmer. He married Sarah Dearborn, daughter of Joseph F. Dearborn (see Dearborn history), Jan. 31, 1810. She was born Feb. 16, 1790, in Hampton, on the old Dearborn place. Her mother was Mary Nudd, daughter of Simon Nudd.

Children of Samuel Batchelder and Sarah, his wife, were: (1) Dearborn; (2) Alfred C., who died at twenty-six, unmarried; (3) Thomas W., died at twenty-nine, unmarried; (4) Deborah A., died at eighteen; (5) Mary Ann, born March 15, 1822; (6) Sandborn, died at fourteen; and (7) Sarah F., died at thirty-four.

Dearborn, the eldest of this family, was born July 24, 1810; was twice married, first, to Mary Jenness, daughter of Thomas Jenness, in 1833, by whom four children were born, of whom one, Fidelia F., is living. Mr. Batchelder's second wife was Abby O., sister to his first wife. They were married in 1841. Of this union seven children were born, viz., Dorianda A., Sarah M., Susan E. (deceased at ten), Samuel D., George H., Charles J. (deceased), and Frank P. Dearborn Batchelder was a foundryman by occupation. He died Oct. 30, 1863.

Samuel Batchelder was a Whig and Republican in politics, and held the various town offices. He was a member of the Congregational Church, and was always liberal towards all benevolent enterprises. As was said by the minister at his funeral, he was one of "nature's noblemen." His wife died June 24, 1846, aged fifty-six years. At his death the old home was left to his daughter, Mary Ann, who is now in her sixtieth year, and is one of the intelligent ladies of the town. This Batchelder family has descended from Lieut. Cotton Ward to his daughter Deborah, thence to her son Samuel, thence to Mary Ann, who has taken a deep interest in the welfare of her parents' descendants, and has contributed no small sum towards the proper education of her nephews and nieces. She is a member of the Congregational Church.

Charles Joseph Batchelder, son of Dearborn, was born March 27, 1858. He received an academic education, and one year at the State Agricultural College at Hanover, N. H. He was intelligent, and quick to learn, but ere he had reached his majority was killed at Silver City, N. M., by the Indians, while driving an express-wagon for the government, Oct. 15, 1878.
